The filibuster—always a source of embarrassment to Senate leaders—already has started.

But late last night two pro-FEPC leaders—Sen. Dennis Chavez (D., N. M.) and Sen. James M. Mead (D., N. Y.)—refused in a private conference to compromise on legislation extending FEPC for a year.

Both men are expected today to insist that other liberals who support FEPC take an active part in the fight to save the agency which outlaws job discrimination in war time.

Same Old Stuff

The strong-lunged Southerners who have no fear of exposing the Senate to public ridicule are threatening to talk forever, regardless of the vital appropriations bills which must be passed before July 1, and irrespective of the historic peace document which President Truman presents to the Senate on Monday.

Seldom have the Southerners failed in their efforts to throttle legislation by the simple expedient of filibustering when a Senate vacation or a vital bill calls for speedy action. But they did last year on this same FEPC issue—and they may again.

A filibuster exposes the Senate to ridicule. So the Southerners usually win. But the shadowy compromises they extort from their opponents are usually consummated in the backrooms of the Capitol.

Yesterday the compromise on FEPC was hauled into public view where its merits could be examined.

McKellar's Plan

Chairman Kenneth D. McKellar (D., Tenn.) of the Senate Appropriations Committee did the hauling. Although his sympathies are with the Southerners, McKellar, president pro-tem of the Senate, is uncomfortable about the filibuster.

He is responsible for getting the $771,000,000 War Agencies Bill, to which the FEPC issue is attached, through the Senate this week.

He is the author of the FEPC compromise which he proposed primarily to prove, as he said, that he is "a peacemaker who has taken quite a mauling."

McKellar's "compromise" would cut FEPC's appropriation to $250,000 and direct the agency to spend the money within six months.

McKellar's prayerful pleas for both sides to arrive at an agreement were not taken too seriously. They provoked considerable laughter on the floor when Sen. Theodore Bilbo (D., Miss.), who led the filibuster, bluntly disclosed that McKellar had assured him FEPC would be liquidated after Jan. 1.

McKellar had previously boasted to the Senate that the compromise "contained not a word about liquidation"—that it was merely a peace offer to please all sides and give FEPC enough money for six months instead of a year.

"I agreed to the compromise," Bilbo bellowed, "on grounds that it means FEPC will be liquidated—otherwise it just gets six months to fatten."

The Senate roared. McKellar, somewhat embarrassed, giggled.

Call for Prayer

Sen. Chavez broke in to declare that the War Agencies Bill "could be passed in three minutes if the opposition will agree to continue FEPC for a year," even with the reduced funds.

McKellar finally sent Bilbo and Chavez home and asked them to pray. He requested a recess and the Senate concurred in his request.

At a meeting following the adjournment Chavez and Bilbo failed to come to any agreement. Another meeting is scheduled before the opening of the Senate at noon today.

If and when the FEPC gets to a vote, it will require a majority of two-thirds of the Senate to approve because of the tangled parliamentary situation.

Supporters of FEPC claim they have a slim margin, but the Southerners are counting on the inevitable absentees to put them in the lead.

Hymn of Hate

Bilbo insisted throughout a three-and-a-half hour tirade that he was just "talking"—that the filibuster would really start when a vote on the FEPC becomes more imminent. Surrounded by an eager little group of poll-tax Senators from the South, he subjected the Senate and the gallery listeners to an unbroken chant on race hate and white supremacy.

Some typical observations:

"All that has been done at San Francisco is null and void. We are headed for another war which is going to be a race war."

"The sale of Black Boy by Richard Wright should be stopped. It is a damnable lie from beginning to end. His aim to plant the seed of hate against the white men of the South."

Bilbo commenced to read his mail to the Senate. Most of the letters bore out the views of one man who after berating the Negroes and Jews declared "what we need is a million more like Sen. Bilbo."

With McKellar's consent, Bilbo has been assured that no legislation will take away his right to continue talking today. He told McKellar he'd be glad to let Sen. Tom Connally (D., Tex.) speak briefly on the San Francisco Conference—on the condition that Connally hands the floor back to Bilbo.

FEPC Called Vital To Minority Rights

The Federal Fair Employment Practices Committee is the "only sign of industrial democracy that America ever has seen," Harold A. Lett of the New Jersey Urban League said at the annual meeting of the Hartford Negro City Council at St. Monica's Church Thursday.

"If the Senate, on June 30, refuses to appropriate funds for its continuance, the props of industrial democracy will be pulled out from under not only Negroes, but all minority groups in this country," he added.

The speaker said the two primary rights for which the Negro will have to struggle in the post-war period are unemployment and housing.

Officers elected at the meeting are: President, the Rev. R. A. Moody; vicepresident, Daniel Fletcher; secretary, Anna Langdon; treasurer, Mrs. R. A. Lawson.

F. E. P. C. Saved By 188 to 116 Vote

The Worker Washington Bureau — The Worker

FEPC was saved by the decisive vote of 188 to 116 in the House this week after one of the most stubborn struggles in the history of Congress. With ratification of the action by a House-Senate Conference Committee taken for granted, the non-discrimination committee can plan its work to protect Negroes, Jewish people, Mexican-Americans and other minorities in the year that's ahead.

The victory is a tribute to the determination of the trade unionists, the Negro people and the many millions of foes of un-American discrimination in many walks of life who backed the Fair Employment Practices Committee.

And it is also an inspiring example of the results that can be won by skillful and courageous parliamentary leaders like Representative Vito Marcantonio (ALP-NY), who worked out the answers to the tricks of the bloc of Southern polltaxers and Northern reactionaries in both parties, who tried to prevent the measure from coming to a house vote.

Red-baiting failed the anti-FEPC crowd completely when the showdown came on the floor.

The decisive 188 to 116 vote took place against an amendment by Rep. William M. Colmer (D-Miss) to strike out a clause in the FEPC amendment to the war agencies bill which permitted the wartime FEPC to use the $250,000 appropriation for work "until" Congress established a permanent anti-discrimination agency.

This "until" clause, which the committee had put in this week under pressure from the FEPC forces inside and outside of Congress cancelled out an earlier insertion by the committee, which said that the appropriation was to be used to "liquidate" the agency.

Colmer: Eugene Cox (D-Ga); Hatton Summers (D-Tex); John E. Rankin (D-Miss) and other enemies of the FEPC cried that FEPC was a "Communistic" device to overthrow the government, as they argued for the amendment.

Marcantonio himself was the special object of their attack.

Fritz G. Lanham (D-Tex), even took the time to read half of the day's Daily Worker's story of the FEPC to show that Communists were backing the appropriation.

Marcantonio replied sharply to the polltaxers cry that FEPC was subversive:

"The genesis of FEPC is in the Declaration of Independence, which says that all men are created equal," he told the house. "That means the Negro people of Texas and elsewhere."

Then flinging the cry of "subversive" back in the faces of FEPC's foes he concluded: "To deny equality is not only subversive, it is practicing Hitlerism in America."

The Republican floor leader, Joe Martin of Massachusetts, played a sorry role in the FEPC fight. Though he had exploited the sabotage of a section of the Democratic Party against FEPC in a statement this week, he didn't take steps to get his followers on the floor when the vote was taken. The Republican attendance was rather thin today. Most voted for the agency, however, when its success was assured.

FEPC still has severe difficulties, however, the $250,000 fund represents an approximately 50 percent cut.

Struggles will be necessary for more funds to supplement this skimpy financial ration, if the committee is to do a real job in the reconversion time coming.

20,000 at Rally Hear Demands to Save FEPC

Malcolm Ross, Chairman of the Fair Employment Practices Committee, converses with Rep. Adam Clayton Powell.

More than 20,000 persons jammed Madison Square Garden last night for the third annual Negro Freedom Rally to hear speakers discuss the Federal Fair Employment Practices Committee and its relation to Negroes. This is what some of them said:

Malcolm Ross, Chairman of the FEPC: "Here's the $64 question: will we continue in the change-over period to make good just as democratically as we did during the two-front war against Germany and Japan? We of the Fair Employment Practice Committee . . . know that it requires patience, persuasion, and most of all, a strong determination to overcome race prejudice. But we also know that it can be done. We have seen thousands of Negroes making airplanes in a plant which at first said 'impossible.' . . . In its attempt to uphold the accepted national policy of equal job opportunity, the FEPC has raised up powerful enemies. The fight to establish this right has become more than an attack on a little group of Government people. It has widened to include all the people of these United States."

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D., N. Y.): "We Negroes will not compromise or retreat. We are not neutral, we will not mark time, we are going forward—now . . .

"If FEPC has not been passed when this war ends, I say that in the first week thereafter in Detroit, Los Angeles, Chicago, New York—wherever Negroes are concentrated—Negro people with their white allies should again take to the streets and picket and fight for their rights . . ."

Charles Collins, executive secretary of the Negro Labor Victory Committee: "The gangup on the FEPC in Washington is most undisguised fascist double-dealing to date. Even before the bodies of Negroes who gave their lives fighting against fascism have had a chance to be buried, and even before the guns have ceased firing, America's fascists are planning to deny returning Negro veterans and others the right to a job."

Councilman Benjamin J. Davis, Jr. (Com., Man.): "We have made gains as Negroes during the war, but we are not satisfied. We shall not rest until we achieve full, unconditional American citizenship. We want appropriations for the temporary FEPC and we want a permanent FEPC to stay with us forever. We have destroyed Hitler—we must destroy Hitlerism."

Johannes Steel: "The thing that strikes you when you are in Europe is the fact that if the rights of man have been assaulted as never before, it is also true that more people than ever before rose to defend them."

Ferdinand Smith, secretary of the National Maritime Union, CIO: "We are witnessing an open and reactionary drive to hack Roosevelt's policy to pieces. In and out

FEPC FUND EXPIRES IN ACT DELAY

Financial Transfusion Sought By Backers, Despite Deadlock

SOUTHERNERS KILL HOUSE SUPPLY BILL

7-2-45

Breathing Spell Allowed Other War Agencies, Including OWI

BY WILLIAM F. ARBOGAST

WASHINGTON, July 1—(AP)—The Fair Employment Practice Committee was moneyless and moribund today as its backers sought to bypass the House rules committee and get a financial transfusion for it.

Technically the agency created by the late President Roosevelt and supported by President Truman died financially last midnight when its 1945 fiscal years appropriation ran out.

A last-minute compromise broke a four-day Senate fight over FEPC with an agreement on $250,000 for the year starting today. But that deal hit a stone wall of Southern opposition last night in the House.

So determined were the Southerners that FEPC not be kept alive that their objections blocked final congressional action on a big supply bill financing a score of civilian war agencies.

Other Agencies To Get Break

But all the other agencies, including OWI, were given a breathing spell by a provision in a separate bill authorizing them to spend in anticipation of funos carried by the stalemated war agencies measure.

Two courses lie ahead for the FEPC's backers: They may persuade the rules committee to send the deadlocked measure to the House for a decision, or they may put the heat on the appropriations committee to recommend House acceptance of the Senate compromise.

In no other way can FEPC be voted on by the House so long as a single member objects or 218 members refuse to sign a discharge petition, unless the rules are suspended by a two-thirds vote.

Twice within recent weeks the rules committee has refused to clear FEPC legislation for floor action. And there were no indications that a meeting called for tomorrow would break the deadlock there.

Groups Support In Doubt

It is a toss-up whether, assuming a rules committee rebuff, FEPC backers can persuade the appropriations committee to support them. The committee originally refused to put any FEPC funds into the war agencies measure and later, after a controversy, reluctantly recommended a $125,000 fund specifically to liquidate the agency. The rules group nullified even that action.

Any recommendation of the appropriations committee with respect to the Senate-voted funds will be subject to House debate, and Southern Democrats are ready to debate forever if they can. However, the House rules filibusters, and a majority vote could restrict discussion.

Never before has the FEPC, always a congressional "hot potato," brewed up such a controversy as it has this year. Its backers claim it is necessary to prevent employment discrimination because of race, creed or color. Its opponents contend it would accomplish the opposite result and lead to discrimination against white people in some sections.

Is This a Democracy?

Courier-Journal

To the Editor of The Courier-Journal.

Your editorial July 3, "A Cowardly Injustice to Negro Soldiers," was most timely, encouraging and thought-provoking. I wish hereby to express appreciation for your concern for the proper treatment of all citizens, regardless of race or creed. Your editorials always seem to be on the side of justice for all. On behalf of this principle I earnestly serve in the ranks.

But when I think of the cheapness, smallness and selfishness on the part of some of our Senators and Representatives, who disgrace our national legislature with seeming impunity, I am constrained to doubt their sincerity. I am forced to ask for a restatement of the objectives for which we struggle. I am nauseated when I hear of the verbiage, in Congress mind you, of men like Senators Eastman and Bilbo and Representative Colmer.

Were some of our legislators and executives to earn their ribbons on battlefields and battleships, along with G. I. Joe, perhaps they would thereby understand the meaning of that cherished American principle—democracy. For a Senator to sabotage, by filibustering or using other means of subterfuge, the principles for which we struggle so dearly, seems indeed most contemptible.

Oh, well, in political science there is an axiom which states that a people gets just about the type of government it deserves. If that be true it behooves us all, black and white, Northern and Southern, service man and civilian alike, to bestir ourselves to see that democratic processes are not hampered. At the next election a lot of housecleaning should be in order—that is, if this is truly the land of the free and the home of the brave.

We do need F.E.P.C. We need anti-poll tax legislation. Or is this a democracy?

FEPC Deadlock Expected End

Solution Sought by Congressional Leaders

18 AGENCIES TIED UP

Increased Support Feared by Dixieites

WASHINGTON

The FEPC was conceded a strong chance for survival this week following week-end meetings of Congressional leaders aimed at solution of the stalemate which has tied up the funds of 18 war agencies.

Leaders of both parties who participated in the informal discussions of the House-Senate deadlock included:

Senators Alben Barkley of Kentucky, majority leader; Lister Hill of Alabama, majority whip; Wallace White of Maine, minority leader, and Kenneth McKeller (Dem., Tennessee), Appropriations Committee chairman.

Reps. Sam Rayburn of Texas, speaker; John McCormack of Massachusetts, majority leader; Joseph W. Martin of Massachusetts, minority leader, and Clarence Cannon (Dem., Miss.), appropriations chairman.

7-14-45

Senate Action Opposed

The present sitaution is the result of the House Rules Committee's refusal to give the green light to the Senate-passed War Agencies Appropriation Bill which allotted $250,000 to the FEPC.

The Senate compromise was agreed upon after a vicious filibuster, led by Senators Bilbo and Eastland was broken as a result of a motion to invoke cloture, offered by Sen. Robert Taft of Ohio. Instead the House Appropriations Committee rewrote and reported a new war agencies bill from which the FEPC funds had again been eliminated.

Senator Taft

Supporters Counterattack

House supporters of the FEPC, headed by Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP, N.Y.), immediately countered with points of order which other war agencies from the measure, which was then passed and resulted in the elimination of 10 sent to the Senate.

REP. VITO MARCANTONIO

The Senate Appropriations Committee in its turn deferred action on the emasculated bill pending the outcome of the week-end conferences between the leaders of both houses.

7-14-45

Sen. Dennis Chavez (Dem., N. Mex.), leader of the Senate fight for FEPC funds, declared earlier that he would insist that the full $599,000 requested by FEPC be restored in the event that the crippled bill comes to the floor of the Senate.

Compromise Preferred

While the results of the conference have not been made public, FEPC supporters predicted that the Southern Representatives, would end the stalemate by permitting enactment of the orginal Senate "compromise" measure.

Their reason, it is said, is fear that a prolonged deadlock might force a vote on the bill setting up a permanent FEPC with full enforcement powers already approved by the House Labor Committee.

Moreover, 130 of the 218 signatures needed to discharge the bill have been procured and many feel that a nation-wide drive during continued delay might push the petition through as one has pushed the antilynch tax bill.

They based this conclusion upon the following and other factors:

Salaries May Be Withheld

1. Unless the $752,000,000 war agencies supply bill is passed by July 21, the next government pay day, hundreds of thousands of workers in the affected agencies wil go payless since the Treasury Department has announced that it has no authority to advance funds for salary payments.

2. Many of the Southerners are convinced that failure to appropriate funds for the present temporary FEPC will result in added Congressional support and public pressure for the enactment of pending permanent FEPC legislation.

3. The determination shown by FEPC supporters has made it quite apparent that the House will have to remain in session throughout the summer or at least until there is a vote on granting FEPC funds.

House Unit Asks $250,000 FEPC Fund

By the Associated Press

The House Appropriations Committee about-faced yesterday and recommended a $250,000 fund for continued and unrestricted operation of the Fair Employment Practice Committee.

It did so at an afternoon session less than three hours after it had voted FEPC $250,000 to liquidate.

The latest action left both sides in the six-weeks' fight over FEPC somewhat bewildered, and assured a record House vote today that may jar loose the 752 million dollar national war agencies supply bill that has been riding a parliamentary merry-go-round since June 1.

The deadlock has tied up funds for 16 home-front war agencies. All are operating now under special legislation allowing them to incur obligations but spend no actual money.

Marcantonio Is Pleased

The joy of Southern foes of FEPC over the committee's morning action quickly died down after the afternoon results were announced. Conversely, backers of FEPC who condemned the morning proceedings finished the day praising them.

"This is just what we wanted," commented Representative Marcantonio (Armn. Lab., N. Y.) after the final session. "No amendment is necessary now. We have the votes to give effect to the committee's recommendation."

Only a few hours earlier, Marcantonio assailed the committee action as "no compromise at all" and announced he would seek to amend it.

The burden of carrying an amendment now rests with FEPC's opponents. They indicated they would seek to eliminate the Appropriations Committee's final recommendation that the $250,000 fund be made available for normal FEPC functions until such time as Congress enacts specific legislation dealing with that agency. A measure to create a permanent FEPC is pending. Authorization for the present agency, created by executive order by President Roosevelt, expired June 30.

Get Quick Opinion

The wording of the recommendation approved yesterday morning was confusing to some committee members, who sought a quick opinion from the comptroller general. On the basis of that opinion the committee held a second meeting and made it clear that, although the fund was intended "for completely liquidating" the FEPC, it could be used for normal operations until the agency "is continued by an act of Congress."

The $250,000 recommended is the same amount voted by the Senate last month and is less than half the $599,000 in the FEPC's budget estimates for the fiscal year that started July 1. However, supporters of the agency said they were willing to accept the pared fund on the theory they later could obtain an additional allotment in a deficiency bill.

Senate Approves Funds For FEPC for One Year

Richmond Times Dispatch

WASHINGTON, July 12.—(UP)—The Senate tonight by voice vote concurred in a House amendment to give the Fair Employment Practices Committee a fund of $250,000 for one year.

The vote came unexpectedly as Senator Wayne Morse (R-Oreg.) concluded a speech in favor of the FEPC after announcing he was "prepared to speak at length" in an effort to delay the vote until Monday. 7-13-45

There were only about 16 Senators present when the vote was taken.

"Pappy" Tells NAACP He Would Abolish FEPC

The Informer

HOUSTON — "I am in favor of abolishing the whole organization," W. Lee O'Daniel, Texas senator, wrote in answer to a written request for his support in making permanent the Fair Employment Practices Committee.

The request was made by the local Branch of the NAACP, the Rev. A. A. Lucas, president. According to Mrs. White, Mr. O'Daniels' answer was addressed to "Mrs. Lulu White" and the inside greeting was "Madam." 7-14-45

The entire letter follows: "I am in receipt of a communication from yourself and Rev. A. A. Lucas in reference to the Committee on Fair Employment Practices.

"I am unable to see where such a committee is necessary in this nation.

"It not only stirs up strife, and foments hatreds between people of different races and colors, but it incites bitter animosities between people of the same races and colors.

"I am in favor of abolishing the entire organization."

Mrs. White says the letter was signed "W. Lee O'Daniel, United States Senator, Texas." 7-14

Senator Wagner Defends Negro Soldiers' Role

Richmond Times Dispatch

WASHINGTON, July 12—(AP)—Senator Wagner (D-N. Y.) today came to the defense of the Negro soldiers. 7-13-45

Attributing to Senator Eastland (D-Miss.) a statement that "Negro soldiers are no good," Wagner suggested in a Senate speech that Eastland should have consulted the War Department.

He said Eastland made this statement during a recent speech on the FEPC appropriation.

Wagner said Under-Secretary of War Patterson told him Eastland's statement did not represent the views of the general staff. He quoted General Eisenhower as saying that the Negro soldier had "made a valuable contribution," in the European area and quoted General Ira Eaker as saying that the Negro fighter pilots "have done well."

For Continuing the FEPC

Editor of The Times-Dispatch:

I have just reread your editorial of July 1 on "Misrepresenting the South." I think it is a fine article and expresses the belief of many other Southern boys, like myself, who have served and fought side by side with the Negro troops. 7-14-45

In my opinion, the death of the FEPC would be a great mistake. I cannot see where any man can gain by the abolishment of this committee. It is an injustice not only to the many colored servicemen, but also to the others who have not served.

If these men feel they are better than a Negro serviceman and could do a better job, let them trade places with one for just a few days.

Did we not fight this war for the equality of race, creed and religion? If we did, then, for God's sake, why can't our senatorial leaders abide by the code by which so many of my buddies died?

FEPC IS VOTED $250,000 TO STAY IN OPERATION

Chicago Daily Tribune

Southerners Lose Out in House Fight

Washington, D. C., July 12 (AP)—The house voted $250,000 today for continued operation of the fair employment practices committee.

Southerners unsuccessfully sought to limit use of the money—which is less than half the budget estimate—to liquidation activities of the FEPC. But the house voted them down and tied no strings to the fund which may be used until next June.

The FEPC item was the major point of controversy in the $752,000,000 war agencies bill. Other allotments, including funds for the office of war information, were expected to be adjusted quickly by senate-house conferees before the measure is finally approved. The senate earlier had approved $250,000 for FEPC.

The house turned down, by a teller vote of 188 to 116, a southern-backed move to prevent the FEPC from using any of its new funds for normal operations and then moved toward a final vote on a compromise designed to break a deadlock holding up funds for sixteen war agencies.

The bill was expected to be passed by nightfall and sent to the White House tomorrow. Not until it is signed into law will 16 home front war agencies have money with which to operate.

All have been operating "on the cuff," so to speak, since the fiscal year started on July 1, and none can meet a payroll until the measure becomes law.

It sets up a commission similar to the one now operating under executive order, to receive and investigate complaints, to conduct full and fair hearings, and, finally, to issue a decision and order. . . . All-Time Low

Probably the most despicable thing ever done in public life was the filibuster staged in the U. S. senate this week by Sen. Theo—The Man—Bilbo of Mississippi, against the appropriation for the FEPC.

Of course, such a thing is to be expected from a man of Bilbo's stripe, but it is a sad commentary on the rest of the senate that this fomenter of race-hatred was allowed to continue his rantings and to delay passage of the war agencies' appropriation bill.

Even Sen. McKellar of Tennessee, who usually is one of the most ardent defenders of such anti-democratic practices as the poll-tax, was disgusted with Bilbo.

It was bad enough that Bilbo, who never had to face an electorate consisting of more than five or 10% of the people of his state, should be permitted to stand in the U. S. senate and rave against a bill designed to help any racial group.

But Bilbo reached a level that was even low for him, when he devoted part of his speech to an incredibly vile slur at the widow of Pros. Roosevelt.

On a par with, or perhaps even slightly lower than, Bilbo's excrescenses was the bigoted tirade uttered Friday by Mississippi's other senator, James O. Eastland, who continued the shameful filibuster when Bilbo ran out of breath.

In his part of the typically Nazi attack on the FEPC appropriation, Eastland charged that the Negro troops in the U. S. army were "utter and abysmal failures."

The Associated Press dispatch quoted Eastland as saying he had been told this by "high-ranking generals" in Europe. Whether they were German generals, it did not say.

However, a much more believable report came to us first-hand the day after Eastland's speech, from a Fairfield county GI who returned from Germany last week, and was discharged from the army with 115 points and a flock of ribbons and stars to prove he knew what he was talking about. Eastland's proof, if any, rests behind that all too-dubious and libel-proof "congressional immunity."

Eastland tried to tell the U. S. senate—but only a half-dozen members stayed there to listen to him—that the Negro troops "would neither work nor fight."

This Fairfield county soldier, who fought his way through France and Germany on a half-track and on foot, said he would refrain from calling Mississippi's junior senator a liar, but he pointed out that his life and the lives of his buddies were saved by the work of Negro tank destroyer troops, who went in ahead of his own outfit.

"One Negro alone, with a bazooka, wiped out five German tanks, one after the other," the soldier said, "and he saved a lot of lives.

"He got a bronze star for it, but if he had been a white soldier, he'd have gotten a much bigger decoration."

We think this eye-witness testimony from a soldier is much more valuable and much more easily believed than the filibuster-oratory of Sen. Eastland.—J. D.

Congress Ends Bitter Battle On FEPC Fund

House, Senate Agree On $250,000 For 12 Months Of Operation

WASHINGTON, July 12.—(AP)—The congressional fight over continuing the fair employment practice committee ended tonight with House and Senate agreement on a $250,000 appropriation to run it in the 12 months beginning July 1.

The legislators got together when the Senate accepted by voice vote House language which nullified a previous stipulation that the agency must use the funds to liquidate. 7-13-45

The $250,000 is just half what FEPC had asked.

Morse's Effort Futile

Senator Morse (R), Oregon, made a futile effort to defer a decision until Monday. He said he hoped that if this were done the people at home would make their sentiments known and a larger appropriation would be given the agency.

He launched into what he termed "extended discussion" — sometimes another name for filibuster—in an effort to force delay but gave up the floor after an hour and a half.

During his speech Morse stressed the theme that democracy is on trial in the world and that it will be judged in part on the way it treats minorities.

War Agencies Funds Delayed

By the time the FEPC fight was ended, the hour was so late that leaders delayed final action until tomorrow on a $750,000,000 war agencies appropriation bill which contains the FEPC item.

The House had been standing by, waiting for the Senate to act on FEPC, with expectation that the entire bill could be finally acted on. House leaders decided to let it go until tomorrow.

When Morse gave up the floor, Senator Bilbo (D), Mississippi, bitter foe of FEPC, threw a scare into Senate leaders by demanding a quorum call. There were 16 Senators on the floor at the time and no chance that a quorum could be mustered. 7-13-45

Bilbo, who recently filibustered against FEPC, said he thought a quorum should be present "because this is far-reaching legislation." 7-13-45

Bilbo Withdraws Request

Majority Leader Barkley, Kentucky, and Senator McKellar (D), Tennessee, handling the bill, rushed at Bilbo, arguing vehemently. The Mississippian then withdrew his request.

Principal item remaining in controversy in the big bill is the amount to be given the Office of War Information. The House voted to allow it only $18,000,000. The Senate boosted this to $39,000,000.

A conference committee from the two chambers agreed to compromise at $35,000,000. Their conference report will be submitted to the House tomorrow and if approved there will then go to the Senate.

Earlier in the day, the House had approved $250,000 for FEPC, the same amount the Senate agreed to when Bilbo dropped his filibuster.

The Senate did so, however, with language directing that FEPC must use the fund [illegible] liquidation. The House today changed this language in a manner which Senate Chavez (D), New Mexico, a champion of FEPC, interpreted as meaning the agency does not have to liquidate.

Bilbo Concedes Defeat

McKellar was trying to get Senate approval for this change when Morse launched his fight. Meantime, the House was standing by waiting for the Senate to act and return the bill for its dispatch by the House to a conference committee for compromise of other disputed figures.

In addition to the FEPC funds, the measure carries about $750,000,000 for other war agencies [illegible] put several items are in dispute between House and Senate.

Bilbo announced he would not oppose acceptance of the House's language as to FEPC.

"If I had a chance, if I had a remote chance, to defeat this appropriation I would speak until doomsday," he told the Senate [illegible] ing that he could not beat it. 7-13-45

Morse called the $250,000 an "insufficient fund which makes it certain FEPC can not do the job which should be done." The agency had asked $499,000.

Press for House Vote Tomorrow on FEPC Fund

Daily Worker

Daily Worker Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, July 10. — Congressional leaders in the drive to save FEPC are fighting to give the House the chance to vote on the non-discrimination agency this Thursday. 7-11-45

Chairman Clarence Cannon (D-Mo), of the House Appropriations Committee again delayed action on the Senate War Agencies bill, containing a $250,000 fund item for FEPC, which was to have been considered today. But Cannon has promised to take up the bill tomorrow.

If the committee reports out the bill tomorrow, with or without a favorable recommendation, it should reach the House floor Thursday under a 24-hour agreement made between the Democratic floor leader, John W. McCormack (D-Mass), and the FEPC forces.

A smashing victory is expected when the rollcall vote is taken if the Congressional delegations from New York, New Jersey, New England, Pennsylvania and other nearby states are at their desks.

Gallant Sen. Bilbo Replies To Women With Insults

Daily Worker

Senator Theodore Bilbo of Mississippi, the perfect model of a Southern gentleman, has replied to two letters criticizing his filibuster against the FEPC with outrageous insults against the letter writers, both of whom are American women.

Bilbo called one letter-writer, Miss Josephine Piccolo of 93 Garfield Place. Brooklyn, N. Y. "My dear 'Dago'," and urged her to "keep your dirty proboscis" out of the affairs of the "dear old state of Mississippi."

Another reply—also in the best traditions of the Bourbon South's attitude toward womanhood — was addressed to Miss Josephine Timms, international secretary treasurer of the American Communications Association, CIO. 7-7-45

SOUTHERN HOSPITALITY

Here also Bilbo urged Miss Timms, who had protested the shameful filibuster against the Fair Employment Practices Commission to "please keep your proboscis out of the life and ways of living in the State of Mississippi."

The Daily Worker has copies of both letters. One of them, addressed to Miss Piccolo, is reproduced in the adjoining column.

"What in the h . . . are you griping out about," says the distinguished senator, after the insulting greeting of "Dear Dago."

"You live in New York and today the most vicious FEPC bill ever passed by a lawmaking body goes into effect . . ." a reference to the State FEPC which was inaugurated on July 1st.

. . . "But the question of passing a Federal law and imposing this damnable, un-American, unconstitutional, communistic legislative monstrosity upon the other forty-seven states by an Act of Congress is an entirely different proposition."

ADMITS HE'S "LIBERAL"

In the letter to Miss Timms, Bilbo has the brass to call himself a "liberal," and then says: "your letter indicates that your mind has been poisoned by a lot of rot appearing in PM, the Daily Worker, and other pink, off-brand, and un-American publications in New York City." 7-7-45

Bilbo then adds: "I suggest that you read the Constitution of the United States."

OK—let's read the Constitution of the United States to Bilbo—such as amendment 14 which says that "no state . . . (shall) deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. . . .

Or amendment 15 which says that "the right of the citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

Where would Bilbo be if these laws were enforced?

My dear "Dago":-

(If I am mistaken in this please correct me.)

Your letter of June 28 has been received and I have read it with interest and surprise. What in the H--- are you griping about? You live in New York and today the most vicious FEPC bill ever passed by a lawmaking body goes into effect, so you have the FEPC for the State of New York.

If you like it and want it, then you have my permission to have it and to keep it, but the question of passing a Federal law and imposing this damnable, un-American, unconstitutional communistic legislative monstrosity upon the other forty-seven States by an act of Congress is an entirely different proposition.

So will you, please, keep your dirty proboscis out of the other forty-seven states, especially the dear old State of Mississippi? It is to this State that I am directing my efforts and I have no one to account to except the people of Mississippi. And while passing, let me assure you that from 99 to 100 per cent of the people of my State are bitterly and uncompromisingly against this fool, communistic concept of Government. It would destroy the freedom of the people and it certainly is a violation of the American way of life, for which we are fighting a world war today.

Watch the results of the enforcement of Governor Dewey's FEPC and weep.

Yours truly,

Tho. G. Bilbo

Can He Tell By The Moan of Pain?

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Editor, Daily Worker:

Can Filibuster Bilbo tell the difference between a moan of pain from a bleeding GI's throat of a white skin or black skin?

Can Filibuster Bilbo tell the difference between the smell of blood pouring from a gaping hole in the belly of a GI of white or black skin? Daily Worker

His "Honor" doesn't care if it is the moan from a Negro's throat.

His "Honor" doesn't care if it is the blood of a Negro.

His "Honor' just simply hates the Negro—that is the answer.

His "Honor's" dictionary doesn't have the word freedom in it.

His "Honor," by his action, shows he doesn't intend to carry out the pleadings of the Bible to do unto others as you would have others do unto you "or love they neighbor." 7-7-45

I pray "His Honor" fails in his task of beating down the Negro, because if it works once then you can bet other minorities will be next in line for a beating.

500 Stage FEPC March On Capital

Washington Tribune

Five hundred Negro and white citizens staged a march of protest against the southern reactionary element of Congress, who are blocking the FEPC appropriation, Thursday morning. 7-7-45

The group led by Bob Sherwood, an official in the United Federal Workers of America, was given the grand run-around by the legislators,. Majority Leader John W. McCormack (Dem.) of Massachusetts couldn't be located, while Republican Minority Leader Joseph D. Martin of Massachusetts refused to see a delegation.

However, in spite of the congressional rebuff, to that delegation, FEPC's chances glowed more brightly on Thursday afternoon because Vito Marcantonio, New York congressman, wrote all of the other war agencies from the war agencies appropriation, thus paving the way for the Senate to restore the FEPC bill, when it considers the House appropriations.

FEPC had been written out of the war agencies bill by the House Appropriations Committee last Saturday.

Rankin Objects

The war agency appropriation, as presented to the House on Thursday, saw 10 war agencies, that come under the executive order sliced, by three proponents of the continuance of FEPC legislation.

They were headed by the fiery American Labor Party congressman representing the people of Harlem, Vito Marcantonio.

Marcantonio rose to strike the agencies from the appropriations list on the grounds that any member of congress may report out any expenditures not authorized by Congress.

Rankin attempted to protest, but chairman Cannon upheld Marcantonio. Norton, Democrat of New Jersey and Cellar, Democrat of New York, all joined Marcantonio in reading out the agencies from the appropriations bill which was sent to the Senate.

Agencies Effected

The agencies cut out are: WLB, ODT, OES, Office of Scientific Research and Development, Office of Inter-American Affairs, OWI, WPB, WSA, OSS and PAW.

The huge group of lobbyists who descended on the Capitol hill Thursday afternoon caused the capital authorities to call out extra policemen.

They handled the group of FEPC proponents rather roughly. One officer was overheard to remark "What are these niggers and Jews doing around here?"

Meanwhile as the Senate and House are in a quandry over the FEPC fight, the workers at FEPC have pledged to remain on the job.

The Senate is expected to restore the war agencies appropriations with FEPC. Because of the way that the House is handling the FEPC it is expected that rules will be suspended and the whole FEPC appropriation will be restored.

And to help FEPC further, the Tribune has it from a reliable source that President Harry S. Truman is going to speak for the agency again.

Eastland Given the Lie

Under Secretary of War Robert P. Patterson gave the lie direct to Sen. James O. Eastland (D., Miss.) by saying the War Dept. "is proud of its troops—and that includes the Negroes as well as other groups."

Patterson

Eastland had charged on the floor of the Senate that the Negro soldiers in Europe were "an utter and abysmal failure" and their actions had caused America to lose face in Europe.

Patterson said if any high-ranking general had made such a statement (as Eastland claimed) he would have known about it.

"You already have heard views of our leading commanders—Gen. Eisenhower, Gen. MacArthur, Gen. Eaker, and others—which do not support any such conclusion," Patterson said.

Reporters had asked him if the charges made to the Senate floor—and attributed to unnamed generals—were "representative of the Army's view of performance of Negro troops."

"Emphatically no," said Patterson.

HOUSE UNIT OKEHS FUNDS FOR FEPC

WASHINGTON, July 11-(AP)-The House appropriations committee about-faced today and recommended a $250,000 fund for continued and unrestricted operation of the Fair Employment Practice Committee.

It did so at an afternoon session less than three hours after it had voted FEPC $250,000 to liquidate.

The latest action left both sides in the fight over FEPC somewhat bewildered, and assured a record House vote tomorrow that may jar loose the $752,000,000 national war agencies supply bill that has taken a parliamentary merry-go-round ride for six weeks.

The joy of Southern foes of FEPC over the committee's morning action quickly died after the afternoon results were announced.

U. S. NEW REPUBLIC

The FEPC

The treatment of the Fair Employment Practice Committee in Congress was the usual sordid spectacle. All informed persons know that there is very great discrimination against workers on racial grounds, and that this is especially true in regard to Negroes. Everyone knows, also, that the FEPC has performed useful services in combating this situation. The opposition by members of the Southern Tory bloc is based on the lowest grounds of "white supremacy," a doctrine that is on all fours with the Nazi belief in Nordic superiority. For the moment, the Southern reactionaries have won their fight. Meanwhile, however, local action in many parts of the South as well as in the North, which is also guilty, is doing something to improve the plight of those who suffer from economic and social discrimination purely because of the color of their skin. Despite its slowness the world do move.

Fair Treatment For Negroes

Fair treatment for Negroes or for any segment of our people, as we have observed in the run of American experience, is forwarded by progressive education of all the populace. It cannot be forced by legislation. At least it can not be enforced by legislation in the form that demands that colored people be employed as they may seek for work or that demands that they be given service in hotels, restaurants or other eating places as they may appear there as guests or patrons.

Eagerly the colored people and their friends are pinning their hopes on fair employment practice laws, adopted in some states and now under consideration as a federal law in Washington. They are bound to experience disappointments no matter how much legislation is written on the books. In Connecticut our General Assembly ended its session without enacting a similar law. Those who wish the proposed legislation enacted speak as though all troubles would end for the people they seek to help if only this legislation is adopted.

More employers would employ more colored people on many jobs if the white employes did not bring invisible pressures to bear to prevent it. In these days of over-prevalent strikes, slow-downs, walkouts and labor sabotage in one form or another, the prejudices of fellow employes, or prospective fellow employes, against applying colored workers are given greater attention than they have ever been given before. No laws have yet been devised that would prevent strikes. No laws yet forwarded give promise of forcing prejudiced white workers to work, whether they will or no, with colored people beside them on the job.

For many years there have been laws in force seeking fair treatment for colored people in public eating places. Once again the answer to this troublesome problem rests with the white patrons of these places and not with the proprietors. There, even more than in the places of work, progress must be attained if attained at all by educational removal of prejudices. The practical result of such efforts as we have seen in Waterbury recently to drive eating place proprietors into observance of this law that calls for indiscriminate service of patrons regardless of color would be to put their places out of business. If white patronage quit as a result of compliance, in most cases the eating place would be forced to close. No progress in the difficult effort to iron out these troubles would thus be made.

Such legislation as is enforceable, and sensible as it is enforceable, in behalf of the Negroes we are for. Either laws or activities that rile up the difficulties and make no real social progress toward what is wanted by all fair-minded citizens make the lot of the colored people worse rather than better.

House Body Approves $250,000 for F.E.P.C.

Courier Journal

Washington, July 11 (AP)—The House appropriations Committee about-faced today and recommended a $250,000 fund for continued and unrestricted operation of the Fair Employment Practices Committee.

It did so at an afternoon session less than three hours after it had voted F.E.P.C. $250,000 to liquidate.

The latest action left both sides in the six-week fight over F.E.P.C. somewhat bewildered, and assured a record House vote tomorrow that may jar loose the $752,000,000 national war agencies supply bill that has been riding a parliamentary merry-go-round since June 1.

Agencies Funds Tied Up.

The deadlock has tied up funds for 16 home-front war agencies, many of them facing payless paydays until it is broken. All are operating now under special legislation allowing them to incur obligations but spend no actual money.

The joy of Southern foes of F.E.P.C. over the committee's morning action quickly died down after the afternoon results were announced. Conversely, backers of F.E.P.C. who condemned the morning proceedings finished the day praising them.

'We Have the Votes.'

"This is just what we wanted," commented Representative Marcantonio (A. L., N. Y.) after the final session. "No amendment is necessary now. We have the votes to give effect to the committee's recommendation."

The burden of carrying an amendment now rests with F.E.P.C.'s opponents. They indicated they would seek to eliminate the Apropriations Committee's final recommendation that the $250,000 fund be made available for normal F.E.P.C. functions until such time as Congress enacts special legislation dealing with the agency. A measure to create a permanent F.E.P.C. is pending. Authorization for the present agency, created by executive order by the late President Roosevelt, expired June 30.

The wording of the recommendation approved this morning was confusing to some committee members, who sought a quick opinion from the controller general. On the basis of that opinion, the committee held a second meeting and made it clear that, although the fund was intended "for completely liquidating" the F.E.P.C., it could be used for normal operations until the agency "is continued by an act of Congress."

The $250,000 recommended is the same amount voted by the Senate last month, and is less than half the $599,000 in the F.E.P.C.'s budget estimates for the fiscal year that started July 1. However, supporters of the agency said they were willing to accept the pared fund on the theory they later could obtain an additional allotment in a deficiency bill.

An Inflammatory Outburst

The sweeping denunciation of Negro soldiers which Mississippi's Senator Eastland resorted to in his continuation of the filibuster against the permanent Fair Employment Practice Committee is a depressing example of the animosity which extreme spokesmen from the Deep South can produce when in the anger of a sectional conflict colored with the inter-racial issue they really let themselves go.

As a report on the record of Negro soldiers this is, despite Senator Eastland's reference to the statements of "high ranking generals," remote indeed from a careful, objective and complete survey of the subject. Even if Senator Eastland's report was correct, what does it have to do with the FEPC? The virtues or vices of that program have no relation whatever to the record of the 92nd Division or to any other Negro unit or any individual Negroes—any more than to the heroism of some Negroes in uniform which has been cited by commanders and recognized by awards. Negroes have suffered and died in this war for the United States, including, probably, Negro constituents of Senator Eastland.

Senator Eastland is not arguing justly and he is not arguing to the point. What he is doing is making inflammatory statements designed to condemn a whole people and certain to cause deep bitterness.

We say this with no conviction that a permanent FEPC would aid materially in the South to improve the economic conditions of Negroes and in the belief that it would probably lead to sharp animosities with widely extended unfortunate results. Economic injustice does exist, notably in the efforts to herd Negroes into smaller areas of opportunity; and the South, for its own welfare as well as in fairness, is under the obligation to increase rather than limit these opportunities. But, like some other aspects of the deeply rooted racial problem, this is a difficult question to settle by federal law. We doubt whether a permanent FEPC can do it as well as the intelligence and common sense and good will of members of both races.

The one certainty is that nothing is gained and much is lost by such intemperate charges as Senator Eastland has been guilty of. There is an argument to be made on the question of the permanent FEPC. It is not to be made by such a shameful exhibition.

AN AMERICAN "ISM"

With Jim Crowism Here How Can We Educate Germany?

To the Editor of The Courant:

According to a recent issue of The Courant, the filibuster on the F. E. P. C. continues. The Hitlerian efforts and tactics of the United States Senator from Mississippi are as insulting to the Negro race as they are to the United State Army. Senator Eastland states that the Negro sold his vote to the highest bidder in a political campaign of promises.

I wonder whether the Senator was elected on a platform calling for "white supremacy." He seems to be well versed in Hitler's teachings of race hatred. While flailing his arms and perking his tie askew (Hitler style), the Senator said high-ranking generals told him when he was on his tour of horror camps, that Negro troops would neither work nor fight. It seems that the Senator was to report the horrosr of Dachau and Buchenwald, but apparently Negro GIs disturbed him more than the camps.

It has been suggested that Nazi Germany be re-educated to the democratic way of life. That is questionable. On reading different newspapers and magazines, I find that different countries have different "isms." Italy had fascism; Russia, communism; Germany, nazism; and democratic America, the melting pot of the world, has Jim Crowism. As the leading nation today, how can America, with some race-baiting members of Congress, make any attempt at suggesting that Germany be re-educated when our own house is not in order?

How will those nations vote for the United Nations Charter in view of the fact that the United Nations include Ethiopia and other small nations?

EDUCATION NOT ENOUGH

To the Editor of The Republican:

I read with considerable interest, and, I am afraid, with some disappointment, your editorial of Friday, June 29, titled "Fair Treatment For Negroes." Actually, I find it somewhat difficult to reconcile the views expressed in it with an editorial published only a few days before congratulating the Waterbury branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for having obtained 500 members and for the splendid contribution this organization has been making to inter-racial understanding. Can it be that you were not aware at the time of the earlier editorial that the Waterbury branch of the N. A. A. C. P. is one of more than 800 similar branches scattered throughout America that are dedicated to the very principles that you appear to be so violently opposed to? As a national organization, the N. A. A. C. P. has believed that while education is of unquestionable value in removing racial and religious intolerance from our communities, it can never be a substitute for laws that guarantee to every citizen equal privileges and equal protection.

During the 30 years of its existence the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has been convinced just as hundreds of thousands of other loyal Americans have been convinced that there is no room in this country for a first class and a second class citizen, the latter contingent upon the wishes of the former. On the strength of this conviction the association has carried 21 cases to the United States Supreme Court with favorable decisions in 18 of them. Today the principles enunciated in these decisions are firmly established and, for the most part, are in full observance. Would you say, Mr. Editor, that education alone would have done so well?

You say that prejudice cannot be successfully legislated against. Any one with a minimum of intelligence can readily understand this. I am sure we all agree that prejudice is a perfectly natural human trait and as such is readily understandable. Like every other form of ignorance, its only sensible and logical cure is education. Discrimination, on quite the other hand represents a brazen attempt on the part of one group to label another group inferior; it is an expression of the same kind of racist thinking that we have in America have criticized the Nazi Germans so severely for. Discrimination, whether economic or political, is as vicious as it is undemocratic. Today, far too many of us are too apt to wink at the constitutional rights of other people—especially if they happen to be Negroes—while insisting on the fullest possible protection for ourselves. Such diregard for elementary justice is not accidental but is most otfen due to deliberate planning. Should this sort of thing be left to the uncertainties of education? If you were deprived of the opportunity to enjoy your rights as a citizen—any one of them — would you be satisfied to follow the advice you dispense so very generously in your editorial? Very frankly, Mr. Editor, I do not think so.

You speak of F. E. P. C. legislation as something that "colored people and their friends" consider a pancea for all their employment ills. Nothing could be further from the truth. Actually, no advocate of this type of legislation feels that it can be a cure-all any more than we believe that the United Nations Charter can be a cure-all for international ills. At best it can be only an intelligent beginning. The fact that it does not, and probably will never have, unanimous support is no valid argument against it. Organized labor would most certainly not have supported an FEPC bill if it were without merit, or, if there were reason for fear it might be a source of trouble. To assume that it will not work even before it is tried is the worst kind of shortsightedness. To assume that strikes and slow-downs and walkouts will follow in the wake of an FEPC law looks a little like witch-hunting. tor, and I am sure you will agree, Our experience has been, Mr. Edi- that when a man, whether white or black, is hired as a "possible problem" he never fails to become one, but when he is employed on precisely the same basis as any other worker the so-called problem seldom materializes.

You speak of colored people who appear as guests in hotels and restaurants. Aside from the extreme bad taste in trying a case in your editorial column while it is in your Waterbury City Court for adjudication, I find your point of view on this matter rather refreshing. I have seen colored people as guests in some of the very best hotels and restaurants in this country and I do not believe I can recall ever seeing any mass exodus because of their presence. Moreover, I do not recall that any of these establishments were forced out of business because their proprietors treated all guests the same. I find it more than a little hard to believe that even in Waterbury there would be a succession of busines failures because the owners refused to accede to the unreasonable demands of their prejudiced patrons. Just as there are employes who are quick to place the blame for discriminatory hiring practices on the workers when in reality it is their own prejudiced thinking, so, too, are there hotel and restaurant owners who have neither the courage nor the strength of character to follow the course they know to be right.

Frankly, Mr. Editor, the principal reason that I cannot bring myself to agree with your suggestions is the facility with which you advise conciliation and compromise where someone else's, not your own, liberties are being violated. When you urge others to exercise caution in asking for simple human justice lest they offend the tender sensibilities of another group you are saying by implication that democracy is not a reality. You know and I know that a double standard of justice is fair to no one. By the same token a given law is either a good law or a bad one; if it is a good law it should be enforced without regard to race or color or religion; if it is a bad law it should be removed from the statute books but until this is accomplished it should be enforced regardless of the cost.

If you have ever been deprived of an opportunity to earn a decent living with plenty of work available; if you have been hungry with restaurants all around; if you have ever been tired and sleepy with hotels on every corner with money adequate to pay for any meal or for any type of accommodation, yet were refused because of one condition over which you had no control, what would you do, Mr. Editor, advise education? I do not think so.

THE BLOODY SHIRT AMENDMENT

To the Editor of The News:

In reply to H. C. Keller, of Los Angeles, Calif., in Sunday's Voice of the People on "Southern Sickness," I beg to state:

I think that his object can be realized by an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. This addition to our guiding laws shall be known as the "bloody shirt amendment," and shall read like this:

"In order to promote justice, bind our nation and eliminate sectionalism, this amendment is hereby adopted:

"No person born south of the Mason-Dixon Line shall hold the position of secretary of state, speaker of the House of Representatives or president pro tem. of the Senate."

This I think should satisfy Mr. Keller's desire to unite our nation and cure the Southern sickness.

HURTING THE SOUTH

Bridgeport News

To the Editor of The News:

As a white man who was born and reared in the Deep South, and who expects to return there to live after my service in the Army is completed, I think that I should express my disappointment at the part Southern congressmen are playing in trying to discontinue the FEPC.

The fact that the figures show that the FEPC has pressed fewer cases in the South, where two-thirds of the Negroes live, than it has outside indicates strongly that it is being administered in a conciliatory consideration of Southern conditions.

Basically it would be one of the best things that ever happened for the improvement of race relations in the South, and also for the improvement of its economy, if the Negroes who have left it to work in defense industries in other parts of the country are able to continue earning their livelihood there and live happily there, instead of having to come back to the South. The antics of Bilbo and Eastland are piling up a mountain of ill will.

Southern Bloc Holds Secret FEPC Meeting

Session Reported Barring Compromise On Keeping Agency

Washington Post

By Mary Spargo

A secret battle pow-wow of Southern Democrats in the House to decide further strategy to kill off the Fair Employment Practice Committee was held late yesterday behind the locked doors of the House Ways and Means Committee room.

Meanwhile a meeting of the full House Appropriations Committee has been called for today to attempt to break the month-old FEPC deadlock, which has stymied the 800-million-dollar war agencies supply bill because of inclusion by the Senate of a $250,000 appropriation for the controversial agency. 7-14-45

Those who attended the hush session were sworn to secrecy, but members said that no compromise in the fight against FEPC is in view.

A three man committee, reportedly headed by Representative William M. Colmer (D., Miss.), was said to have been appointed to confer with the leadership of the House.

Members were instructed to report the majority sentiment of the meeting that the southerners would go along on a proposition to give FEPC $125,000 for liquidation purposes only.

The session was called by Representative William M. Whittington (D., Miss.), who presided.

Two or three of the Southerners said only one issue was discussed, whether to allow FEPC enough funds to liquidate it, or whether to attempt to block any funds at all for the agency.

"We're gaining ground in this fight every day," one of the leaders of the Southern bloc declared. "Why should we compromise an inch?"

Taber Shows Impatience

On the other hand, Representative John Taber (R., N. Y.), ranking minority member of the appropriations group, who has previously voted against FEPC, growled his impatience yesterday with the entire legislative snarl and declared the bill should be reported out by the committee today.

Senate Accepts House Change In FEPC Bill

Agency Gets $250,000 To Run Another Year; Move for Delay Fails

By the Associated Press

The congressional fight over continuing the Fair Employment Practice Committee ended last night with House and Senate agreement on a $250,000 appropriation to run it in the 12 months beginning July 1. 7-13-45

The legislators got together when the Senate accepted by voice vote House language which nullified a previous stipulation that the agency must use the funds to liquidate.

The $250,000 is just half what FEPC had asked.

Senator Morse (R., Oreg.) made a futile effort to defer a decision until Monday. He said he hoped that if this were done the people at home would make their sentiments known and a larger appropriation would be given the agency.

Yields After Hour and a Half

He launched into what he termed "extended discussion" sometimes another name for filibuster—in an effort to force delay, but gave up the floor after an hour and a half.

During his speech Morse stressed the theme that democracy is on trial in the world and that it will be judged in part on the way it treats minorities.

By the time the FEPC fight was ended the hour was so late that leaders delayed final action until today on a 750 millio ndollars war agencies appropriation bill, which contains the FEPC item.

The House had ben standing by, waiting for the Senate to act on FEPC, with expectation that the entire bill could be finally acted on. House leaders decided to let it go until today. 7-13-45

When Morse gave up the floor, Senator Bilbo (D., Miss.), bitter foe of FEPC, threw a scare into Senate leaders by demanding a quorum cal. There were 16 Senators on the floor at the time and no chance that a quorum could be mustered.

OWI Allotment Still Waits

Bilbo, who recently filibustered against FEPC, said he thought a quorum should be present "because this is far-reachihng legislation."

Majority Leader Barkley (D., Ky.) and Senator McKellar (D., Tenn.), handling the bill, rushed at Bilbo, arguing vehemently. The Mississippian then withdrew his request.

Principal item remaining in controversy in the big bill is the amount to be given the Office of War Information. The House voted to allow it only 18 million dollars. The Senate boosted this to 39 million.

A conference committee from the two chambers agreed to compromise at 35 million dollars. Their conference report will be submitted to the House today, and if approved, will then go to the Senate.

Negro Soldiers Grateful

Richmond Times Dispatch

Editor of the Times-Dispatch:

We, the overseas veterans here at the hospital at Camp Pickett, wish to extend to you and the correspondents involved our appreciation and gratitude for the articles and facts on the Negro soldier. We feel that the morale of the Negro soldier will rise 100 per cent. Ever since the denunciations of Senators Bilbo and Eastland and Representative Rankin, we have been looking and hoping for such a just and contradictory article as the one which P. Bernard Young, Jr., has written. We are grateful that you are using your powers of the press for the pursuit of democracy as well as news.

Bilbo, Rankin and Eastland are known by every black American here and overseas. We know that these men are allowing their racial hatred to blind them to the extent that they are willing to sacrifice the sacred principles and ideals of our American democracy to keep the black American down. (The filibuster against the FEPC proves this.) When government officials allow such an unjust hate to conquer them, they become a greater threat to democracy than Hitler ever was. We wonder how long the true and more powerful American people will allow such unjust and intolerant men to hold responsible and respected positions in our government. 7-12-45

Denunciations from officials such as Bilbo, Rankin and Eastland against the black man serve as an inciter to explode race riots and racial disunity. When such disunity occurs, Bilbo, Eastland, Rankin and the rest of the racial agitators will sit back and say, "I told you those Negroes were troublemakers," when they are totally responsible. We are grateful to Bilbo, Rankin and Eastland, for through their ignorant racial denunciations, they have awakened the most drowsy of us to the realization of the power of politics. They have given us proof that all Americans must show the best of wisdom in exercising the power of their vote. As long as there are true Americans who are not goaded or blinded into racial disunity and mob violence but are willing to show their disgust over such unjust statements made by these racial agitators, the black Americans feel that the democracy for which we have been working, fighting and living will not be long in coming.

We remain grateful for your facts on the Negro soldier.

Amendment Sets Up Restricted Area For FEPC

Atlanta Daily World

Marshall Forces To Establish A Permanent FEPC

7-13-45

BY HARRY S. McALPIN
(Washington Correspondent for Atlanta Daily World and NNPA)

The House and Senate Thursday concurred in the House Amendment to the War Agency appropriation bill, giving to the FEPC $250,000 to operate for the next fiscal year. The amendment, carrying a liquidation clause, nevertheless by virtue of a proviso that funds may be used for operating expenses "if and until" the Congress enacts legislation for a permanent FEPC, makes it possible for the FEPC to carry on its work on the curtailed basis that the inadequate amount of money will permit.

After considerable debate in the House, where members were allowed five minutes to express themselves for or against the Appropriation Committee's recommendation, the amendment was passed without a roll call vote in the Senate. Senator Wayne Morris (R) of Oregon talked for two hours against the compromise, contending that the agency needed the full amount recommended by the Budget Bureau. At the conclusion of his arguments, however, the Senate voted, also a record vote to accept the House amendment. 7-13-45

Other items in the war agency bill on which the House and Senate differed—OWI and others — were sent to conference between the two houses and will be disposed of this morning.

When this is done, all the war agencies will be able to meet their incurred obligations and pay salaries which none has been able to do since the bill has been tied up as a result of the FEPC fight.

The National Council for a permanent FEPC is beginning immediately to marshall its forces to continue the fight for a permanent FEPC is order that no similar parlimentary situation may arise again. Neither the proponents or opponents of FEPC were completely satisfied with the amendment, but the victory balance seems to be on the side of FEPC's forces.

Immediate cuts in the staff of the temporary FEPC are expected to be made. It will be necessary probably to cut out some of its regional offices and to cut in half or more the staff of the National office. The Committee will meet in Washington Saturday to consider these problems. 7-13-45

FEPC Hangs in Balance as Delegation Goes to Capital

Daily Worker

A mass protest delegation leaves Pennsylvania Station at 6 o'clock this morning for Washington, where the Senate has tossed the Fair Employment Practice Committee bill back into the lap of the House Rules Committee. 7-2-45

The delegation is led by Councilman Benjamin J. Davis, Jr., and members of trade union, civic, church, fraternal and other people's organizations. Councilman Davis, who, with Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., appealed to Harlem organizations to concentrate on Congress, said yesterday that the delegation will:

- Confer with all Congressional friends of FEPC, including Reps. Mary Norton, William Dawson and Vito Marcantonio, as well as Sens. Robert Wagner and James Mead, as to the people's next step in saving the legislation;
- Try to confer at the White House, leaving a statement there for President Truman on FEPC;
- Attempt to see the Secretary of War with a view to urging repudiation of Sen. James O. Eastland's "unrestrained and fascist-like" attack last Friday on Negro soldiers in Europe;
- Demand that the War Department and the White House name the "high-ranking generals" who Eastland said gave him stories about the "utter and abysmal failure" of Negro soldiers in Europe.

LYNCH INCITEMENT

"This fascist-minded member of Mississippi's evil triumvirate, Sen. James O. Eastland," Davis said, "in charging that black soldiers raped 5,000, or any other number, of European women, is deliberately inciting to a lynching of Negro Americans, and it is up to the government to repudiate him and prevent bloodshed."

Davis named the other of the Mississippi's "evil triumbirate" as Sen. Theodore Bilbo and Rep. John Rankin.

The FEPC fight, in the meantime, has shifted again to the House, after a three-day filibuster by Bilbo, Eastland, and other friends of reaction, to prevent approval of a $446,000 appropriation for FEPC. The filibuster ended Saturday afternoon when Bilbo and his polltax associates agreed to a compromise providing $250,000 for the agency.

Malcolm Rose, FEPC chairman, told newsmen in Washington that even if the agency got the $250,000 it would be forced to cut its staff in half, thus crippling any effective investigation of most of the 2,600 complaints now awaiting attention.

REJECT COMPROMISE

House polltaxers, however, refused to accept even this compromise, insisting on the immediate liquidation of FEPC. They howled down an attempt by Chairman Clarence Cannon of the House Appropriations Committee to get unanimous consent for a motion to shift the problem of FEPC to a conference between House and Senate on the two versions of the general war agencies' appropriations bill. The House version cut out FEPC altogether. 7-2-45

Backers of the FEPC must now pin their hopes either on getting the House Rules Commitee to agree on a resolution to send the appropriations bill to conference or on the House Appropriations Committee to redraft the entire legislation to include a FEPC appropriation.

The Rules Committee has thus far turned down all efforts to get an FEPC bill through to the floor of the House by a six to six vote. It i. believed possible to crack through the opposition if enought pressure can be applied.

Vote on FEPC Continuance Refused House

Action Ties Up 16 Agencies' Funds and Dooms Early Recess

Washington Dispatch

By Mary Spargo

With the Democratic leadership firmly in the saddle, the two most powerful House committees yesterday refused to permit the House to vote on a Senate proposal to continue the Fair Employment Practices Committee for a year with an appropriation of $250,000, approximately half what the agency sought. Washington Post Senate supporters of FEPC said they would counter the decisions of the House Rules and Appropriations Committees with an attempt to secure an amendment giving the agency the full $467,000 it asked.

Meanwhile, funds for 16 other agencies are indefinitely held up, and plans for an early recess of the House have gone out the window.

Blocking Procedure 7-3-45

The turns of the legislative merry-go-round on which FEPC is embarked started in this order yesterday.

1 The House Rules Committee met in executive session and by a tie vote refused to allow the War Agencies Appropriation bill, to which the Senate had added the FEPC appropriation, to go to a conference and come back to be voted on in the House.

2. The Appropriations Committee which then received the bill decided in 15 minutes by a 20-to-11 vote to table the Senate bill and report out a new measure giving the 16 other agencies a total of 771 million dollars, without any appropriation for FEPC. The new bill and committee report were all printed and waiting for the committee before the vote was taken.

To Ask Closed-Rule

The Appropriations Committee will ask, and unquestionably received, a closed rule from the Rules Committee so that nothing can be added to or removed from the measure. It will have to be voted up or down just as it stands.

After the House vote, the measure will go to the Senate where the whole battle, which provoked a four-day filibuster earlier, will start anew.

Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio) who fought for the agency in round one, said after the House Appropriations Committee action yesterday.

"I should think we might reasonably insist that the House vote on the proposition."

To Propose Full Amount

Senator Homer Ferguson (R., Mich), who voted against the compromise because he thought the agency should have its full amount, said he would propose that the Senate give FEPC the full $467,000.

Ferguson added that if the same Southern Democrats, led by Senator Theodore G. Bilbo (D., Miss.) started a filibuster he would urge a petition for cloture to shut off debate.

At the height of the filibuster last jwek, 32 Senators signed such a petition, which was not acted upon because the Senate adopted the compromise.

May Renew Same Process

If FEPC supporters succeed in getting an amendment to continue the agency into the new bill, the measure wil lgo back to the House, where the same process may be renewed.

Republican Senators said that the compromise, offered by Senate Majority Leader Alben W. Barkley (D., Ky.) was so weak that it enabled the House CVommittees to decide to kill the bill. The maintained that if the Senate had gone ahead without compromising and secured the necessary two-thirds vote for cloture, the House would have had a better evaluation of Senate determination to keep the agency.

See "Kill-Off Fix"

Authoritative Democratic and Republican sources declared that a "fix" had been put on to kill off the controversial agency.

Some Republicans contended that President Truman is anxious to reconstitute the Fair Employment Practices Committee by putting a businessman at its head who has a thorough knowledge of the industrial problems involved in preventing discrimination by reasons of race, creed and color.

They say, however, that the President is reluctant to remove Malcolm Ross, the man President Roosevelt selected to head FEPC because of possible political repercussions. Therefore, they claim, the word has gone out to let the agency die, and give the President a chance at a later date to create a new committee with more solid business leadership. Congress, and not the President, would assume the onus of killing the agency in this situation.

7-3-45 Daily Worker

Immediate passage of the full $466,000 appropriation for the Fair Employment Practice Committee was urged yesterday by state headquarters of the American Labor Party in a wire to all 45 Congressmen from New York State.

The wire, signed by State Executive Secretary Benjamin Fielding, said the appropriation was vital both as a war measure and as "part of the cornerstone of our peacetime full employment program."

"It would be an emphatic answer to those who question the fulfillment of our war aims," Fielding wired the Congressmen.

Ironical Contrasts

Washington Post

The appeals of Senators Connally and Vandenberg for our participation in an international organization designed to preserve fundamental freedoms for the peoples of the world, without regard to racial or religious differences, came as passing interruptions of a prolonged filibuster aimed at wrecking the Fair Employment Practice Committee. Ironically, the leader of the filibuster, Senator Bilbo of Mississippi, energetically assisted by Senator Eastland from the same State, expounded the doctrine of white supremacy with a fervor that would have done credit to the most intolerant Teutonic exponents of the master race theory. To Messrs. Bilbo and Eastland, the Negro is the chief racial menace who must be kept in his foreordained lowly place, although in course of the debate, hatred and contempt for other racial minorities were expressed by implication. 7-3-45

If this particular filibuster could be regarded as a last ditch fight by a few willful men, it would appear annoying rather than serious. There have been filibusters of the one-man type in the past, which have held up important legislation. But on this occasion Messrs. Bilbo and Eastland were evidently buoyed up by words of encouragement from various reactionary groups throughout the country that lose no opportunity to fan the fires of racial hatred for their own selfish purposes. It was also disillusioning, following collapse of the filibuster, to find a large bloc of Southern Senators voting solidly against the compromise proposal to grant FEPC a limited appropriation. The subsequent blocking of even this limited appropriation in the House is further proof that Senators Bilbo and Eastland are not fighting a lone battle against the forces of enlightenment which are striving to make democracy mean a fair deal for every man, regardless of race, color or religion.

Men who achieve the distinction of representing their States and communities in the Congress of the United States are usually keen judges of public opinion. They seldom arrive there, nor do they remain long, if their speeches and their votes fail to reflect the innermost convictions of their constituents. The Senators from Mississippi would hardly dare to voice so unrestrainedly their intolerance of the Negro in public life and to defame Negroes who wear their country's uniform if they did not feel sure that such sentiments would cost them few votes at home and do little to impair their standing among their colleagues. We think the size and markedly regional character of the negative vote on the compromise FEPC measure supports the belief that this country, in the person of its chosen representatives, is sadly tarred with the brush of racial intolerance.

If the representatives of any of those foreign nations now looking to us for leadership in launching an international organization to make the world safe for democracy by chance leaf through the Congressional Records of the past week they will find much to puzzle and distress them. As for us, we can only hope that threats to the ideals we profess to believe in will be overcome by the force of an enlightened majority opinion. The fact that the FEPC is being so bitterly opposed is proof that it has made progress in the fight to secure a fair economic deal for Negroes and other racial minority groups. Senator Vandenberg pointed out, in speaking of the United Nations Charter, that the threatened postwar disintegration of ideals of human behavior makes it all the more necessary to try to stem the "evil tides of opinion." That holds true not only in respect of our international relations but as regards our domestic affairs as well.

The Rape and Murder of FEPC

afro-American

A year ago this month, the Democratic party, responding to the leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt, promised favorable action on a Fair Employment Practice Committee and other matters affecting minority groups in the United States. 7-7-45

Since he succeeded to the office of Chief Executive, President Harry Truman has called upon Congress to enact into law legislation creating a permanent FEPC and providing the funds necessary to operate it.

Last week, the Democratic party, in full control of the executive and legislative branches of government, repudiated its paper pledges by legislating FEPC out of business and closing the door, temporarily at least, to the formation of a permanent body. That, in brief, is the tragic story.

And here's how we feel about it. If the Democratic party cannot or will not control its Southern wing, then it should stop making promises which it knows it has no intention of keeping.

There were Republicans, to be sure, who joined in unholy alliance with Dixie's hate-breeders in delivering the death blow to the most democratic agency the U.S. has yet known. In spite of this, however, the Democrats, representing the dominant party, could have given blood and sinew to FEPC. They failed us.

The lesson is obvious. Campaign pledges, without performance, are mere scraps of paper. We hope that the voters will remember in 1948.

Speakers Urge Support Of FEPC And Ives-Quinn Bill At Negro Freedom Rally; 20,000 Persons Present

New York Age.

By GWYNNE DURHAM

Full support of a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee, outlawing discrimination in the armed forces, enforcement of the Ives-Quinn Bill and total cooperation with our allies abroad now and during the peace, were urged by speakers addressing more than 20,000 persons Monday evening at the third annual Negro Freedom Rally held at Madison Square Garden under joint sponsorship of the People's Committee and the Negro Labor Victory Committee.

Representative Adam Powell, Jr., asserting there was "double dealing on both sides of the aisle" in so far as passage of the FEPC Bill was concerned, advocated drastic action if Congress failed to enact legislation for a permanent FEPC. Powell also urged mass migration of Negroes to the North if the South did not shortly "offer them hope."

Malcolm Ross, chairman of the FEPC, said that race prejudice "is discredited but not licked" and that there could be "no secure peace in American Industry" until it is. Warning the audience that "FEPC has many and powerful enemies", Ross stressed the fact that it "must not be abandoned."

Ferdinand C. Smith, secretary of the National Maritime Union, and chairman of the Negro Labor Victory Committee, likened the policies of Truman to those of Franklin Delano Roosevelt and stressed the need to "close ranks behind President Truman."

Councilman Benjamin Davis, asking that New York City become the first City in America without racial discrimination, called upon New York's FEPC, which becomes effective on July 1st, to first wipe out jim-crow in big league baseball, saying that Negroes "will not be satisfied with less than full and unconditional citizenship," and further, that Negroes having helped to destroy Hitler must now "destroy Hitlerism".

M. Moran Weston, field secretary, Negro Labor Victory Committee, read greetings from President Truman. 6-30-45

Other speakers included Oscar Ewing, vice-chairman of The Democratic National Committee; Salvadore Garcia Aquirre, member of the Cuban Senate; and Charles Collins, executive secretary Negro Labor Victory Committee.

Members of the cast of several of Broadway's most outstanding productions brought well-wishes and promises to support the objectives of the rally.

Highlighting the evening's performance was a war bond presentation and citation to Miss Ruth Henning, 24-year-old war worker, of 1798 Pacific street, Brooklyn, who was chosen "Miss Negro Victory Worker of 1945," in open competition. Municipal Court Judge, James S. Watson, made the award.

Entertainment was furnished by Paul Robeson, Hazel Scott, Bill Robinson, Kenneth Spencer, Pearl Primus, Muriel Rahn, Canada Lee, Josh White, Josh White, Jr., and others. 6-30-45

Only Pressure Can Save FEPC Now, Coffee Says

Daily Worker

By EUGENE GORDON

Only pressure by friends of the Fair Employment Practice Committee can save that agency now. That is the considered judgment of Rep. John M. Coffee (D-Wash), as expressed to members of the New York delegation on FEPC to Congress last Monday.

The House Appropriations Committee, Rep. Coffee declared, "is stacked against the people" on FEPC and there is little that a politically progressive member of that House committee can do within that body. 7-4-45

Rep. Vito Marcantonio, in the meantime, has issued a warning to all friends of FEPC to beware of a ruse by its enemies to kill it once and for all tomorrow, Thursday, morning.

Plans are afoot, Marcantonio reveals, to vote on the War Agencies Appropriations bill promptly at 10 a.m. Thursday. The scheme is to get the bill through, without the FEPC appropriation, while most representatives — including professed friends of FPC—are still in bed.

Charles A. Collins, executive secretary of the Negro Labor Victory Committee and who was, with Councilman Benjamin J. Davis, Jr., a leader of the delegation, said on his return here yesterday that Marcantonio had requested all New York representatives to cut short their Independence Day holiday and to be in Washington Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

AMENDMENT READY

The American Labor Party Congressman will introduce an amendment to the War Agencies Appropriations bill when it is slipped on to the floor Thursday morning. This amendment will be for FEPC funds. It will need all the support it can possibly get, Collins said.

He feels that with the exception of "a few representatives, like Marcantonio, and a very few others," administration forces are putting up "less than a half-hearted fight" to save FEPC.

"The enemies of FEPC are riding high, wide and handsome in Washington," Collins said.

The National Federation for Constitutional Liberties explained to the Daily Worker why these enemies of FEPC are able to "get away with murder." Miss Frances Williams, of the Federation, named the following New York representatives as absentees last Monday and as likely to be absentees tomorrow, Thursday, unless their constituents prod them into action:

Joseph Clark Baldwin, Sol Bloom, Charles A. Buckley, Walter Lynch and Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., New York City; William Barry, St. Albans; Augustus W. Bennet, Balmville Leo F. Rayfiel, Brooklyn; Dean P. Taylor, Troy, and Bernard W. Kearney, Gloversville.

Additional Representatives who have pledged to support FEPC but who are not doing it are James M. Curley of Boston, Mass.; James P. Geelan, New Haven, Conn., and Margaret Chase Smith, Skowhegan, Me.

Rep. Powell, however, is absent through illness. He slipped and fell in a bathtub following the Negro Freedom Rally several days ago and is said to have been "flat on his back" under a doctor's care since.

The Negro Labor Victory Committee appeals in the meantime, to the 127 labor unions affiliated and cooperating with it to stand by for a possible emergency call for delegations to Washington.

FEPC Asked

TO THE EDITOR: Euthemios, in the June 22 issue, has the right to express his opinion that he, being short-sighted, does not see a favorable outcome for the Fair Employment Practice.

Negroes along with other minority groups are not asking for good will but merely for democracy in the altruistic sense which is a purpose of the FEPC.

Detroit Free Press

Yes, I too say let the FEPC be legalized as a permanent agency . . . with no buts!

7-1-45 MILDRED A. DAY.

Moneyless and Moribund, FEPC Backers Seek an 'Out'

Richmond Times Dispatch

WASHINGTON, July 1—(AP)—The Fair Employment Practice Committee was moneyless and moribund today as its backers sought to bypass the House Rules Committee and get a financial transfusion for it.

Technically the agency created by the late President Roosevelt and supported by President Truman died financially last midnight when its 1945 fiscal year appropriation ran out.

A last-minute compromise broke a four-day Senate fight over FEPC with an agreement on $250,000 for the year starting today. But that deal hit a stone wall of southern opposition last night in the House.

So determined were the Southerners that FEPC not be kept alive that their objections blocked final congressional action on a big supply bill financing a score of civilian war agencies.

But all the other agencies, including OWI, were given a breathing spell by a provision in a separate bill authorizing them to spend in anticipation of funds carried by the stalemated war agencies measure.

Two Courses Open

Two courses lie ahead for the FEPC's backers:

They may persuade the Rules Committee to send the deadlocked measure to the House for a decision, or they may put the heat on the appropriations committee to recommend House acceptance of the Senate compromise.

In no other way can FEPC be voted on by the House so long as a single member objects or 218 members refuse to sign a discharge petition, unless the rules are suspended by a two-thirds vote.

Twice within recent weeks the Rules Committee has refused to clear FEPC legislation for floor action. And there were no indications that a meeting called for tomorrow would break the deadlock there.

It is a tossup whether, assuming a Rules Committee rebuff, FEPC backers can persuade the Appropriations Committee to support them. The committee originally refused to put any FEPC funds into the war agencies measure and later, after a controversy, reluctantly recommend a $125,000 fund specifically to liquidate the agency. The rules group nullified even that action.

Any recommendation of the Appropriation Committee with respect to the Senate-voted funds will be subject to House debate, and Southern Democrats are ready to debate forever if they can. However, the House rules prevent filibusters, and a majority vote could restrict discussion.

Never before has the FEPC, always a congressional "hot potato," brewed up such a controversy as it has this year. Its backers claim it is necessary to prevent employment discrimination because of race, creed or color. Its opponents contend it would accomplish the opposite result and lead to discrimination against white people in some sections.

FEPC Funds Stalled Again in the House

Detroit Free Press

7-3-45

New York Times Service

WASHINGTON—In the bitterest Congressional controversy in this session, two committees of the House refused to accept the Senate's appropriation of $250,000 to continue the Fair Employment Practice Committee.

The entire War Agencies Appropriation bill thus was indefinitely delayed.

Proponents of the FEPC were beaten in both the House Rules Committee and the House Appropriations committee.

THE APPROPRIATIONS Committee then reported out an entirely new War Agency bill of $752,000,000.

The bill not only eliminated FEPC but restored a $21,000,000 cut which the House had voted earlier in the appropriation for the Office of War Information.

The Rules Committee sought to give the measure right-of-way, under a "closed" rule by which amendments to it would be impossible, but Chairman Adolph J. Sabath, Illinois Democrat, an FEPC proponent, appeared only long enough to announce that he had called no meeting of the committee but might call one Tuesday.

AT THE END of a day of angry maneuvering, a legislative pileup had been created so serious as to bring into question the House plan to recess soon for the summer.

Those controlling the essential House committees were plainly resolved to defeat FEPC at any cost. The available information indicated that the Senate would not recede from its stand in behalf of that agency.

Friends of FEPC were seeking to recruit signers to a petition to remove the Rules Committee from jurisdiction over a bill to establish a permanent FEPC.

Thus far, the petition was far short of the required 218 names.

Other agencies depending on the War Agencies Bill for funds are operating temporarily through deficiency appropriations.

PATTERSON BACKS U. S. NEGRO GROUPS

Birmingham Herald

WASHINGTON, July 5—(AP)—Undersecretary of War Patterson said today the Army is proud of its Negro soldiers and that he knows of no high-ranking general who has condemned their performance. 7-6-45

Patterson thus took issue with Sen. Eastland (D., Miss.). The latter declared last week during Senate debate on the Fair Employment Practices Committee that high-ranking generals told him on a recent overseas trip the Negro troops "would neither work nor fight." Eastland called them an "utter and abysmal failure."

Asked at a news conference whether Eastland's views represented those of the Army, Patterson replied that he had no knowledge of any high ranking general making such a statement and that the expressed opinions of Gens. Eisenhower, MacArthur and others "do not support any such conclusion."

"The War Department," Patterson added, "is proud of its troops and that includes Negroes as well as other groups."

He added that Gen. Eisenhower had commended volunteer Negro platoons in Europe and that the Army's inspector general had praised the work of the 24th Infantry Regiment, a Negro outfit, in the Marianas.

FEPC Fund Rests on Big House Roll Call Thursday

Two Committees Manage to Block Action

7-3-45 P.M.

By Elizabeth Donahue
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, July 3.—The President's Fair Employment Practices Committee, which has had parliamentarians in both Houses of Congress thumbing the rule book, now needs a full membership of the House on the day after the Fourth of July to win even a reduced appropriation.

The FEPC issue, hitched to the $800,000,000 War Agencies Bill, will become the victim of a prolonged House-Senate battle unless there are enough House members back at work following the holiday to insure a House vote on FEPC. If the House ever gets a chance to vote, it is likely that some money for the FEPC will be approved.

Although the Senate last week gave FEPC $250,000, two House committees yesterday acted in quick succession to deprive FEPC of any funds whatever.

Could Have Helped

Either committee could have made it possible for the War Agencies Bill to go before the House with the FEPC money included and permit the House to vote, for the first time, on its approval or disapproval.

Instead, both the Rules Committee and the House Appropriations Committee discarded the Senate-approved bill which contained the money for FEPC, and started out with a whole new measure containing not a cent for the Fair Employment Practices Agency.

The House Rules Committee, dominated by Southern Democrats, is expected today to send the War Agencies Bill to the House floor under a rule preventing anyone from amending it to include FEPC.

On Thursday, when the House takes up the measure, a move will be made to amend the rule and let FEPC in.

The House rarely supports a motion to amend a rule, and the success of this play will depend entirely on whether FEPC's friends—especially its professed friends in the GOP ranks—are on hand to back the motion.

Rep. Clarence Cannon

Vicious Circle

If the rule is not amended the House will be forced to send the War Agencies Bill back to the Senate minus FEPC. There, with heavy Republican support, FEPC will get some money back. But once again, the Bill will return to the House to face the same committee opposition and the same legislative hazards.

The House authorities predict that this kind of run-around may last for several weeks, despite the fact that the House is anxious for a vacation and even though the Senate should be pre-occupied with Bretton Woods and the San Francisco Charter.

A mystery in the House fight is the attitude of Chairman Clarence Cannon (D., Mo.), of the House Appropriations Committee, who, although he is from President Truman's home state, has been decidedly cool toward funds for FEPC.

Cannon has privately indicated that he favored an appropriation of $250,000 for the agency but he has failed both in his own Committee and as a witness before the House Rules Committee to back his private pledges.

Another Missourian, Rep. Roger Slaughter (D., Mo.), has been equally cocky about defying the President. As a member of the Rules Committee he has consistently opposed any money for the anti-discrimination agency.

Strong Message

Although President Truman has made no special request for temporary FEPC funds, he sent a strong message to the Rules Committee asking that FEPC be made a permanent Government agency.

Meanwhile, although both Houses passed a special resolution permitting the 16 agencies in the War Agencies Bill to keep on going even without a new appropriation, the resolution didn't include FEPC, which technically expired last Saturday at midnight.

Officials at the Fair Employment agency report, however, that they are not disbanding. They believe Congress will eventually give them some money to liquidate—if operating funds are not approved.

Fight Over FEPC Fund Shifts Again to House

Issue May Now Be Forced to a Record Vote

P. M.

By Charles A. Michie
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, July 2. — The House, which by one means or another, has managed to dodge a vote on the FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee) probably will be forced to go on record on continuance of the agency this week.

The War Agencies Bill, which contains a compromise fund of $250,000 to continue FEPC for one year, was shuttled back to the House when supporters and opponents of the agency agreed on the niggling quarter-million instead of the full appropriation of $446,000.

In the other wing of the Capitol, Southern Democrats took up where their Senate colleagues left off. They had been filibustering against FEPC for three days. A chorus of shouted objections blocked the unanimous consent which was necessary to send the entire money bill ($771,500,000) to conference. The voice of Rep. John E. Rankin (D., Miss.) was among the loudest.

Majority in Favor

Meanwhile, the agencies whose appropriations are included in the bill are getting along all right. Both Houses had written into a second deficiency bill a provision that these agencies could incur obligations in anticipation of their appropriations if not passed by July 1. Whether that covers FEPC is in doubt because the reduced sum has been approved by only one House. Both Houses have voted appropriations for the other agencies with only the final total to be settled.

The Rules Committee of the House, which in its own way, has conducted a tidy little filibuster against FEPC by refusing a rule which would allow creation of a permanent agency, is meeting today to consider a rule to allow the House to vote on continuance. The Committee, which is top-heavy with Southern Democrats, is hostile to FEPC, but there is a chance that House leaders may be able to force a rule and a vote. Otherwise, the legislative and parliamentary cycle will start all over again.

If the Committee, of which Rep. Adolph J. Sabath (D., Ill.) is chairman, refuses a rule, Speaker Sam Rayburn (D., Tex.) can return the bill to the Appropriations Committee. If this Committee reported the bill out with the Senate amendments, including FEPC, it would come to a vote. It is conceded the House has a clear majority in favor of the agency.

Mead Stands Firm

In the event of further stumbling blocks, House leaders may be able to think of some other parliamentary maneuver they can employ to get a decision.

The Senate filibuster wheezed to a stop Saturday when majority leader Alben Barkley (D., Ky.) persuaded the opposing factions to agree on a vote for a reduced fund of $250,000. It was carried on a roll call of 42 to 26. Two Republicans voted against the inadequate compromise as being unfair to the FEPC. They were Reps. Wayne Morse, of Oregon, and Homer Ferguson, of Michigan. They described the reduced amount as the "death blow" of the agency.

Sen. James Mead (D., N. Y.) pointed out that there is nothing to prevent Congress from voting additional funds to FEPC in a deficiency bill at a later date. He teamed with Sen. Dennis Chavez (D. N. M.) in supporting the agency.

FEPC officials said today that reduction in their appropriation from $446,000 to $250,000 would be a serious blow to the agency and would greatly curtail its activities.

Mrs. Roosevelt Fights for Permanent FEPC

Tells AFRO That FEPC Is "Fundamental to Peaceful Return of the Army"

CRITICIZES ARMY—Former First Lady says that Army muffed chance to train democratic citizens as well as good soldiers. Would like to see more mixed units.

In first personal interview since the President's death, Mrs. Roosevelt says she will continue to work for democracy and will be more "energetic than ever" now that there is no "question of getting votes." Tells AFRO writer if colored people started a race war in Harlem, they would "be destroyed" but would set in motion the entire colored population of the world. Also warns minority groups against making selfish demands that would damage the country.

BY MICHAEL CARTER

NEW YORK—If the colored people of Harlem who "are terribly oppressed" should decide to start a race war they would "be destroyed," but they would first bring realization of what colored races can do and set in motion the entire colored population of the world, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt said in an exclusive AFRO interview here last week. Wearing black, even to her stockings and bordered handkerchiefs, Mrs. Roosevelt is as buoyant and as captivating as ever, despite the fact that she has lost considerable weight and suffered an extreme personal loss.

She promised that she would continue to "work for democracy as I see it," and stated positively that she would be more "energetic than ever" now that there is no "question of getting votes."

The quotation from her which opens this interview is typical of her frankness today.

The interview granted to me was the first personal one she has permited since the death of Mr. Roosevelt. It was granted partly because of her interest in colored people and the colored press and partly, it appears, because I had interviewed her in May, 1942.

At that time I submitted questions and received neatly typed responses over her signature. This time we had the feeling of "knowing each other" and the questions and answers were purely conversational. 7-7-45

In "Hide-Away" Apartment

We sat in her "hide-away" apartment overlooking Washington Square park in Greenwich Village. The apartment had an air-conditioning device in a window, but the room was hot.

It was also cluttered with oriental and European art, and much furniture. Significant was a huge chair which sat in a corner of the room, but was not really a part of it. I learned it was the former president's chair.

Her library matched the books in any alert person's home. I saw Lin Yu Tan, Richard Wright, Clifton Fadiman, Thomas Mann, and a full set of the "Public Statements and Papers of President Roosevelt" on the full book shelves.

Misinterpreted in 1942

When, back in 1942, I asked Mrs. Roosevelt whether colored people should take advantage of the war to further their own just ends in America, she answered, in essence, "No." "Not unless their struggles helped America," she said then.

This time she expanded that. "I am afraid you misinterpreted me, in the AFRO," she said. "What I meant was that if you tried to take a situation and use it entirely for your own ends, it would be a selfish, dangerous act.

Warns Against Selfishness

"Let me give you an example—suppose after the war the soldiers return home and form a united group which demands something the country can't afford. They could hurt the entire country.

"The colored race is the largest minority group in America, but the war soldiers will also be an important minority group. No such group should damage the country by making selfish demands."

It was at this point that she described what she thought would happen, for example, if colored people in Harlem rose up against the whites. "It would solidify the race issue and bring chaos and destroy the colored people of America."

Race Relations Unchanged

She thinks that since 1942 race relations have become more dynamic, but have neither improved considerably nor deteriorated. "The race question is not purely southern. It is national. That is why I so firmly favor the Fair Employment Practice Committee," she said.

"FEPC is fundamental to the peaceful return of the Army," she added. "We can't wipe out race prejudice altogether, but we can at least erase it from the area of work. I've written to everybody in Congress asking them to vote for it."

She also wrote to Republican Rankin "but he did not answer my letter, so I shall write him again.

Disappointed in Army

"I feel badly about the slowness of the development of racial equality in America, but there are some very hopeful signs." She cited the case of a southern architect she knew who would hire a colored draftsman and who favored the FEPC.

"I can see signs like that in many ways, although there are many things which disappoint me." Typical of these is the army.

"I don't think the Army has used its full opportunity to develop democracy, but it has trained good fighting soldiers. I think the Army could have trained men to be good soldiers and good democratic citizens too, but they neglected the latter."

She was pleased to know that some mixed units had fought in Europe, and would like to see more.

GI's Bitterness Justified

If colored soldiers should return to America with bitterness—as they probably will if there is no FEPC—then I will be able to understand their bitterness." She paused and said, "I have heard some frightful stories—frightful. I shouldn't blame them for being bitter."

I asked Mrs. Roosevelt this carefully worded question: "You raised the status of the First Lady of the Land from a purely decorative function to a working symbol of democracy. Can any woman—in the White House—do this, or does it depend on personality?"

Background Important

Mrs. Roosevelt's answer was:

"In that capacity you have a great opportunity to help if you believe in certain things. Personality is not as important as background and training. If you know what things are all about and have a background in democratic action, you can do a great deal," she said.

In answer to the question, "Will you continue your activity on the part of racial democracy?" she said,

"I began it a great many years ago. We were in Naples when I was 5, and I went on a pony ride. The Italian boy who was supposed to run alongside of my pony was barefoot and cut his feet.

"When we returned from the ride, he was sitting on the pony and I was running beside them, because I had shoes on. I'm still running." She said with a smile.

To Fight For Ideals

She indicated that she would be even more active: "You can have more influence on party and people if you are not looking for favors and votes. I can come out clearly and fight for my ideals—and I shall."

Unlike many others that I have interviewed, Mrs. Roosevelt sees a similarity between the Nazis' master race myth and the treatment of colored people in America.

"All oppression of race and superior race notions have the germ of fascism," she declared. If our soldiers return to America and continue in certain racial practices, they will have missed the whole purpose of the war."

Throughout our talk she stressed the need for a permanent FEPC and the fear of "bitterness in colored soldiers when they return."

"White soldiers must realize that they are slipping into the same thing they fought against," if they let Georgia racial customs persist after V-E and V-J days are both on the calendar, she asserted. 7-7-45

PERSONAL OBSERVATIONS: When I left Mrs. Roosevelt she went to the door, opened it, and rang the elevator bell. She spoke to the elevator man, white, and chatted with me in the car for perhaps ten minutes.

Downstairs a member of the nobility was waiting to come up in that elevator for a luncheon date with her. I think this describes Mrs. Roosevelt.

She spoke highly of the colored press; mentioned Walter White, and Channing Tobias as if they were old friends and again emphasized the fact that she was free to work for democracy without fear of a harshly critical Congress. That's Mrs. Roosevelt.

Letters To The Editor

FEPC Travesty

Washington Post

Please let me thank The Post for its valuable help in the struggle to end employment discrimination in our country against fellow Americans of certain races and religions. 7-10-45

I refer especially to the excellent articles of Agnes E. Meyer, in which this is a recurrent theme, to various strong editorials, and to such masterly statements as that of the Rev. Jernagin in today's "Letters to the Editor" on the current FEPC controversy, who in the name of Justice and of Christianity serves a solemn warning which should be repeated over and over until all must give heed; "The moral corruption and final collapse of Germany have shown plainly what can happen to a people intoxicated with the false doctrines of racial superiority and with prejudice and bigotry."

A handful of small-minded men in Congress are bitterly and maliciously opposing a measure for fair practices in employment. In other words they are fighting to maintain unfair practices.

What a deplorable travesty it would be if by their obstructionist tactics they were to prevail against a more enlightened viewpoint and succeed in nullifying all of our recent military victories by showing that our fine professions of democracy are not borne out in practice.

If we have destroyed Hitlerism and Naziism abroad, only to tolerate and uphold these same doctrines at home, then the hideous sufferings and the ghastly deaths of millions of young men have once more been in vain.

MRS. CHARLES E. HUSSELL.
Washington, July 8.

There has been much speculation since VE-Day on whether Hitler is dead or not. If he is living, he must be green with envy, if he can get news where he is. I refer to the debates pro and con that have been going on over the FEPC bill. Never in his wildest dreams did he reach the height of eloquence in his tirades against the Jews that was reached by the Messrs. Bilbo and Eastland, in their righteous crusade to prevent this monstrous act being passed off on the people of this country.

I know if Hitler is living he must be chewing carpets and frothing at the bit, in his impotence to reply to come home to a devastated country, but the Negro soldier who has been told that he is fighting for democracy, and finds when he returns that he has been fighting for peanuts as far as his welfare is concerned, that is the soldier for whom pity is needed.

Hitler, dead or alive, seems to be the winner after all, as he lives on in the spirit of his American counterparts.

A SOLDIER'S MOTHER.

at least to sanction the worthy gentlemen.

MISSISSIPPIANS PRESS ANTI-BIAS JOBS FIGHT

Chicago Def. 7-14-45

JACKSON, Miss.—(ANP)—Jacksonians manifested unusual interest last week in response to a call for a mass meeting in interest of passing the FEPC bill in Washington. It was a remarkable demonstration of the growing interest of the Mississippi Negro in his future economic and social welfare. Speakers included Dr. S. D. Redmond and Percy Greene, the latter a newspaper publisher.

Greene pointed out that it had already been estimated that upwards of 300,000 Negro farm workers and their families would be dislocated and would have to find new jobs in Mississippi and Louisiana alone because of the certain post-war mechanization of the cotton and sugar cane farming. He said a permanent FEPC would make possible a broader base of Negro job opportunity and give legal sanction to the further integration of Negro workers in the predicted post-war industrial development of the state and south.

Donovan Gets His Irish Up Against Racist Poll-Taxer

P.M. 7-8-45

Dan Donovan is spitting mad at Sen. James O. Eastland, the Mississippi hatemonger who, along with Sen. Theo Bilbo, the Mississippi Filibusterer, tried to talk the FEPC out of existence the other day. Donovan, a Massachusetts-born Irish Catholic, has his dander up because Eastland, in the course of a Klux-like diatribe wherein he read off a list of FEPC employes and speculated on their racial and religious origins, paused when he came to the name of Dan Donovan and said:

"He is a white man, God help him in that organization with that association."

When I visited Donovan in the Empire State Building office of the FEPC, he was just polishing off a blistering letter to Sen. Eastland.

"It is an affront to any decent-minded citizen to be mentioned the way the Senator from Mississippi mentioned me," he said. "He took the name of God in vain. And he also misused the name of Dan Donovan. What's wrong with a Catholic being a staff member of the FEPC? Catholics are also frequently discriminated against in jobs.

"The great majority of Americans, whatever their ancestry, creed or color, are devoted to the basic principles of justice and democracy upon which the Executive Order creating the FEPC are founded. Catholic leaders like Archbishop Robert S. Lucey of Texas, Bishop Francis J. Haas of Michigan and Father John LaFarge of New York have been in the forefront of the fight for racial and religious democracy in industry." 7-8-45

Donovan, a sturdy-looking, silver-haired citizen of 64, jovial and loquacious, is a senior field examiner for Region 2 of the FEPC. He was an active member of the International Assn. of Machinists, A. F. of L., for 34 years, and still holds his union card. He was a delegate-at-large to the Massachusetts State Constitutional Convention of 1917-18, and is proud of his two sons and a daughter serving with the armed forces.

Donovan's ire is not directed exclusively at Eastland. He also takes violent exception to the "unvarnished untruth" uttered by Sen. Bilbo when he repeatedly declared, in his anti-FEPC filibuster, that the A. F. of L. was opposed to the continuation of that agency. He points to the telegram sent by President William Green last month to the "Save FEPC" rally, putting the A. F. of L. unequivocally in favor of a permanent FEPC. In his letter to Eastland, Donovan writes:

"You, Sen. Eastland, and the senior Senator from Mississippi, have aroused widespread, deserved condemnation for your intemperate attitude. Your speech, and particularly your insult to Negro soldiers, is menacing to our country's welfare. 7-8-45

"My work with Negroes and whites, Jews, Protestants and Catholics in the FEPC has strengthened a long-held conviction that the FEPC objectives can and must be achieved in our nation and its principles applied to our relationships throughout the world. As to the un-American and hate-inciting tirades expressed by yourself and Sen. Bilbo, I can say fervently as an American (white):

"'God help us!'"

"I don't pretend to be a scholarly expert on race relations," Donovan says. "But I do think I know something about simple American fundamentals. And equal rights to economic opportunities is one of them."

May Force House To Move on FEPC Grant By Upper Chamber

P.M.

By ELIZABETH DONAHUE
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, July 7. — Although almost anything can happen to the bitterly disputed FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee), it was apparent today that the Senate has decided to lock up the War Agencies Bill until the House decides to vote one way or another on the FEPC.

The FEPC, originally a part of the war agencies measure carrying funds for 17 outfits, has been twice kicked out of the Bill in House committees.

But the membership of the House has not yet voted for or against the FEPC. So the Senate has decided that the House is going to commit itself on this issue before any further action is taken to expedite funds for the 16 other agencies included in the War Agencies Bill.

In the House, it was reported that the leadership is weakening—that Speaker Sam Rayburn (D., Tex.) and other House leaders realize that the House is primarily to blame for holding up the $800,000,000 war agencies measure. 7-8-45

Turned Down

In the Senate Appropriations Committee, where the Bill now rests, the Committee has refused to accept Chairman Kenneth McKellar's suggestion to force Senate approval of the war agencies bill carrying funds for the 16 agencies—but not the FEPC.

On Friday, McKellar attempted to win Committee approval of his compromise. But it was promptly rejected by the FEPC's strongest Senate supporter, Dennis Chavez (D., N. M.). Chavez won the full backing of the Republican members of the Committee.

McKellar confirmed the opinion that it would take a two-thirds vote of the Senate to put back either the FEPC or the 10 other eliminated war agencies which the House knocked out of the Bill last week.

McKellar, during the secret Committee meeting yesterday, tried to get his colleagues to send a bill to the Senate floor under which all the 10 war agencies, excluding the FEPC, would get their money, even under a vote requiring two-thirds of the Senate to approve them. 7-8-45

They Held Out

But FEPC supporters on the Committee held out. They asserted that if the 10 agencies went in the FEPC must go in, too.

So McKeller adjourned the meeting and clearly indicated that he didn't know when he would call another one.

Meanwhile, Sen. Theodore Bilbo (D., Miss.) took the Senate floor to flay PM and declare "Many persons have been led to believe I have denounced Jews, Catholics and Negroes."

Bilbo warned that "if I see fit to filibuster until Christmas I shall be fighting for the majority of the American people."

Bilbo characterized PM as a newspaper which "couldn't tell the truth if it had to."

While foes of the FEPC in House and Senate scraped the bottom on the barrel for a new rule to get the War Agencies Bill through without the FEPC, they could offer only three unacceptable "compromises": 7-8-45

¶ One is the McKellar plan to force Senate approval of the War Agencies Bill minus the FEPC.

¶ The second is a desperate plan, sponsored by Southern Democrats in the House, to give President Truman a lump sum of money to support 16 war agencies as long as he doesn't give anything to the FEPC. This proposal will obviously be rejected by Republicans, in both House and Senate, who have consistently opposed any Congressional handouts to the President.

¶ The third proposal is also sponsored by Southern Democrats. It involves the resurrection of a defeated House proposal to give the FEPC $125,000—less than a fourth of the money it needs and requested for the next 12 months.

Bilbo's Main Point

To the Editor of The Courier-Journal.

Courier Journal

Senator Bilbo from Mississippi has made a fight to defeat the most needed legislation that has been conceived in the minds of broad-minded and God-fearing men of power and authority so far as concerns the Negro. He is attempting to defeat this bill on the pretense that it is a political scheme to legalize the marriage of Negroes to whites as well as to place the Negro upon the same social plane as the white people.

Mr. Bilbo cannot get the white women's federated clubs of the South to believe that the Negro wants interracial marriage any more than he does. Honestly, I don't believe Mr. Bilbo really means what he is arguing. I would rather believe that social equality and interracial marriage are his strong points to keep drawing that big salary at the Negroes' expense. 7-7-46

So, in behalf of the present worth-while and thinking class of Negroes and those boys who are giving their lives to destroy such ideas as being advanced by Mr. Bilbo, I suggest that the white South quit listening to such tommyrot as Mr. Bilbo's and listen to the words of Jesus, when He said that He came into the world to establish in the hearts of men the highest ideal for a peaceful world, the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. Unless we get the love of God shed abroad in our hearts, the great accomplishment at the San Francisco Conference will have lost its true value and honest interpretation if the good white people of the South continue to be influenced by idle words coming from the lips of such a leader as Bilbo.

Paducah, Ky. REV. HUGH HAYES.

HURTING THE SOUTH

To the Editor of The News: Birm. News

As a white man who was born and reared in the Deep South, and who expects to return there to live after my service in the Army is completed, I think that I should express my disappointment at the part Southern congressmen are playing in trying to discontinue the FEPC. 7-11-45

The fact that the figures show that the FEPC has pressed fewer cases in the South, where two-thirds of the Negroes live, than it has outside indicates strongly that it is being administered in a conciliatory consideration of Southern conditions.

Basically it would be one of the best things that ever happened for the improvement of race relations in the South, and also for the improvement of its economy, if the Negroes who have left it to work in defense industries in other parts of the country are able to continue earning their livelihood there and live happily there, instead of having to come back to the South. The antics of Bilbo and Eastland are piling up a mountain of ill will.

Fort Dix, N. J. S-SGT. T. C. TILLERY.

Dr. Goebbels Rides Again

Pittsburg Courier

Dr. Joseph Goebbels, the little club-footed former Nazi Propaganda Minister, reportedly committed suicide under the ruins of Berlin, but apparently the report was greatly exaggerated.

The High Priest of lying may be physically departed, but certainly his spirit is still with us, judging by the antics of Mississippi's Senator Eastland in the Senate last week when he went to the most vicious extremes in lying against Negro soldiers during his and Senator Bilbo's filibuster against the Fair Employment Practices Committee.

Nothing more shamefully false has been uttered in that august body than Eastland's charges that Negro soldiers in Europe were "an utter and abysmal failure." "would neither work nor fight," "criminally assaulted members of the families of French farmers," "some Negro officers deserted their posts; the whole division (the Ninety-second) without cause, rhyme or reason, would quit fighting," and that black French troops raped 5,000 German girls herded into a subway in Stuttgart, Germany.

It was the Nazi propaganda thesis, fostered by Hitler and carried out by Dr. Goebbels, that if a big enough lie were told it would be believed because the average honest person could not conceive that anybody would willfully tell such a falsehood.

Acting on the same principle, Senator Eastland followed in the footsteps of many of his more notorious Southern predecessors in the Senate, and concocted a lie so monstrous that many Americans will doubtless believe it.

It did not matter to Senator Eastland that such distinguished American commanders as General Eisenhower and General Mark Clark highly praised the work and fighting of Negro troops.

It did not matter that General MacArthur and other high military and naval officials have commended Negro troops for their courageous and intelligent contribution to the war effort.

It did not matter that thousands of Negro troops have been decorated for their bravery in this war.

It only mattered that Senator Eastland was intent on defeating a new appropriation for the Fair Employment Practices Committee and killing that progressive agency so that the traditional American economic discrimination against Negro workers might continue in the post-war period.

So Dr. Goebbels' classic thesis is carried forward from the grave by a United States Senator from the most backward and intolerant State in the Union.

A million black soldiers who helped make Allied victory possible will not be blamed if, when reading Eastland's screed, they wonder for what they fought, risked their lives and underwent grueling hardships.

But just as Dr. Goebbels and his tribe who spouted racial venom finally went down to ignominious defeat, so will the Eastlands and Bilbos ultimately be crushed and discredited in the eyes of all fair-minded people in this country and abroad.

No matter what these unreconstructed rebels may do or say to smear and disparage brave men and women who went through the Valley of Death that democracy might live everywhere throughout the world, the colored people are determined to march forward to final freedom and equality.

They know that their enemies in this country, powerful though they may be, are fearful of their determination to be full citizens, else they would not resort to such desperate tactics in a vain effort to hold them back.

Colored Americans are on the march, and all the Goebbels-like lies that the tortured minds of Dixie demagogues can concoct cannot stop them, ever.

Soldiers

Denied Right To March in Pratt Parade

the Call

Negro soldiers, stationed at Pratt, Kas., were ignored and denied the right to march in a parade held at Pratt Monday, June 25, in connection with the 7th War Loan drive, according to a letter received by The Call.

The letter, signed by "Two Hundred Red-blooded American Soldiers" said that all units in the area except Squadron C, which is colored, marched in the parade.

The letter from the soldiers, whose names are withheld, follows:

7-6-45

"Dear Editor:

"On June 25, 1945, we underwent the most humiliating experience that could come to an American soldier. We were denied the right to march on parade in the streets of Pratt, Kansas because we are colored Americans.

"There was a parade of troops and equipment, followed by a block dance. Because of the fear that we might expect to take part in the dance, we were not permitted to participate in the parade under the colors of which we are so proud — the colors for which we may die.

"The men of Squadron C, which is colored, were in the background, ignored, while all the other base units paraded. There were white troops, white WAC's, white Boy and Girl Scouts. The American Legion and the American Women's Voluntary Service were represented—by whites. There was a Lily White float for the USO.

"A two-horse buggy and a dilapidated gas truck, both driven by white civilians, together with a number of miscellaneous vehicles unrelated to the war effort, completed the parade. All these odds and ends . . . and still no room for Squadron C. This parade was held in connection with a War Bond Rally. It is undoubtedly safe to say that many colored citizens, as a result of this discrimination, found another use for money with which they had planned to purchase bonds.

"That, American citizens, is the story of why our morale is so low for this month. We will never live it down, this month or any other time, if such things continue to happen. Have these narrow minded people forgotten so soon the glory of our troops in Europe? Are we to be denied the honor to which we are entitled? Shall we carry on as American soldiers? Shall we throw discipline and training to the winds?

"In spite of incidents like this, we feel that we have a part in America. We Are Americans. We will defend America for the things for which it stands, including civil rights for all its citizens. But must we defend some white man's abuse of the very principles of democracy?

"We know there are American white people who believe in the equality of man, regardless of race, creed or color. Are they to be led by a minority of narrow minds; or will they help us demand our privileges as genuine American citizens, American soldiers, and eventually, returning veterans?

"Two Hundred Red-blooded American Soldiers."

Filibuster

P.M.

Dear Editor:

After reading some excerpts from Sen. Bilbo's remarks in his filibuster against the FEPC bill, I wondered what I could do about it. Writing directly to Sen. Bilbo, I felt, wouldn't make a dent in his shell of cynicism. Instead I wrote this to Sen. H. Alexander Smith of New Jersey:

"How in the name of American principles can we reconcile ourselves with those of Sen. Bilbo? . . .

"How in the name of Christianity can we condone Sen. Bilbo's actions?

"How in the name of humanity can we permit Sen. Bilbo to spew his prejudices on the floor of the American Senate?

7-8-45

"What interests me is your reaction to speeches of this kind . . . When such undemocratic words are uttered on the Senate floor, what do you do about it? We, back home, can only rant and fume with indignation when we read about it in our newspapers.

"I have often wondered what other Senators say about filibusters of this sort. Do they listen passively, and then tolerate it as part of politics? Or does the surge of anger bring some opposing Senator to his feet, defying such practices? . . ."

The filibuster has become a poisonous weapon in the hands of a reactionary group. What can we do about it? The adoption of a permanent cloture rule would help. Also, if the public were permitted to hear broadcasts of important sessions of Congress, it might keep its members more in line with our American principles . . .

Who Are Privileged And Under-Privileged?

Atlanta Constitution

She really wrote about the problem behind the youthful vandalism in private homes, which has worried and puzzled Atlanta in recent weeks. However, that is not the portion of her letter that proved really interesting. For she seems to have tackled that subject under what is probably a misapprehension. For she takes it for granted the young vandals belong to what we call the "underprivileged" class whereas every indication is that they are children of families which undeniably belong to the group anyone would designate as "privileged." At least financially. 7-10-45

But it is when she starts writing her thoughts on that subject, the comparison between the "underprivileged" and the "privileged" that her letter becomes truly interesting. It is, I believe, an interesting document in that it reveals some of the thinking going on in the mind of an intelligent woman who has spent the 60 years of her life in rural surroundings in Georgia. To glimpse within the thought processes of such a one is always fascinating and informative. It may be that her thoughts are representative of a large group, and it may be they are indicative of a trend which will have much to do with the shaping of that brave and better way of life about which so much is written, nowadays.

"We talk much," she writes, "about our wonderful way of life in America, but when we speak that way we are comparing the privileged few, here, against the underprivileged masses of other countries—forgetting the masses of underprivileged in America."

One of "Privileged"

"Let's try to look this thing square in the eye," she continues, "for America's sake and the rest of the world. Now I am in my 60th year and as for background among farm folks, I was born and have lived as what might be called the privileged few. That is, if you can call living in your own home and carrying a mortgage all my life to keep from living the life of a tenant, a privilege. You and your family, I imagine, would be classed about the same as city folks, struggling all your days to bring up a decent family and send them to the best schools possible. (How right she is!)

"Now let's look at the people just below our standards, both on the farm and in towns and cities. I often say I'd rather be poor in the country than in town.

"First, for I know it best, let's look at the tenant farmer. For example, one living near me now.

Typical Tenant Farmers

"Man and wife in their early thirties and six children. This year the only boy, 16, was kept out of school to make a crop while the father looked after the rest of the farm (a 12-mule farm), for the owner, who is 85 years old. (He has children, too, but none of them will farm. He educated them well and they prefer town life.)

"The five daughters of the tenant farmer all went to school except the baby. Now, with school out, these girls are working hard, out in the hot sun, trying to get the crop finished. They will have to stay out of school for a while this fall to help harvest the peanuts and cotton.

"The mother, besides cooking and doing all her housekeeping and washing, is trying to work a good size garden and to can all the stuff they can't eat. She has high blood pressure and should rest, but she says, How can I?

"These children appreciate their parents and know they are doing the very best they can for them, but they must wonder why the scales of justice are so far out of balance, why they have so hard a life and other children have so many good times.

Crack Under Strain

"They tell us juvenile delinquents usually come from the poorer parts of the city. Well, people who have to live on a low standard want their children to have the best possible, and make untold sacrifices to give them decent clothes—often even at the sacrifice of food. These children appreciate this struggle their parents are making for them. But they also see the other side of life, where their schoolmates live in nice homes, have cars, go off for vacations while they have to stay cooped in some stuffy little apartment with no room of their own and no place to bring their friends. Is it any wonder some of them crack under the strain? If America doesn't wake up and if our capitalistic democracy doesn't straighten out and "fly right" we're all apt to go down together. . . .

"To my mind the south has always practiced FEPC. Take the sharecropper. I may be wrong, but I think the south originated this plan to take care of the Negroes the government set free in a land where they had no means of independent livelihood. Where is there a business which offers the laborer a fairer chance than that of the sharecropper? The farmer furnishes everything, the cropper does the work and they go halves. Is there any other business which offers labor such returns?"

There is more, but space has run out. But, don't you find yourself interested in these ideas from the pen of a 60-year-old Georgia farm woman?

$250,000 Senate Allowance Denied

Agency Begins Fiscal Year Without Funds

FILIBUSTER BROKEN

Bilbo, Eastland Led Senate Hate Harangue

BULLETIN

The House Rules Committee, by a second 5-5 tie vote, failed Monday to grant a rule permitting House consideration of the War Agencies Supply Bill with the Senate's $250,000 compromise appropriation for the FEPC included. Later the House Appropriations Committee voted 20-16 against approval of the Senate version. The measure now must go back to the Senate for elimination of the FEPC allowance, unless an unlikely two-thirds majority vote for suspension of rules can be obtained on the House floor.

7-7-45

WASHINGTON

The Fair Employment Practice Committee was struck a death blow on Saturday when Southern Democrats in the House blocked a Senate-approved compromise appropriation of $250,000 for the agency.

Voting for the compromise in the Senate were 23 Democrats, 18 Republicans and 1 progressive. Voting against it were 19 Democrats and 7 Republicans.

Two of the Republicans who voted against the compromise, Senators Wayne Morse of Oregon and Homer Ferguson of Michigan, said that they did so because they were opposed to the compromise, because it meant "a death blow to FEPC."

Senator James M. Mead, (Dem., N.Y.) promised, however, that the fight for more funds for the agency would be carried on in subsequent deficiency bills.

Even an appropriation of $250,000 would have meant that FEPC would have to close most of its regional offices scattered throughout the country. A total of 446,250 was originally requested. 7-7-45

Action Slated for Monday

While Speaker Sam Rayburn was asking the House for unanimous consent to send the War Agencies Supply Bill to conference, twelve Southern Democrats shouted their objection, which means the measure must go back to the House Rules Committee.

Executive Agencies

Washington Post

The latest attempt of FEPC advocates to insure a House vote on appropriations for that agency is likely to boomerang. For the deletion from the war agencies appropriation bill, on a point of order, of funds for 10 important agencies established by executive order advertises the failure of Congress to discharge its obligations as a law-making body. The existence of a pressing emergency justifying liberal resort to executive orders at the beginning of the war does not warrant indefinite continuation of agencies established without legal basis. Long ago Congress should have enacted legislation regularizing the status of such agencies. That would have afforded Congress an opportunity to review their activities and to decide whether any of them ought to be eliminated or changed in any respect.

Instead, the issue presented by the existence of powerful administrative agencies never authorized by Congress has been dodged. Only now, and for ulterior purposes, it is dragged into the light by legislators who are not in the least disposed to dispute the propriety of voting huge sums to finance these agencies through the medium of a general appropriation bill. The rule invoked by FEPC advocates hoping to force consideration of a measure carrying funds for FEPC is a sound rule. It provides that no appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment for any expenditure not previously authorized by law. When the original war agencies bill came up for consideration a month ago, a special rule prevented the raising of points of order. But this time the Rules Committee refused to grant a special rule that would have protected the executive order agencies. Consequently, the door was left open for the elaborate tactical maneuvering staged last Thursday. 7-9-45

Wholesale appropriation of funds at executive behest to finance projects not specifically authorized by law encourages loose fiscal practices and puts a severe strain upon our democratic system. Hence, regardless of the outcome of the parliamentary battle to decide the fate of FEPC, we conclude that the fight will serve at least one good purpose: it will focus attention upon the anomalous status of numerous useful war agencies and remind Congress of long-neglected duties.

DEFEAT

ILLINOIS SENATE BILL No. 254 and ILLINOIS HOUSE BILL No. 353

Identified as

"The Fair Employment Practice Act"

and Sponsored by

Jews and Jewish Organizations

WHAT IS THE REAL OBJECT OF THIS LEGISLATION?

It is an attempted LEGALIZED JEWISH CONSPIRACY to force employers to employ JEWS and JEW REFUGEES, under penalty of a $500 fine—a year in the "Klink"—or both. NOTHING MORE—NOTHING LESS.

JEW REFUGEES

JEWS and JEW REFUGEES have taken over many of the jobs and business of our American Boys-while they were in foreign lands fighting their battles. When our boys get back they will need their old jobs. Employers will be glad to have them. They will be given a preference. There will be a lot of unemployment. JEWS and JEW REFUGEES will be discharged to make places for these boys. But, SAY THE JEWS, THE JEW REFUGEES and ORGANIZED JEWERY this would be UNFAIR. Hence we must have "THE FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICE ACT" to protect THE JEWS against any intrusion by returning American Soldiers.

United States Senator, Robert R. Reynolds

in a 1943 speech, said--

"While those American heroes carry on over there they expect us here on the home front to keep faith by preserving for them the freedom for which they themselves are fighting. . . . In this connection you will be interested to learn that since the beginning of the present war in Europe more than 480,000 aliens of all classes were admitted to the United States from foreign countries, amongst them were 334,000 who entered this country as temporary visitors. I protest these admissions. I criticize the admission of nearly a half million aliens to this country since the war began, at a time when we are sending our sons to their lands to FIGHT THEIR BATTLES. While our men are on foreign shores in uniform in more than seventy different places throughout the world those for whom they fight leave the battle zones and come to America to bask in the sunshine of Safety and Prosperity."

Also Defeat

SENATE BILL No. 67

Introduced by a Jew State Senator to prohibit the printing and distributing literature such as this protest. It is as much a part of THE JEW CONSPIRACY as Senate Bill No. 254 and House Bill No. 353.

WHAT TO DO ABOUT IT

VICIOUS "FEPC" PROPOSAL ...

WASHINGTON (Special) Feb. 4, 1945.—One of the most VICIOUS measures ever proposed to a State Legislature or the U. S. Congress is the so-called "FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICE" act, to compel EMPLOYERS to employ Negroes, Jews and Orientals, whether they want to or not.

It is a socio-communistic New Deal scheme to destroy private enterprise.

Five years ago I wrote an article entitled

Senator Smears U. S. Negro Troops As Fate of FEPC Hangs in Balance

Eastland Lays Crimes in Europe to Colored Soldiers

By CHARLES A. MICHIE
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 30.—A malevolent assault on the integrity and fighting ability of American Negro soldiers in Europe made on the floor of the Senate by Sen. James O. Eastland (D., Miss.) was not confirmed today by the War Dept.

Eastland charged, during a second installment of Southern Democracy's filibuster against the FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee), that Negro soldiers have caused the U. S. A. to lose prestige all over Europe," that although they only "constituted one-twelfth of the American army . . . yet they were guilty of over one-half the crime."

Officials of the War Dept. said flatly they had "no comment whatever on the charges made by Sen. Eastland." The Senator did not in a single instance credit his information to any official source.

Forgets Some Facts

Eastland also declared there were 33 cases of criminal assault in Normandy from D-Day until May of this year "26 by Negroes and seven by Whites." What he didn't say was that almost all the soldiers left in Normandy when our armies plowed through Europe were service troops, most of them Negroes.

Eastland isn't half the freebooting filibusterer that his colleague Sen. Theodore (The Man) Bilbo, a fellow flower of the Old South, is. He talked for only three and three-quarter hours Friday afternoon and seemed glad to quit for a quorum call.

He was noticeably wilted when he slumped into his chair about 5 p.m. He had been talking vicious, irresponsible talk since 1:15.

Eastland began his afternoon chat before an empty House. Well, almost empty. There were two Republicans on hand, Sen. Wayne Morse of Oregon and Sen. Forrest C. Donnell of Missouri. Not a Democrat, Southern or otherwise, was within earshot. During the afternoon a few members, who didn't have anything better to do, drifted in, got an earful of the Eastland brand of ortatory and retired in hatse.

Even Bilbo Ran Out

Bilbo, who didn't draw much of an audience himself the day before, scuttled in at 3:45. Five minutes was all even he could stand. He didn't show up again until recess.

Sidney Hillman also felt the featherweight of Eastland wrath. He called him one of the "lowest and commonest communists in America," and demanded that he be deported. As a matter of fact, he said beating his manly breast, the FEPC is all a part of a communist plot to take over America. It involves stirring up the Negro, he added in explanation. He said we have more on Hillman than we ever had on Harry Bridges as grounds for deportation.

Sen. Dennis Chavez (D., Mex.), who is leading the fight for an FEPC appropriation if he ever gets to say anything, walked in one door of the Senate chamber, raised his eyebrows at Eastland's Palm Beach back and walked out.

"The Negro race is surely a most inferior race," intoned the American Democrat from Mississippi. "I have information that in the city of Stuttgart, Germany, between 2000 and 5000 "Christian, German white girls" were rounded up, herded into a subway station and there made the playthings of French Senegalese soldiers for four or five days. He didn't give a credit line on that one either.

"We are dealing with an inferior race," Eastland shouted at the empty seats around him and at the tourists in the gallery. "That's why I bring it into this debate. Negroes do not have the creative ability and genius of the white race.

"A man bereft of racial pride is weak," Eastland shouted. "I'm proud of the white race, a superior race, and I'm proud that pure white blood flows in my veins."

Personnel Lists

Then, winding up, Eastland produced the personnel lists of FEPC from cities all over the country. Of course, Bilbo had read them once before, but Eastland figures it isn't really in the record till he reads it. He went over them city by city, making careful note of how many Negroes and how many whites worked in each office.

"The Anglo-Saxon is the forgotten man in America today," he bleated. "This bill is not against discrimination. The whites are being discriminated aganst."

Somehow we missed the way Eastland managed to wangle Thomas E. Dewey into his speech. But he did it.

"The man who betrayed his race," he declared .(Dewey signed an anti-discrimination bill in New York State. Maybe that was it.) "The weakest man who was ever nominated for the Presidency of the United States."

It was at this juicy point that Rep. John E. Rankin (D., Miss.)—just like Eastland except only a Representative—soft-footed into the chamber. He cased the joint, nodded approvingly at Eastland's good, respectable Mississippi sentiments, and plunked himself down on a couch. He was joined by Sen. Burton K. Wheeler (D., Mont.), who has been known to agree with some of the things the Southern gentlemen adhere to.

Barkley's Compromise on Funds Called Error

By ELIZABETH DONAHUE
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 30.—The fate of the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee—whose sole function is to see that vital war jobs are filled whether the candidate is black, white or whatever race—was being weighed in the Senate today with Negro-hating Southern Democrats resting their elbows on the scales.

Whatever the parliamentary solution of the week-long wrangle, commonly called a filibuster, the Southern Democrats, led by Sen. Theodore Bilbo (D., Miss.) are counting on winning a tactical victory.

Bilbo is having trouble keeping his Southern colleagues in line, but a compromise to cut FEPC's funds in half, offered by Democratic Leader Alben Barkley (D., Ky.) pumped up the Southern wind-bags and gave them new hope.

Funds at Stake

The stakes involve $446,200 – enough money for FEPC to do a decent job for the next 12 months —against a compromise to cut the money, and FEPC's effectiveness in half.

Here's why the Southern Democrats are likely to win and the man or woman, who happens—for purposes of discrimination—to be of the wrong race or religion, is likely to lose:

For a week it has been evident that supporters of FEPC held the necessary two-thirds majority to defeat the Southerners – if and when they ceased filibustering against a vote.

A rare combination of Republicans and a dozen New Deal Democrats, including Sen. Robert F. Wagner and James M. Mead, of New York, made the two-thirds possible.

But in a late night session, when Republicans, led by Sen. Robert A. Taft, of Ohio, forced a petition for cloture—the rule limiting debate —bumbling, good-natured Democratic Leader Barkley of Kentucky came through with the fatal compromise.

The Excuse

The compromise slices FEPC in half and Barkley evidently offered it partly because, as he said, he wanted to get the Senate "out of an embarrassing situation" and partly because he was afraid the GOP would get all the credit for forcing cloture.

Some of his closest friends in the Senate privately state Barkley made a major political error.

The debate-limiting rule will be voted on Monday. Then the FEPC can be voted on if the cloture motion is carried by two-thirds.

But the wily Bilbo, if he thinks he lacks the votes to defeat cloture, is ready to snatch the compromise.

On Monday, President Truman walks into the Senate to present the world peace charter. The Senate has consented to suspend the fight on FEPC long enough to let him get in and out.

ATTACKS NEGRO RECORD IN WAR

Eastland, Assailing FEPC, Charges Failure.

Washington, June 29 (A. P.).—Senator Eastland (D.-Miss.), renewing the Southerners' fight against the Fair Employment Practice Committee, declared in the Senate today that the Negro soldier has been "an utter and abysmal failure" in this war.

He said this was the view of high ranking generals, imparted to him and other Senators on a recent trip to Europe.

The FEPC would grant "unfair preference" in hiring of the discharged Negro soldiers, he said.

"The Ninety-second Division, the only Negro division, had the best equipment and the best training of any division we had," he told the Senate. "For political reasons, the generals were forced to commission Negro officers. Not one of them could be placed in a responsible position. That division could not be placed in an important position in the line. If all our divisions had been like it, the Germans would have pushed us to the toe of the Italian boot.

"The Negro soldier has been an utter and abysmal failure. I'm not saying that out of prejudice. That is what the responsible generals told us. And we're asked here to set up an unfair preference against a white soldier solely because the Negro minority sells its votes to the highest bidder in a political campaign."

Eastland Assails War Record Of Negroes in Fight on F.E.P.C.

WASHINGTON, June 29 (AP).—Senator James O. Eastland, Democrat, of Mississippi, carrying on today the Southern filibuster against the Fair Employment Practices Committee, injected into the long discussion an assertion that Negro troops are "an utter and abysmal failure."

Flailing his arms and jerking his tie askew, he declared "high-ranking generals" had told him on a recent European trip that the Negro troops would neither work nor fight.

In Normandy, he shouted, they criminally assaulted members of the families of French farmers.

"And we're asked here," he said, "to set up an unfair preference against a white soldier solely because the Negro minority sells its votes to the highest bidder in a political campaign. If it weren't for political considerations, this measure wouldn't get ten votes in the Senate."

The War Department had no immediate comment on Senator Eastland's statements.

The F. E. P. C. was set up by Executive order of the late Franklin D. Roosevelt to police industry against discriminations on account of race, creed, color or national origin.

Pummeling by Southerners as a breeder of racial disorder, the organization is gasping for legislative life against tomorrow's fiscal year-end deadline. Senator Eastland and other Southerners are fighting a move by Senator Dennis Chavez, Democrat, of New Mexico, to appropriate it $446,200—or any part of that amount. They demand an absolute death sentence.

Their filibuster, however, is threatened by a move to limit debate through the parliamentary device of cloture. The decision will come Monday afternoon, unless a compromise is worked out meantime. Two-thirds of the Senators present must favor cloture if the talk is to be cut short.

Only a half dozen Senators were on the floor as Senator Eastland spoke, but the galleries were filled with visitors who had turned out to see how a filibuster works. As the forty-year-old Senator slashed out at Negro soldiers they shifted uneasily in their seats. Some turned covert glances at the Negro men and women among them.

Senator Eastland opened with the same gambit used by his colleague, Theodore G. Bilbo, yesterday. He wasn't filibustering, he said; the whole thing was part of a gigantic plot to Sovietize the United States; the racial purity of the white race must be maintained.

Then he told his fellow Senators what he had heard in Europe. All of it, he said, came from "high-ranking generals," one of them in Paris.

He said the 92d (Negro) Division had the best training and best equipment; it also had Negro officers whom the generals were "forced to commission" for political reasons.

"That division," he said, "could not be placed in an important position in the line. If all our divisions had been like it the Germans would have pushed us to the toe of the Italian boot." . . .

He said it was necessary to disarm "a good many Negro soldiers" in Normandy because they would go to French farmhouses under the pretense of hunting Germans, "call the men out into the yard and hold guns on them while they went in and criminally assaulted members of their family."

Senator Eastland quoted American generals further as authority for a story that French Negro Senegalese troops locked 5,000 German girls in a subway at Stuttgart for five days, "kept them there and criminally assaulted them."

Before the Senate adjourned at 5:14 p. m., Senator Olin Johnston, Democrat, of South Carolina, another F. E. P. C. opponent, obtained a gentleman's agreement to get recognition at the opening of tomorrow's session.

Permanent FEPC

To the Editor: Please allow me to thank President Truman for pointing out that Southern politicians were to blame for the failure of the House Appropriations Committee to provide funds for the FEPC. Truman is to congratulated for showing up these Southerners who stoop to any ruse to get their own outmoded way about un-American discrimination instead of practicing real democracy. Mr. Truman is to be admired for demanding a permanent Fair Employment Practice Act to fight Southern discrimination and to improve the status of Negroes and poor whites there.

I certainly hope the President continues showing up the South and teaching them democracy, so that we Southerners will no longer have to leave our backward states and come to the cultured North for the advantages that only the latter provides.

FEPC Filibuster By Dixie Solons Continues Until After Midnight

WASHINGTON, June 29.—(AP)—The Southern filibuster which brought on a 12 hours and 32 minute continuous Senate session was checked early today when an agreement was reached to vote on a petition to limit further debate.

Senator Taft (R), Ohio, introduced the motion to curtail further discussion after Senator Bilbo, Mississippi Democrat, had yielded the floor after a four hour talk against the Fair Employment Practice Committee.

An important appropriation bill was among measures held in abeyance by the filibuster.

The session began at noon, Thursday, and was still underway at midnight. At 12:12 a.m. Eastern War Time, a quorum was finally produced, with the aid of the Sergeant-At-Arms. If it carries by a two-thirds majority, it would restrict each Senator to one hour's oratory.

The Senate adjourned at 12:32 a.m. (Eastern War Time) today until noon (Friday) after reaching an agreement to vote on the cloture petition after President Truman's appearance in the Senate Monday at 1 o'clock.

Bilbo Continues Filibuster

The filibuster, carried on by Senator Bilbo (D), Mississippi, with the aid of some other Southern Senators, was directed against a motion by Senator Chavez (D), New Mexico, to appropriate $446,200 to finance the activities of the Fair Employment Practice Committee for the next fiscal year which begins Sunday.

Bilbo, standing before a desk piled high with reading matter, spoke for four hours before finally yielding the floor. The balding Mississippi Democrat had characterized his address as the funeral sermon of the FEPC.

After Bilbo lost the floor, on a quorum call, Barkley tried ineffectually to arrange a compromise between the opposing factions. He suggested that FEPC be given $250,000 for the next fiscal year, instead of the $446,200 asked by Senator Chavez (D), New Mexico.

'Funeral' Set Monday

Bilbo, who previously had been adamant for a death sentence against the organization, said he was in no position to do any horsetrading tonight but informed Barkley he would discuss the proposition with other lawmakers — apparently including some Southern House members —tomorrow morning.

Bilbo had said FEPC's actual funeral would be held Monday, the first day of the new fiscal year. He proposed originally to hold the floor until the present fiscal year ends at Saturday midnight, to keep Chavez from offering his amendment to the war agencies appropriation bill giving the FEPC the $446,200 to finance another year's policing of industry against racial and religious discrimination.

(On the other side of the capitol, the House rules committee drove nails into FEPC's coffin by tabling legislation to grant it $125,000.)

Anybody who dropped into the Senate gallery for as long as five minutes found out that Bilbo doesn't like FEPC. He doesn't call it this bill or this measure; it's "this damnable piece of legislation" or "this smooth deliberate scheme to integrate the negro race with the white and foster intermarriage and interbreeding."

Bilbo read editorials from negro newspapers. He read a column by Westbrook Pegler, in dialect. He read an extract from the Daily Worker, but explained he wasn't a Communist. He read letters from Southern friends.

"How long does the Senator intend to speak?" a colleague inquired gently.

"Until FEPC is dead," Bilbo replied.

Chavez charged Bilbo was imperiling the life of 16 war agencies by his filibuster. Bilbo said No, it was Chavez who was doing the damage by his insistence on offering his amendment. Its adoption would require suspension of the rules and a two-thirds majority. Chavez challenged Bilbo to let the Senate vote on it. Bilbo said he wasn't taking any chances.

"I assure my friend from Mississippi," Chavez said, "that he can filibuster until doomsday, but that motion will be offered."

Bilbo said:

"If you are so hell-bent on doing so I may not give you an opportunity to offer it."

Mississippi Senator, Carrying On FEPC Filibuster, Quotes 'High Ranking Generals'

Cloture Move Looming

Their filibuster, however, is threatened by a move to limit debate through the parliamentary device of cloture. The decision will come Monday afternoon, unless a compromise is worker out meantime. Two-thirds of the Senator present must favor cloture if the talk is to be cut short.

Only a half dozen Senators were on the floor as Mr. Eastland spoke, but the galleries were filled with visitors who had turned out in a frolicsome mood to see how a filibuster works. As the 40-year-old eSnator slashed out at Negro soldiers, they shifted uneasily in their seats .

Then he told his fellow Senators what he had heard in Europe. All of it, he said, came from "high ranking generals," one of them in Paris.

Assails Negro Division

He said the Ninety-second (Negro) Division, had the best training and best equipment; it also had Negro officers whom the generals were "forced to commission" for political reasons.

"That division," he said, "could not be placed in an important position in the line. If all our divisions had been like it, the Germans would have pushed us to the toe of the Italian boot.

"The Negro soldier has been an utter and abysmal failure. I'm not saying that out of prejudice. That is what the responsible generals told us.

"Some of the Negro officers deserted their posts, the whole division, without cause, rhyme or reason, would quit fighting."

He said it was necessary to disarm "a good many Negro soldiers" in Normandy because they would go to French farmhouses under the pretense of hunting Germans, "call the men out into the yard and hold guns on them while they went in and criminally assaulted members of their family."

6-30-45

Mr. Eastland quoted American generals further as authority for a story that French Negro Senegalese troops locked 5,00 German girls in a subway at Stuttgart for five days, "kept the mthere and criminally assaulted them."

Mr. Eastland said that there were color lines in all parts of the country, "but down in Dixie we are a little more open with it than they are in the North." He said he was convinced that veterans from Pennsylvania and New York would return from the wars with the same attitude toward the Negro as that held in the South.

FEPC Death Likely as Rules Group Blocks Action on Funds by House

New York Times

By The Ass

WASHINGTON, June 28—The Rules Committee blocked today House action on any new funds for the Fair Employment Practice Committee as Senator Bilbo, Democrat, of Mississippi, prevented consideration of a proposed FEPC appropriation in the Senate.

Ten Rules Committee tabled a measure appropriating $125,000 to wind up the affairs of FEPC within three months, leaving the group no funds with which to operate after Saturday. 6-29-45

The action was taken in executive session without a record vote. The committee had previously refused to clear for House action a bill making the FEPC a permanent satutory agency.

The Rules Committee's determination not to approve any measures dealing with FEPC made it virtually certain that the FEPC would cease to exist at the end of the week.

Representative Colemer, Democrat, of Mississippi, a Rules Committee member, said that, should the Senate vote funds for FEPC in a pending supply bill, House opponents of the agency could block action on the Senate's move.

In the upper chamber, Senator Bilbo's desk was piled high with reading matter, and he announced he was preaching the funeral sermon of the FEPC. He began it yesterday afternoon. 6-29-45

Mr. Bilbo said that FEPC's funeral would be held Monday. That is the first business day of the new fiscal year. He proposes to hold the floor until the present fiscal year ends Saturday night, to Senator Chavez, Democrat, of New Mexico, from offering an amendment to the war agencies appropriation bill giving FEPC $446,200 to finance another year's policing of industry against racial and religious discrimination.

The Mississippian asserted that the proposal was a "smooth deliberate scheme to integrate the Negro race with the white and foster intermarriage and interbreeding."

Mr. Bilbo read editorials from Negro newspapers and an extract from The Daily Worker, but explained he was not a Communist. He read letters from Southern friends. 6-29-45

"How long does the Senator intend to speak?" a colleague asked.

"Until FEPC is dead," Mr. Bilbo replied.

Senator Chavez asserted that he was imperiling the life of sixteen war agencies by his filibuster. Mr. Bilbo said no, adding that it was Mr. Chavez who was doing the damage by his insistence on offering his amendment. Its adoption would require suspension of the rules and a two-thirds majority. Mr. Chavez challenged Senator Bilbo to let the Senate vote on it. The Mississippian said he was not taking any chances.

"I assure my friend from Mississippi," Senator Chavez said, "that he can filibuster until doomsday, but that motion will be offered."

6-29-45

"If you are so hell-bent on doing so I may not give you an opportunity to offer it."

Senator Smears U. S. Negro Troops As Fate of FEPC Hangs in Balance

Eastland Lays Crimes in Europe to Colored Soldiers

By Charles A. Michie
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 30.—A malevolent assault on the integrity and fighting ability of American Negro soldiers in Europe made on the floor of the Senate by Sen. James O. Eastland (D., Miss.) was not confirmed today by the War Dept.

Eastland charged, during a second installment of Southern Democracy's filibuster against the FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee), that Negro soldiers have caused the U. S. A. to "lose prestige all over Europe," that although they only "constituted one-twelfth of the American army . . . yet they were guilty of over one-half the crime."

Officials of the War Dept. said flatly they had "no comment whatever on the charges made by Sen. Eastland." The Senator did not in a single instance credit his information to any official source.

Forgets Some Facts

Eastland also declared there were 33 cases of criminal assault in Normandy from D-Day until May of this year "26 by Negroes and seven by Whites." What he didn't say was that almost all the soldiers left in Normandy when our armies plowed through Europe were service troops, most of them Negroes.

Eastland isn't half the freebooting filibusterer that his colleague Sen. Theodore (The Man) Bilbo, a fellow flower of the Old South, is. He talked for only three and three-quarter hours Friday afternoon and seemed glad to quit for a quorum call.

He was noticeably wilted when he slumped into his chair about 5 p.m. He had been talking vicious, irresponsible talk since 1:15.

Eastland began his afternoon chat before an empty House. Well, almost empty. There were two Republicans on hand, Sen. Wayne Morse of Oregon and Sen. Forrest C. Donnell of Missouri. Not a Democrat, Southern or otherwise, was within earshot. During the afternoon a few members, who didn't have anything better to do, drifted in, got an earful of the Eastland brand of ortatory and retired in hatse.

Even Bilbo Ran Out

Bilbo, who didn't draw much of an audience himself the day before, scuttled in at 3:45. Five minutes was all even he could stand. He didn't show up again until recess.

Sidney Hillman also felt the featherweight of Eastland wrath. He called him one of the "lowest and commonest communists in America," and demanded that he be deported. As a matter of fact, he said beating his manly breast, the FEPC is all a part of a communist plot to take over America. It involves stirring up the Negro, he added in explanation. He said we have more on Hillman than we ever had on Harry Bridges as grounds for deportation.

Sen. Dennis Chavez (D., Mex.), who is leading the fight for an FEPC appropriation if he ever gets to say anything, walked in one door of the Senate chamber, raised his eyebrows at Eastland's Palm Beach back and walked out.

"The Negro race is surely a most inferior race," intoned the American Democrat from Mississippi. "I have information that in the city of Stuttgart, Germany, between 2000 and 5000 "Christian, German white girls" were rounded up, herded into a subway station and there made the playthings of French Senegalese soldiers for four or five days. He didn't give a credit line on that one either.

"We are dealing with an inferior race," Eastland shouted at the empty seats around him and at the tourists in the gallery. "That's why I bring it into this debate. Negroes do not have the creative ability and genius of the white race.

"A man bereft of racial pride is weak," Eastland shouted. "I'm proud of the white race, a superior race, and I'm proud that pure white blood flows in my veins."

Personnel Lists

Then, winding up, Eastland produced the personnel lists of FEPC from cities all over the country. Of course, Bilbo had read them once before, but Eastland figures it isn't really in the record till he reads it. He went over them city by city, making careful note of how many Negroes and how many whites worked in each office.

"The Anglo-Saxon is the forgotten man in America today," he bleated. "This bill is not against discrimination. The whites are being discriminated aganst."

Somehow we missed the way Eastland managed to wangle Thomas E. Dewey into his speech. But he did it.

"The man who betrayed his race," he declared .(Dewey signed an anti-discrimination bill in New York State. Maybe that was it.) "The weakest man who was ever nominated for the Presidency of the United States."

It was at this juicy point that Rep. John E. Rankin (D., Miss.)—just like Eastland except only a Representative—soft-footed into the chamber. He cased the joint, nodded approvingly at Eastland's good, respectable Mississippi sentiments, and plunked himself down on a couch. He was joined by Sen. Burton K. Wheeler (D., Mont.), who has been known to agree with some of the things the Southern gentlemen adhere to.

FEPC Fight Won By Southerners

Birmingham News July 1-1945

WASHINGTON, June 30—(AP)—Shouted objections from Southern Democrats in the House tonight blocked a Senate-approved compromise which would have financed the embattled Fair Employment Practices Committee for a year.

As a consequence, the $752,000,000 war agencies appropriation bill was sidetracked for the week-end, even though the fiscal year expires at midnight. 7-1-45

A temporary arrangement will finance all the departments—among them the OPA, War Production Board and other emergency agencies—except FEPC which will be without funds at midnight. The others are provided for in a deficiency appropriations but it doesn't include FEPC.

Eastman Cites Generals' Words In FEPC Attack

6-30-45

WASHINGTON, June 29—(AP)—Senator Eastland (D-Miss.), carrying on today the Southern filibuster against the FEPC, injected into the long discussion an assertion that Negro troops are "an utter and abysmal failure."

Flailing his arms and jerking his tie askew, the Mississippian declared "high-ranking generals" had told him on a recent European trip that the Negro troops would neither work nor fight.

In Normandy, he shouted, they criminally assaulted members of the families of French farmers.

"And we're asked here," he said, "to set up an unfair preference against a white soldier solely because the Negro minority sells its votes to the highest bidder in a political campaign. If it weren't for political considerations, this measure wouldn't get 10 votes in the Senate."

The FEPC—Fair Employment Practice Committee is its full name—was set up by executive order of the late Franklin D. Roosevelt to police industry against discriminations on account of race, creed, color or national origin.

Death Sentence Asked

Pummelled by Southerners as a breeder of racial disorder, the organization is gasping for legislative life against tomorrow's fiscal year end deadline. Eastland and other Southerners are fighting a move by Senator Chevez (D-N. M.) to appropriate it $446,200—or any part of that amount. They demand an absolute death sentence.

Their filibuster, however, is threatened by a move to limit debate through the parliamentary device of cloture. The decision will come Monday afternoon, unless a compromise is worked out meantime. Two-thirds of the Senators present must favor cloture if the talk is to be cut short.

Only a half-dozen Senators were on the floor as Eastland spoke, but the galleries were filled with visitors who had turned out in a frolicsome mood to see how a filibuster works. As the 40-year-old Senator slashed out at Negro soldiers, they shifted uneasily in their seats. Some turned covert glances at the Negro men and women among them.

Eastland opened with the same gambit used by his colleague Theodore G. Bilbo yesterday. He wasn't filibustering, he said; the whole thing was part of a gigantic plot to sovietize the United States; the racial purity of the white race must be maintained.

6-30-45

"Must Have Harmony"

"We must have racial harmony, we must have racial tolerance in the United States," he said.

Then he told his fellow senators what he had heard in Europe. All of it, he said, came from "high ranking generals," one of them in Paris.

He said the Ninety-second (Negro) Division had the best training and best equipment; it also had Negro officers whom the generals were "forced to commission" for political reasons.

"That division," he said, "could not be placed in an important position in the line. If all our divisions had been like it, the Germans would have pushed us to the toe of the Italian boot.

"The Negro soldier has been an utter and abysmal failure. I'm not saying that out of prejudice. That is what the responsible generals told us.

"Some of the Negro officers deserted their posts, the whole division without cause, rhyme or reason would quit fighting."

Assaults Reported

He said it was necessary to disarm "a good many Negro soldiers" in Normandy because they would go to French farmhouses under the pretense of hunting Germans, "call the men out into the yard and hold guns on them while they went in and criminally assaulted members of their family."

Eastland quoted American generals further as authority for a story that French Negro Senegalese troops locked 5,000 German girls in a subway at Stuttgart for five days "kept them there and criminally assaulted them."

Eastland said there are color lines in all parts of the country, "but down in Dixie we are a little more open with it than they are in the North." He said he was convinced that veterans from Pennsylvania and New York will return from the wars with the same attitude toward the Negro as that in the South.

Nationalists Work for Coalition Based on Hate

Try to Unite GOP Tories, Democratic Bigots

P.M. 7-1-45

By Tom O'Connor

The basic political strategy of the Nationalist movement in America—as explicitly stated in editorials of the Newspaper Axis—is to achieve a new coalition of forces opposed to the "internationalist" and "New Deal" policies of the Roosevelt-Truman wing of the Democratic Party and a smaller progressive section of the Republican Party.

The Nationalists believe that by playing upon the respective prejudices, hates, and fears of reactionary Southern Democrats and reactionary Northern and Western Republicans, they can gather enough strength to snow under the liberal, humanitarian wings of both major parties—those Democrats and Republicans who are concerned with securing a permanent peace by genuine international co-operation, and who believe in social progress at home.

Ultimately, the Nationalists hope to formalize this reactionary, isolationist coalition in a Nationalist Party—discarding the name "Republican" because of Southern prejudice against it. Pending the development of the right circumstances for such a move—the right circumstances being postwar economic chaos—they are anxious to develop informal working alliances on particular issues wherever possible.

Pledges Scrapped

The knifing of FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee) by a coalition of white-supremacy Southern Democrats and anti-labor Northern and Western Republicans in Congress—each group forswearing its party's pledged word in the last national elections—is an instructive example of the manner in which the basic Nationalist political strategy can work out.

That Man Bilbo has been fronting for the coalition in his Senate filibuster. But the best illustration of the technique by which FEPC was assaulted is to be found in the speeches of two members of the House, a Southern Democrat and a Midwestern Republican—the rabid Nationalist John Rankin (D., Miss.) and Clare Hoffman (R., Mich.).

There were two possible approaches to the mobilization of opposition to FEPC.

One was to play upon race prejudice—principally in respect to the Negro, but also, and importantly, in respect to the Jew.

'Plot' Is Seen

The other was to play upon the dislike of business for any governmental regulation of its affairs, and the belief that continuation of FEPC would place further limits on business's cherished "right to hire and fire" in whatever arbitrary fashion it chose—a "right" already restricted by the upsurge of unionism under the Roosevelt administration.

The common denominator between these two approaches, as is so often the case, was the cry of "Communism." On the one hand, FEPC was represented as a Communist plot to turn the country over to the Jews and Negroes. On the other, it was represented as a Communist plot to extend governmental "regimentation" of business.

Rankin worked one side of the street, Hoffman the other. Each yelled "Communism," but Rankin slanted his remarks to appeal primarily to Jew-baiters and the white supremacy crowd, while Hoffman directed his fire principally to the business man.

The remarks of each on the House floor about FEPC were printed prominently and at length in the Chicago Tribune. From there they filtered out to the vermin press, and were printed over and over again in the pro-fascist sheets of small-fry fuehrers the country over—along with suitable original material.

The timing was perfect. Rankin and Hoffman were blowing off at every opportunity on the subject of FEPC during March and April. This gave their speeches time to reach the readers of the vermin press—and don't think there aren't a lot of them—before the issue came up for final disposition.

It's Picked Up

For example, on Apr. 27 Rankin made a speech calling FEPC "Earl Browder's baby," "the most dangerous piece of totalitarian, Communistic legislation ever proposed in the Congress of the United States," which would "stir up race trouble such as this country has never known," and so on. It was reprinted in toto in the June 16 issue of X-Ray, anti-Semitic sheet published in Muncie, Ind., by Court Asher, one of the group of pro-fascists indicted for sedition.

On Apr. 30 Hoffman made a long and rambling speech on FEPC. He worked up to his climax by saying the bill was needless because the Jews were running the country anyhow, and Negroes had more jobs than they deserved. But the nub of his argument was that a permanent FEPC would be a "snooping" agency with "arbitrary" power to interfere in the affairs of businessmen, and should be rejected for the same reason the Wagner Act should be repealed: "it would penalize employers."

It was this latter part of Hoffman's speech which the Chicago Tribune chose to play up in its news columns the next day. The vermin press picked that up, too. For example, the Gentile News, a Chicago hate sheet whose name is self-revelatory, printed the Tribune story verbatim as the lead article in its May issue (see cut).

Omissions

There were certain significant omissions from the list of anti-FEPC propagandists; certain important Nationalists and important Nationalist organs abstained from the fight.

For example, the New York Daily News, bellwether of the Nationalist flock most of the time, said nothing against FEPC editorially, did not play up anti-FEPC stories in its news columns. In fact, one of the few creditable editorials appearing in the News in recent years was the one favoring passage of the Ives-Quinn anti-discrimination bill in New York. That's right, favoring.

The fact that the News laid off on FEPC can be rationally explained only by its large Negro circulation. Professor James H. Sheldon of the Non-Sectarian Anti-Nazi League, which has done an excellent job assembling evidence of the Nationalist fight against FEPC, points out that the News has been pretty tender about Negroes ever since its Harlem circulation started dropping off a couple of years ago because it was playing up "muggings."

The Tribune, while it did not editorialize against FEPC—Chicago's South Side is the second largest Negro community in the country—did give a big play to anti-FEPC stories when they had a "business regimentation" angle.

Pegler Comes Through

But if some Nationalist propagandists sat this one out, Hearst and his hatchet-boy, Westbrook Pegler, made up for any loss. The great poison pen artist of all time wrote for publication in last Tuesday's Hearst papers one of the great scurrilous columns of his career, with FEPC as his butt.

He was thinking, said Pegler, of going into business. He was going to borrow money from John Hartford, head of A&P, and open a school where a person with a good old American name like Smith or Jones could learn how to join a minority and get a job. He was going to have a supply of burnt cork on hand, and give courses in Negro and Jewish dialect. He gave samples of the dialect; they were so raw that even the New York Journal-American, not ordinarily squeamish about Pegler's mouthings, edited them out (but the Washington Times-Herald did not).

The appeal to race prejudice probably could not by itself have built up sufficient strength to kill FEPC in Congress. With both major parties pledged to it, with President Truman supporting it, with labor (except for the Jim Crow railroad brotherhoods) for it, and the bulk of the Catholic and Protestant as well, as Jewish clergy behind it, the race-hatelers were faced with a losing battle.

Pressure Helped

It is unquestionably the fact that the racists were able to pull reactionary Northern and Western business groups and their lobbyists into the anti-FEPC alliance which has brought them to the verge of victory.

The success of this coalition of reaction would give the Nationalists increased confidence that their basic political strategy is sound, that the time soon will be ripe to discard the progressive wing of the Republican Party and unite its Tory wing with Southern Bourbon Democrats in a Nationalist Party, dedicated to isolationism and to turning the clock back six or seven decades in domestic affairs.

Bilbo Lashes Fair Job Bill For 3½ Hours

Courier Journal

Disclaims Filibuster; Scores Mrs. Roosevelt

6-28-45

Washington, June 27 (AP)—For three hours and 32 minutes today, Senator Theodore G. Bilbo said he didn't want the F.E.P.C. in any shape or form. And he said if any senators think this is a filibuster, show up tomorrow and really hear one.

From 12:58 until 4:30, Bilbo droned on about the Fair Employment Practices Committee, charged it was trying to fuse white and Negro races and those who were for it only wanted the Negro vote. He as a Mississippi Democrat didn't need it.

Disclaims Filibuster.

He insisted it wasn't a filibuster but it sure looked the part. It had so much the air of one that Senator McKellar (D., Tenn.) and Majority Leader Barkley of Kentucky decided to seek a compromise.

McKellar pleaded that the situation was threatening a war agencies' appropriation bill, night sessions might be necessary and even the [illegible] fiscal year might end wi[illegible] cleaning up the money m[illegible]ures.

Bilbo said he couldn't help it; those who wanted to stick funds for the F.E.P.C. into the war agency bill were to blame.

So McKellar threw up his hands and moved to recess until noon tomorrow. Bilbo will still have the floor then.

6-28-45

Scores Mrs. Roosevelt.

"And like Tennyson's Brook, I can run on forever," Bilbo said.

Bilbo read from clippings, speeches and books, castigating advocates of the F.E.P.C. He let fly at Eleanor Roosevelt, who has backed the committee in her syndicated column. And he said:

"If this good woman had given one-half of the attention to the rearing and directing of the lives and affairs of her brood that she has been giving trying to force recognition and social equality for the Negro in America, she would not today be embarrassed with headline stories about some of her offspring."

Barkley Gives Up, Offers 6-Month FEPC Compromise

Leather-Lunged Bilbo Seen Likely to Drop Filibuster

PM

By ELIZABETH DONAHUE
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 29.—Senate Democratic Leader Alben Barkley (D., Ky.), despite strong indications that the President's FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee) could win a full year's appropriation, has offered a compromise which cuts the agency's funds in half.

The compromise, already accepted by Sen. Dennis Chavez (D., N. M.), probably will be accepted by filibustering Sen. Theodore Bilbo (D., Miss.) today.

Sen. Theodore 'The Man' Bilbo

In offering the compromise, obviously designed to offset a GOP move toward "cloture"—the rule to limit debate—Barkley walked into one of the most embarrassing political traps in his career as Democratic leader. 6-29-45

Hasty Move

Annoyed at the Republican move to get a cloture vote before the Senate and thus steal the credit from the FEPC supporters, Barkley put up his hasty compromise and then took a two-hour pounding from both the Southern filibusterers and the Republicans.

The cloture motion cannot be voted on until tomorrow under Senate rules. And in order to secure a vote on it then it had to be placed before the Senate last night.

Led by Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.), the Republicans stood together during a gruelling night session, and supported by 11 liberal Democrats, voted overwhelmingly against Barkley's motion to adjourn the Senate.

Barkley's attempt to end the session was greeted as a political move to try and prevent Taft and the Republicans from getting the cloture petition officially presented.

Admits Defeat

Finally Barkley, acknowledging defeat, yielded. But twice in a two-hour wrangle the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate was sent out to round up enough Senators to transact business.

The snarled parliamentary situation which forced the Senate into a rare session lasting until midnight nearly overshadowed the fact that the Barkley compromise is likely to be accepted.

Bilbo informed the Senate that he will consult "with colleagues in the Senate and House" today and announce his decision when the Senate meets at noon.

"Consulting with House members" means that Bilbo will try to get Rep. John Rankin (D., Miss.) to approve the compromise. But Rankin is unlikely to yield. However, with funds for 16 war agencies hanging on the FEPC filibuster, Bilbo is expected to accept Barkley's offer.

Late yesterday the Republicans succeded in getting the necessary 16 Senators to sign a petition favoring the cloture rule.

The petition was started after Barkley failed in a series of backroom conferences to bring Chavez and the Southern Democrats together on a compromise.

Chavez and other supporters of a full appropiration for FEPC still claim they have enough votes to get the agency its money if the Senate will permit a vote directly on that issue. 6-29-45

Chavez and James M. Mead (R., N. Y.) support an appropriation of $446,200 for FEPC. Barkley proposes to cut it to $250,000—an amount which would reduce by almost 50 per cent the effectiveness of the agency which outlaws job discrimination.

Developments late last night followed a four-hour filibuster by Bilbo who yielded only to permit the Senate to pass a $39,000,000,000 War Dept. bill.

Subsequently he permitted other legislation to get consideration late in the evening.

Throughout the Bilbo anti-FEPC tirade, punctuated with insults to Negroes, Catholics and Jews, Republicans and Democrats joined in refusing to allow anyone to interrupt the one-man filibuster. This strategy was designed to prevent any of Bilbo's Southern colleagues from giving the sawed-off Mississippian a rest.

Barkley, who presented his compromise at 11 o'clock last night, stated that he personally favored the $446,200 fund to continue FEPC. He insisted, however, that FEPC, even if it was curtailed, could survive on "contributions."

As soon as Barkley concluded, Taft arose and declared "It is outrageous to filibuster against a general appropriation bill. I don't think the majority leader should do any compromising when two-thirds of the Senate want to vote on FEPC."

Chavez chimed in, "I think the majority leader is more at fault" (than the Southern filibusters).

On the stroke of midnight, the Senate Sergeant-at-Arms had failed to rouse from bed a single Senator needed to make the quorum.

Lacking a quorum Taft was prevented from forcing the cloture petition before the Senate so that it could be voted on tomorrow.

Consequently the petition was delayed another day and cannot now be acted on until Monday at the earliest. It must lie on the desk for two days and then be adopted by two-thirds of the Senate to limit debate to one hour per Senator and thus break the Southern filibuster on the War Agencies bill. 6-29-4

At midnight the Republicans still refused to allow an adjournment.

Despite the fact that the Southerners and Chavez apparently are in a mood for compromise, no authoritative spokesmen would predict that the filibuster is over.

The return of Sens. Richard Russell (D., Ga.) and Burnett Maybank (D., S. C.) from Europe today may signal a resumption of the talkfest by the Dixie Democrats. Russell last year talked for several days against FEPC funds.

At 12:15 a quorum was present and the cloture petition, signed by 23 Senators, was put before the Senate.

The Senate will vote at 1 o'clock Monday on whether to limit debate by cloture if the filibuster is still going at that time.

Earlier the House Rules Committee had tabled action appropriating $125,000 to FEPC to wind up its affairs within three months. This means the agency lacks funds to operate after tomorrow.

Talkingest Senator Trying to Kill FEPC

Detroit Free Press

Free Press Wire Services

WASHINGTON—Theodore G. (The Voice) Bilbo, of Poplarville, Miss., strengthened his claim Thursday as the talkingest man in the United States Senate.

His tonsils were humming with health and his desk was piled high with reading matter. The balding Mississippi Democrat announced that he was preaching the funeral sermon of the Fair Employment Practice Committee.

6-29-45

Bilbo

Bilbo said that FEPC's actual funeral would be held Monday. That's the first business day of the new fiscal year.

He proposes to block action until the fiscal year ends Saturday midnight.

Bilbo began talking Wednesday, continued for four hours Thursday. Then he yielded the floor—for other business.

BILBO WANTS to keep Senator Dennis Chavez, New Mexico, Democrat, from offering an amendment to the War Agencies Appropriation Bill giving FEPC $446,200 for another year's policing of industry against racial and religious discrimination. 6-29-45

On the other side of the Capitol, the House Rules Committee drove nails into FEPC's coffin by tabling legislation to grant it $125,000.

Bilbo read editorials from Negro newspapers. He read a column by Westbrook Pegler, in dialect. He read an extract from the Daily Worker, but explained he wasn't a Communist. He read letters from southern friends.

6-24-45

The Worker

By ART SHIELDS

WASHINGTON.—The Fair Employment Practices Committee has just one more week of life unless Congress provides the funds to carry on the fight against discrimination in industry before the June 30 deadline.

Victory is possible, since the Senate Appropriations Committee voted, 14 to 4, this week, to back an amendment to the War Agencies Appropriations bill, providing $446,000 funds for FEPC. The House Appropriations Committee had deleted an FEPC provision.

Victory is necessary to prevent race riots during reconversion, says Malcolm Ross, FEPC Chairman, who points out that there were 26 such riots in 1919. America had no government protection against job discrimination during that other reconversion period. 6-24-45

Ross will have more to say about this in Madison Square Garden, June 25, when he speaks at the big Negro labor victory rally.

FEPC's road is still rocky, however. Opponents of the bill will be ready to raise points of order to prevent the introduction of a special appropriations amendment in the Senate. A two thirds vote will suspend the Senate rules and prevent such point of order from being raised, and that two thirds vote can't be gotten unless every possible supporter of FEPC is in his seat when the count is taken.

Then after the Senate passes the FEPC amendment the House must act before the June 30 deadline.

Yet the job can be done. The 14 to 4 vote in the Senate Appropriations Committee, shows that Congress is feeling the pressure from the folks back home.

Meanwhile the campaign to get 218 signatures of the House to sign the petition to bring the bill for a permanent FEPC to the floor continues. More than 80 names must still be attached. 6-24-45

The bill won a smashing victory in the House, with a 251 to 105 vote. It will poll a majority in the Senate also if the handful of southern filibusterers can be silenced.

Mostof the Southerners will not take part in the poll tax filibuster. But the Bilbos will still try to talk the bill to death. They can be beaten by the adoption of cloture—the rule to limit debate. The test of the sincerity of every professed anti-polltax Senator will come in the cloture vote.

Citizens writing letters to their Senators or visiting their offices should get them to promise to vote for cloture as well as for the anti-polltax bill.

Republicans Blamed For FEPC Failure

6-26-45

NEW YORK, June 26 — (AP) — Charging the House with "double-dealing" in refusing to pass legislation calling for a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee, Rep. Powell (D., N. Y.) says Republican support of the measure would have resulted in legisaltion on the issue.

"I charge," the Negro congressman said at the annual Negro Freedom rally at Madison Square Garden yesterday "that there has been double-dealing on both sides of the aisle as regards FEPC.

"I further charge that if the Republican party had supported the FEPC the same as it supported the abolition of the poll tax legislation today would be enacted on the FEPC."

Declaring the Negro race was not "Beholden to anyone political party," Powell said, "We will not compromise, we refuse to be neutral, and we are not even going to mark time."

He said one of the results of congressional failure to approve the FEPC "should be an immediate mass migration" of the Negre people "in those sections of America where there is no hope" for them, "leaving the land of doom to rot in its own filth." 6-26-45

President Truman, in a message to the rally, extended "hearty greetings to all who gather to reaffirm the faith in the policies and principles of my lamented predecessor, firm in the conviction that the Fair Employment Practice Committee which he brought into being is an instrument to promote national unity."

Malcolm Ross, chairman of the FEPC, asserted that until race prejudice was "licked there will be no secure place in American industry, for working men and women, for employers, or for the public."

Truman Asks Aides Support FEPC Today

Daily Worker 6-25-45

By ART SHIELDS

WASHINGTON, June 24.—President Truman is understood to have sent a strong message from the West Coast to his White House aides, asking them to spare no effort in mobilizing Democratic senators in support of the anti-job discrimination appropriation measure, which comes before the upper house tomorrow (Monday).

CIO President Philip Murray meanwhile is pressing Republican and Democratic leaders to keep their campaign pledges to back the work of the Fair Employment Practises Committee. 6-25-45

Funds to continue the temporary wartime FEPC expire June 30. FEPC will be dead July 1, unless Congress passes the Senate amendment to the War Agencies Appropriation Bill to provide funds.

Murray raised the campaign pledge issue in wires to Herbert Brownell chairman of the Republican National Committee, and to Robert Hannegan, Democratic Committee chairmen.

"Failure to support the continuation of the wartime agency can only be construed as a failure to live up to the party's pledge to press for the creation of a permanent Fair Employment Practises Committee," he told Brownell.

The CIO leader reminded Hannegan that: "The Democratic Party waged its election campaign on the basis of President Roosevelt's program.

"The creation of the Fir Employment Practises Committee," continued Murray, "was one of the late President great contributions to the growth of American democracy in the course of the war, and failure to extend the life of the agency would be a grave departure from his program."

Yet the peril that Murray speaks of is great. The life of FEPC hangs by a thread. Unless the Senate votes two to one (by a two-thirds vote) the FEPC appropriation item will not be acted upon. 6-25-45

The two-thirds vote would suspend the Senate rules, which otherwise would permit opponents to raise points of order against voting on the FEPC item. The point-of-order crowd would argue that the item should have been acted on by the House. But provision for FEPC funds had been kept out of the War Agencies Appropriations bill in the House by a tricky maneuver of the House Appropriations Committee, which in turn was under pressure from a clique of Negro-baitners in the powerful Rules Committee.

FIGHTING CHANCE 6-25-45

A two-thirds vote is hard to get. But the case against job discrimination is very strong. Few northern Senators dare to vote against an FEPC measure. So there's a real, fighting chance to win this decisive battle this week.

Speed is needed with the June 30 deadline just one week off. The House has to ratify the appropriation after the Senate has acted. Yet FEPC's foes want to delay a vote till Sen. Burnet Maybank (DSC) and Sen. Richard Russell (D-Ga) return from a tour of Europe, and Sen. Tom Connally (D-Tex) is back from San Francisco.

All three are anti-FEPC.

Mass support for the right-to-work masure was reflected in one of the biggest mass meetings that Washington has seen. More than 1,500 Negroes and whites, with the two races almost evenly divided, overflowed the Interior Department Auditorium this weekend and applauded such speakers as Frank Harper, Solicitor General of the Department of the Interior; Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Canda Lee, noted Negro actor; Thomas Richardson, Negro leader and vice-president of the CIO's United Federal Workers union; George G. Higgins, representative of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, Marcus Cohen of the American Jewish Committee; Rev. Francis McPeak chairman of the Social Welfare Committee of the Washington Federation of Churches, and others.

12-Hour Senatorial Talk On FEPC Brings On 'Rationing' Move

Birmingham News

6-29-45

BY FRANCIS J. KELLY

WASHINGTON, June 29—(AP)—A 12-hour, 32-minute session that ended early today brought the Senate face-to-face with a decision whether to ration oratory.

Sen. Taft (R., Ohio) and 31 colleagues representing both major parties presented a rarely-accepted cloture petition to limit senatorial debate.

Most of the free and unlimited conversation which began at noon yesterday centered on a controversial proposal to vote operating funds to the Fair Employment Practice Committee, a division of government which has a minimum of support from Southern senators.

THERE WERE OTHER MATTERS—Sen. Tom Connally's report on the United Nations Conference, final Senate approval of the long-disputed price control extension bill and a 38½ billion dollar War Department appropriation.

But the great bulk of the wordage was spilled on the FEPC proposition. Sen. Bilbo (D., Miss.) and a potent, talkative bloc of Southerners opposed it on their contention that it spelled trouble between the races, friction in industry and governmental meddling in business. 6-29-45

Sen. Chavez (D., N. M.) fought for it just as vigorously, contending the Southerners were attempting to thwart the will of a majority of the Senate.

The committee, established by executive order of the late President Roosevelt, is designed to prevent discrimination because of race, color, creed or national origin.

CHAVEZ SEEKS TO WRITE A $446,200 appropriation for FEPC into a $770,000,000 omnibus bill carrying funds to support a score of war agencies such as selective service, the War Production Board and the Office of Defense Transportation.

Theoretically, if the bill isn't passed by midnight tomorrow, the end of the current fiscal year, none of the agencies will have any operating funds. Practically, the situation won't be quite that acute.

The filibuster against FEPC was based on the nearness of that deadline. 6-29-45

Under Senate rules, the cloture petition can't be voted on until Monday. Unless a deal is worked out meanwhile, it will be called up immediately after President Truman gets through asking the chamber in person to ratify the United Nations Charter.

Attempts to apply cloture bob up almost every session. If successful, it means every senator is limited to a total of one hour of talk on the pending question.

Georgians think immediate establishment of F.E.P.C. a necessary prelude to peace

By Eleanor Roosevelt

HYDE PARK—I have just received from the State of Georgia a copy of a petition which some citizens of that state have sent to the members of the Congress of the United States, urging the enactment of the Fair Employment Practice Commission bill.

"Establishment of a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission is supported by some 60-odd national organizations," the petition states. "Both the Republican Party and the Democratic Party are committed to such legislation by their party platforms as well as by the fact that the presidential nominees of both parties promised support to this legislation in the last national campaign. 6-26-45

"We are approaching the end of our military war. Events are moving swiftly. We cannot afford to permit our actions to lag behind the tempo of irresistible forces."

The petition is signed by many of the finest and most progressive white citizens of Georgia, as well as by many highly respected colored citizens. Mass meetings have been held in favor of the enactment of this legislation in both Washington and New York, and, I imagine, in other places.

FROM OUR DOMESTIC point of view, I think it is of great importance to us that we establish once and for all the principle that there shall be no discrimination in economic opportunity among our citizens. It is not only the colored people who are concerned. We have many other minority groups who have felt the pressure of discrimination when it came to the question of employment.

We have fought a war to establish the dignity of the individual—his freedom and his equal rights as a human being. We cannot very well permit at home conditions which would curtail, or make more difficult, that freedom from want which is one of the basic freedoms that must exist side by side with political and religious freedom.

Most of us believe it essential that we accept as a responsibility of government, in conjunction with industry and agriculture, the obligation to provide full employment. We know that only with full employment can everybody have a job. But if jobs are curtailed, we must prevent the bitterness that would come if the curtailment occurred largely among minority groups.

THIS IS IMPORTANT not only as a domestic issue, but as an international issue. The peoples of the world who are looking at the United States are sizing up our attitude toward them in relation to our attitude toward the citizens belonging to minority groups in our own country. These people of foreign nations will lack confidence in their equality of opportunity, where we are concerned, if they see us deny that equality to minority groups at home.

The courage shown by the people of Georgia should be an inspiration to the people in the rest of our country, and I hope that we will overwhelmingly register our wishes with our representatives for economic democracy within our borders.

No Relief To Negroes

Atlanta Journal

Governor Arnall has been thrown into a great quagmire because of the statement ascribed to him at Louisville, Ky. last Tuesday on the Negro question. Quoting from the words of an interview with the governor, a Louisville Times reporter reported Mr. Arnall as saying: "What the hell difference does it make if you sit down and eat with Negroes, visit them in their homes, and talk to them." The governor denies such a statement of his views. And as a consequence, he released to the Associated Press on Wednesday a follow-up statement should be of greater concern to Negroes of Georgia, at least, than the first.

He professes a deep interest in and love for Negroes. He says that he believes in "economic equality" for the Negro but in the next breath, he states his opposition against the FEPC, which is the only agency ever designed to guarantee economic equality for Negroes. He states further, that in his own state, where the colored people constitute better than a third of the population, they have always voted in the general elections, and thus he believed in political justice for them. In brief, Governor Arnall wants economic equality for Negroes but he does not desire a Fair Employment Practices Committee to bring it about; he wants Negroes to vote as a matter of justice and fairness, but he does not want them to be permitted to participate in the established and recognized machinery which will assure them an effective ballot in the local and state government. 6-29-45

Of course, what the governor is saying represents his own personal views, and hence is part of the American pattern of free speech. Nevertheless, as Negroes, we could never hope to enjoy a status of full equality, which is the only reasonable course Negroes should and can pursue. Equality of privilege, equality of economic opportunity political equality, and every other privilege and opportunity guaranteed to every other citizen, is what the Negro wants. Some of these the Negro must have here and now. Among these are political equality and economic equality, in their broadest and most liberal interpretations. These can't wait. Negroes must have an opportunity to vote for the type of government under which he is forced to live and he must have an opportunity to compete in an open and free market for a living.

FEPC Filibuster

The Washington Post

Filibusters are never threatened by men willing to trust to majority rule. The diehard foes of the Fair Employment Practice Committee, for example, know that their colleagues in the Senate, if given an opportunity, would vote funds for continuance of the agency. So they propose to frustrate the will of the majority by a species of legislative blackmail—not scrupling to hold up matters of vital national and international concern which await congressional action. This is the pattern they followed in the House as well as in the Senate. In the House, legislation to establish a statutory Fair Employment Practice Commission was kept bottled up by the Rules Committee, so that members could not vote on it. And now in the Senate, a handful of bankrupt men propose to forbid even an appropriation for the existing FEPC created by executive order four years ago. 6-27-45

With a small staff and limited funds, the FEPC has worked effectively to break down the barriers of bigotry in American industry and to open up job opportunities for the members of disadvantaged minority groups. In doing this, the agency helped significantly toward full mobilization of the Nation's manpower for prosecution of the war. It was intolerable that racial prejudice should have kept men out of mines and mills when men were desperately needed to carry on vital war work. And it remains intolerable today. The war is not ended, and the fullest use of manpower on our production lines is necessary to bring it to its speediest possible conclusion.

In the reconversion problems that will beset us with the war's end, the FEPC will be no less urgently needed. It will be needed if the change-over from war to peace production is to be accomplished with minimum dislocation and with a decent regard for minority rights. It will be needed as a symbol of the Government's concern if we are to preserve the faith of minority groups in the democratic process. It will be needed if the education toward tolerance to which all Americans must subscribe is to be accelerated. It is against all this, against the elementary concepts of fair play, that the filibusterers aim to set themselves. We hope that an outraged Senate will sweep them aside. 6-27-45

F. E. P. C. Rally Protests House Delay on Bill

Truman in Wire to Meeting Here Reiterates Need for an Anti-Bias Commission

Eleven speakers, representing numerous religious and racial minorities, warned last night that discontinuation of the Fair Employment Practices Commission will undermine morale at the front and at home by jeopardizing American war aims, will weaken this country's international prestige at a critical time in history, and will lead, in the post-war era, to intensified friction on the domestic scene.

The speakers, addressing a rally at Town Hall, 123 West Forty-third Street, were unanimous in their denunciations of the Congressmen responsible for thwarting House action on a pending bill to create a permanent F. E. P. C. while simultaneously cutting off further appropriations for the existing temporary agency established by President Roosevelt.

President Harry S. Truman indorsed the protest meeting, sponsored by the Council Against Intolerance in America and forty other organizations, in a telegram reaffirming his belief that it is "unthinkable" to abandon the principles of F. E. P. C.

"I desire now to reiterate to the F. E. P. C. rally and to my countrymen what I said in my message to Chairman (Adolph J.) Sabath (of the House Rules Committee)," President Truman wrote. "The principle and policy of fair employment practice should be established permanently as a part of our national law."

Pearl S. Buck, author, keynoted the meeting in the opening speech by stating: "All I can say is that those of us who are not white, adult, Protestant gentile males must fight this narrow provincialism and this dangerous prejudice with all our might, not so much because it makes us absurd in the eyes of the world—as it does—not because it is giving American prestige in Asia away to Russia—as it is—but simply because our bread depends upon it."

The Rev. John LaFarge, editor of the Roman Catholic journal "America," urged the continuation of F. E. P. C. not as "mere political prudence" but as "a simple proposal of right and wrong."

Canada Lee, Negro actor, took issue with those who believe it impossible to legislate against prejudice. He noted that some existing laws legislate in favor of prejudice, such as the rule banning Negro reporters from the press section in Congress and relegating them to public galleries, where note-taking is prohibited.

Other speakers included Senator Dennis Chavez, of New Mexico; Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, president of Federal Council of Churches in America; Rabbi J. X. Cohen, of the Free Synagogue; Walter White, Negro author; John Brophy, labor leader, and Captain J. A. Freeman, Veterans of Foreign Wars.

FEPC OPPONENTS IN SENATE READY FOR FILIBUSTER

Friends Of Agency Hope To Get Appropriation For Continuance

Birmingham Age-Herald

WASHINGTON, June 24—(AP)—Senate foes of the Fair Employment Practices Commission served notice today they will resort to filibuster tactics if the agency's friends insist on funds to keep it alive after July 1. 6-26-45

"Why should we throw away that money?" demanded Sen. Bilbo (D., Miss.). "I will talk till Christmas if necessary to stop funds for a lot of peckerwoods to go around and meddle into other people's business."

Sen. Johnston (D., S. C.) said he would help and that he understood there were a lot of other senators who felt the same way. Asked if that meant a filibuster, both senators said they would prefer to call it "extended explanation."

Friends of FEPC hope to write $446,200 for it into the war agencies appropriation bill which comes up for Senate action tomorrow. The measure carries $771,538,765 to finance a score of war-born agencies in the fiscal year beginning July 1. Among them are the War Labor Board, the Office of Defense Transportation and the Office of War Information.

House Refuses Funds

The House refused any funds for FEPC, but the Senate appropriations committee authorized Sen. Chavez (D., N. M.) to offer from the Senate floor an amendment to provide the $446,200. Under the Senate's rules, a two-thirds vote will be required for its adoption.

Chavez is the author of legislation which would create a permanent FEPC with broader powers than the present agency which President Roosevelt set up by executive order to deal with employment discrimination because of race, creed or color. Sen. Ellender (D., La.) and others have said they would filibuster if that measure ever comes up on the Senate floor. It has been approved by the education and labor committee.

Aside from FEPC, the only point of controversy in the war agencies appropriation bill is the amount to be allotted OWI. 6-25-45

OWI Request Is Cut

The House cut OWI's request of $42,000,000 down to $18,000,000, but the Senate committee raised it back to $39,670,215 after President Truman and high military leaders said the agency's overseas operations would have to be taken over by the Army if the funds were denied.

Sen. Chandler (D., Ky.) has voiced objections to what he termed attempting to "export democracy" to Europe "by propaganda." If this country does that, he said, it cannot object to efforts to "export communism" to it.

OWI, however, has strong bipartisan support, and Senate leaders said they thought there would be no difficulty over the appropriation for it.

FEPC and Jobs

Rich Mond Times Dispatch

A CONSTANT and continuing effort to provide adequate job opportunities for colored persons, especially in the postwar era, when the Negro soldiers and sailors return to civil life, is of great importance. While the sort of permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee that is provided for in the pending NORTON bill impresses us as apt to do our colored citizens more harm than good, it is essential that reasonable protection be given to colored workers in the coming years.

The best solution of this complicated problem remains to be determined. REPRESENTATIVE CLIFTON WOODRUM, of Roanoke, who is opposed to the NORTON bill—like every other Southern legislator of whom we have knowledge—said recently on the floor of the House:

"In my judgment great good could come of a sensible and reasonable racial-relations division in the Department of Labor. A group dedicated to improving race relationships and understanding in the economic field by the application of the principles of reason and justice. I should certainly like to see it honestly tried." 6-23-45

Here is a suggestion that is worth pondering. Incoming LABOR SECRETARY SCHWELLENBACH may have some ideas on the subject. He intends to shake up the department which MISS PERKINS has been administering for the past 12 years, and MR. WOODRUM'S proposal might appeal to him. 6-23-45

Continuation of the FEPC, as now constituted, is desirable, in the absence of anything better. This agency expires June 30, unless appropriations for its further operation are made available by Congress. For a time, it appeared that both the new type of FEPC and the old type would be liquidated in committee, but it seems now that funds to keep the existing agency alive probably will be forthcoming. It functions without the drastic penalties provided in the NORTON bill, and relies more heavily on persuasion to achieve its ends. It can do a good deal after the war to provide job opportunities for minority groups.

At the same time, it would seem definitely worth while for CONGRESSMAN WOODRUM'S proposal to be explored further. He did not go into detail concerning it on the House floor, but perhaps he will do so shortly.

FEPC Must Go On

Daily Worker

TWO weeks ago it seemed almost certain that the temporary FEPC was doomed. The House Appropriations Committee had denied funds to the anti-discrimination agency. And it appeared likely that a powerful group of polltax Senators would be able to block Senate action restoring the appropriation. It was believed by many that the only hope was to get the permanent FEPC bill passed as soon as possible. 6-22-45

Against this background the action of the Senate Appropriations Committee Wednesday in restoring the $599,000 for FEPC cut by the House Committee is all the more significant.

Here is a clear-cut victory for the vigorous campaign on behalf of FEPC waged by Negro, labor and other groups. This pressure is the only explanation for the decision of all but one of the Republicans on the committee, most of them cool to FEPC and anti-polltax legislation, to vote for restoring the appropriation.

As President Truman has put it, it would be "unthinkable" if FEPC were eliminated at this time. It would be a major blow at the national unity still urgently required to beat Japan. It would be a bitter affront to the Negro and to all minorities, a serving of notice that they will be thrown on the industrial ash-heap as soon as the war is over.

It would be "unthinkable"—but it is still not impossible that FEPC will be eliminated. One of the leading Senate polltaxers, Kenneth D. McKellar (D-Tex), is presiding officer of the Senate, and it will probably be necessary to overrule him by a two-thirds vote to get the FEPC appropriation on the floor. Even after passing the Senate, FEPC will still be subjected to tricky parliamentary attacks in the House.

So it will take vigilance plus plenty of pressure on Congress to assure approval of the FEPC appropriation. This is the first step. Then the campaign for the permanent FEPC bill must be intensified and strengthened. FEPC has become an integral part of the democratic American tradition. It cannot be discontinued.

FEPC Can Be Won Now

PM

THE NATION'S first permanent Fair Employment Practice Committee, established by New York's Ives-Quinn law, begins to function Monday. 6-24-45

As in the case of most other major advances in social progress made in America, New York State has been the first to respond to the pressure of necessity and popular demand. The elimination of the barbaric practice of discrimination in employment is on the order of the day in the entire nation. There will be no let-up in the fight to gain this until at least the instruments for realizing it have been established and are functioning properly.

The New York law was won because the demand for it was so overwhelming and so insistent that a group of reactionary Republicans that tried to block it at the recent session of the State Legislature were thoroughly routed. This was one law that was literally dictated and spelled out by the people of the state.

Despite the pledge contained in the 1944 GOP election platform on behalf of FEPC, the fact that no such committees are being established in such states as California, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Connecticut and elsewhere must be laid directly at the door of the Republicans. The GOP blocs in the legislatures of those states lined up almost solidly to defeat proposals similar to the New York measure.

But the central fight, of course, is that taking place in Washington today. At this writing, no funds have yet been voted for the continuation of the temporary FEPC. It is an ironical twist of fate that, unless those funds are voted at once, the nation's wartime FEPC will technically go out of existence at the moment the New York State FEPC begins to function. 6-24-45

The battle for an appropriation for the temporary wartime FEPC must be continued until won. At the same time, however, it is essential that the struggle for a permanent FEPC be renewed with all the force popular opinion can muster. At this moment, that requires that congressmen be gotten to sign the discharge petition which will dislodge the permanent FEPC bill from the House Rules Committee and permit it to come to the floor for a vote.

With cutbacks hitting the country at an increasing rate, the problem of Negro employment is becoming ever more acute. We cannot wait much longer for effective action against Jimcrow or discrimination against other groups in jobs.

As for the New York FEPC, it has a special responsibility now in demonstrating its effectiveness. The people, who have won the fight to establish it, now have the additional job of maintaining vigilance to see that it does its work right.

Move to Kill FEPC Hit on House Floor

Daily Worker

6-27-45

Daily Worker Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 26. — Rep. George H. Bender (R-O), today accused Chairman Clarence Cannon (D-Mo) of the House Appropriations Committee of subterfuge in regard to FEPC.

Rep. Cannon promptly developed a case of FEPC nerves, with Republicans joining in defensively in an attempt to explain their various positions.

Meanwhile, in the Senate, the motion to restore funds for FEPC, which Sen. Dennis Chavez (D-NM), is to make on behalf of the Senate Appropriations Committee, awaited completion of debate on the War Agencies bill, which may come tomorrow. Southern opponents will attempt to prolong action awaiting Sens. Richard B. Russell (D-Ga), and Burnet R. Maybank (D-SC), who are slated to return from Europe Saturday. But the bill must be on the President's desk Saturday or the war agencies will be without funds.

Rep. Bender, a forthright supporter of FEPC, describing the altercation with Cannon on the floor of the House, said later:

"I said that while he was telling Congress he did right by FEPC, in effect his committee wrung her neck by reporting out funds to liquidate the agency. He claimed that they just voted to extend the agency three months subject to legislative action. I said we weren't operating under legislative action, but an executive order. 6-27-45

"I told him moreover that there was no reason for his committee to fail to include appropriations for the agency."

SOUTHERN EDITORS TAKE CRACKS AT THE FEPC

The Plain Dealer

Atlanta. (ANP)—The position of two Southern newspapers, the Atlanta Constitution and the Birmingham Age-Herald, last week gave moral support to the fight being waged in congress against both appropriations for the war agency and enactment of permanent FEPC legislation. 6-29-45

John Temple Graves, who in years past has posed as a "friend of the Negro" and self styled "states rights liberal," sniping at the present and proposed FEPC, came forth in his Birmingham Age Herald column with a suggestion that the southern states set up little fair employment commissions of their own.

"Nothing parliamentary the south does or can do to stop passage of the proposed permanent federal fair employment practices commission will be too extreme," asserts Mr. Graves. "To defeat the bill will be to serve the Negro as much as the white man in the south, the employed as much as the employer. It is a monstrosity. That President Truman should have endorsed it is a comment only on the total inability of anybody outside the south, no matter how well intentioned, to understand the situation.

"They just don't understand, and we of this part of the country have to fight them with our fingers crossed in the sense of not holding it against them even as we utterly oppose them.

"Meanwhile the south needs fair employment practices commissions of its own. Not the trouble-making monstrosity they have set up in New York, and certainly not the social reform affair the present federal one at Washington has become and the proposed permanent would be. But, rather, state committees devoted in good faith to assisting the Negro here to all the economic opportunity and advancement he can take. It would not deny southern employers the right to employ whom they please and it would certainly make no attempt to eliminate racial preferences by law. 6-29-45

"But with prestige and public backing enhanced by the sympathy it would be known to have for southern institutions and points of view, it could help the Negro towards better economic chances in these peacetimes coming, and to the blessed tune of good will between races."

The Atlanta Constitution, while not quite as caustic as Mr. Graves, appeared peeved over the fact that more than 700 Georgians of both races signed a petition forwarded to congressmen urging them to support FEPC legislation.

"A number of Atlanta's citizens have signet a petition, which is being circulated for other signatures asking congress to support President Harry S. Truman's request that legislation creating a permanent fair employment practices committee be enacted," it said.

"The Constitution, appreciating forthrightness and decision, sincerely regrets it cannot lend its endorsement to the present proposal. None can dispute the principle of the FEPC. Certainly no American citizens should be discriminated against because of religion or race.

"The Constitution wishes to make it clear it withholds support of the FEPC for reasons other than those usually advanced. There are claims the FEPC requires employers to hire Negroes. That is not true. There are charges the FEPC would take over the right of an employer to hire the workers he wishes. That is not true. Those are the claims of ignorance and prejudice and they are unworthy of acceptance. The FEPC legislation as proposed does not make it obligatory to hire any person. It establishes no quota of any race or religion which must be hired. It sets up no percentages. Those charges, often published, are not true.

"Nevertheless, the bill is an attempt to legislate social and economic morals. There is a police or enforcement provision. It is a spiritual relation of the late prohibition legislation. It is at once obvious that a growing enforcement force would follow this attempt at coercion in the field of mortality, just as it did in the unhappy prohibition legislation with its army of shooting marauding enforcement officers. We do not believe there would be this particular phase of it in the enforcement of an FEPC, but there would, of necessity, be a national enforcement department. 6-29-45

"The Constitution does not agree that coercion by police enforcement can bring about the desired result. It believes the principal and objective sought would be farmed and retarded by the bill as introduced. A bill providing for conciliation and application to government contracts is quite different from one which applies generally to all businesses affected by interstate commerce and employing more than six persons, with police provisions for enforcement. It is an attempt to make social and economic morality a matter for the police. We respectfully dissent."

Fair and Full Employment

The FEPC

THE six members of the Rules Committee who are keeping from House consideration the bill to create a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission are playing with fire.

All of them are Democrats. All are from Southern and Border States. They constitute half the membership of the committee that decides when and if bills shall be sent to the floor for debate and disposition.

The two Northern Democrats and four Republicans on the Committee voted last week to report the Norton FEPC bill to the House, as President Truman had requested. The six reactionaries voted against doing so. There was a tie. The motion was lost. The bill remains in committee.

ANY INJURY the Democratic Party may suffer from the schism over poll taxes and FEPC will be slight compared to the injury it is likely to inflict on the Nation as a whole.

The racial problem is bound to be further aggravated by this stifling of legislation designed to secure equality of economic opportunity for the Negroes.

That problem is nothing to trifle with.

The FEPC was created by President Roosevelt by executive order, as a temporary war measure. The purpose was to promote maximum war production.

An advisory body, without statutory authority, the FEPC achieved a reputation that justified the demand that it be made a legal and permanent institution. The Republican Party recognized this demand in its 1944 platform.

Yet, when a bill is introduced in Congress to set up a permanent FEPC, a half-dozen members of the House prevent it from coming to a vote.

WE CAN'T have full employment until we have fair employment. We can't have maximum production as long as a tenth of our population is discriminated against in getting and holding jobs.

The economic discrimination from which the Negroes suffer is responsible for far more than bitter race feeling.

The excess illiteracy, crime and disease among the Negroes are related to the poverty and overcrowding to which this discrimination leads.

As long as these conditions exist, the Negroes, as a race, are effectually barred from making the contribution to our national economy which, if given the opportunity, they are not only able but anxious to make.

The "Negro question" is no longer a Southern matter. As a result of migration it has become a national concern, affecting the North as well.

The "Negro problem" is neither a Negro nor a white problem, but a problem for which both Negroes and whites are responsible, and which both races must work together to solve.

THE rise of the Negroes from slavery to their present estate is one of the marvels of history. They could not have achieved as much as they have without white assistance. Their leaders admit this. They admit, too, that further progress requires inter-racial co-operation.

The Negroes have their responsibilities, as well as their rights. They must recognize that by coming into Northern cities in great waves they have created problems of housing and adjustment which it will take time to solve. Those who feel like pushing whites around will do well to get the chips off their shoulders. They can gain nothing by force. A minority, they will always get the worst of a fight. They should be patient.

Yet it is futile to counsel the Negroes to patience unless it is accompanied by tangible evidence that an honest attempt is being made to obtain for them the justice to which they are entitled.

Obstructionism in the House Rules Committee, and the obvious disinclination in our own City Hall in Detroit to come to grips with a delicate and stubborn problem, weaken the influence of moderate Negro leaders and play into the hands of the firebrands.

The tension is bound to increase when nearly a million Negroes in the armed forces are added to other millions seeking to obtain or retain jobs in the reconversion period.

THE creation of a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission is one of the lesser contributions that can be made to the easing of this tension.

A petition signed by 218 members of the House can discharge the Committee and get the Norton bill out of its pigeonhole.

Already 125 members are said to have agreed to this action. Any member of the House, with a full understanding of the dangerous possibilities inherent in further delaying, or defeating, the FEPC bill should sign the petition to bring it to a vote.

A little group of wilful men in a single committee of one branch of Congress should not be allowed to invite upon the country the consequences of their personal or regional prejudices.

TIME OR LAW IN F. E. P. C.

If there is one sound, unescapable principle in the race relationships of industry, it is that a man should be paid according to the importance, the skill and the volume of work he does, and not according to the color of the hands that do the work. This principle admits of no denial that has reason, justice or morals behind it. The question now is whether law or time will give the better assurance of acceptance of this principle. In those regions where the wages and consequent living standards of Negroes are lowest, the enforcement of the Fair Employment Practices Code will be balked in one way or another. If no other method of circumventing the law will be found, ostracism will be the painful lot of the Negro who attempts to hold a job by force of law. Time undoubtedly will operate in the other direction among those who have shared with Negroes the vigils and the dangers of war. The impasse comes when Negroes say, not unnaturally, "Time is too slow."

NEGRO RALLY TOLD TO FIGHT RACE BIAS

Mass migrations and picket campaigns were among the strong measures of protest advocated last night for the Negro people in the event that the Congress fails to establish a permanent Fair Employment Practice Committee.

The Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr. of Harlem addressing the third annual Negro Freedom rally attended by more than 20,000 persons at Madison Square Garden, said:

"In those sections of America where there is no hope for the Negro people there should be an immediate mass migration, leaving the land of doom to rot in its own filth," declared Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr. of Harlem, at the third annual Negro Freedom rally, attended by more than 20,000 persons at Madison Square Garden.

"Wherever we are concentrated in the North, West and Far West, we shall—along with the right-thinking whites of our areas—conduct picket campaigns to make sure that there shall be no discrimination. We did it before Pearl Harbor, and we can do it now."

He explains that by migration he means leaving those sections of the country where the people saw no hope for their futures.

President Truman sent a message to the rally reiterating his support of the bill that would make the FEPC a permanent agency of the Federal Government.

Some of the speakers advocated closer collaboration between the United States and Russia and greater autonomy for the peoples of India and the Far East. Speakers included Oscar Ewing, vice-chairman of the Democratic National Committee; Malcolm Ross, chairman of the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee; Salvatore Garcia Aguerro, member of the Cuban Senate.

Miss Ruth Henning, 24-year-old war worker of 1798 Pacific street, Brooklyn, was chosen "Miss Negro Victory Worker of 1945" and was given a War Bond.

Break the Filibuster

Daily Worker

ON THURSDAY Negro troops carried out successful landings on six islands in the Marianas.

On the same day Sen. Theodore Bilbo of Mississippi continued his filibuster against FEPC with unspeakable insults against the Negro people.

Of course, other minorities such as the Negroes and the Jews were subjected to abuse by this bigoted Ku Kluxer who is a member of the United States Senate by virtue of the polltax and the votes of less citizens than are required to elect a Congressman in many states.

But the Negroes were as always Bilbo's particular target. Indeed, he is all for preparing to fight them in the next war which he says will be a "race war."

This disgraceful performance has been taken all too lightly by Bilbo's colleagues in the Senate. Bilbo is no clown, and this filibuster against the right of Negroes to work for a living is no laughing matter.

What kind of contribution is this filibuster making to the morale of our armed forces and to the hundreds of thousands of Negroes in our Army, many thousands of them now in the Pacific? 6-30-45

What kind of contribution is this racist raving to the serious task of enlisting the aid of the colonial peoples of Asia in the war against Japanese imperialism?

What kind of contribution is Bilbo making to American democracy when with the aid of a handful of polltax colleagues he paralyzes the effective functioning of the Senate?

And how will it look to all the nations of the world that the great debate in the Senate on a charter dedicated to international peace and justice is preceded by this mockery of everything decent and democratic?

Bilbo and his side-kick from Mississippi, Sen. Eastland, have been talking fascist doctrine on the floor of the United States Senate. This filibuster is a menace to the sort of postwar America to which all Americans, regardless of race, creed or color look forward.

It is a menace because it has not been answered by the Senate. It has not been combatted, let alone defeated.

Instead, Republican and Democratic leaders pledged to support FEPC have been talking compromise, have been discussing the possibility of granting FEPC funds for but half a year. 6-30-45

But there must be no compromise with Bilbo. There must be no concessions in the United States Senate to fascist race doctrines and to the Ku Klux Klan.

Is the conscience of the Senate so atrophied by the tradition that it is an exclusive gentleman's club that not even the most progressive of Senators can get up to speak his mind, that not a single voice has been raised to question the fitness of Bilbo to be a Senator?

If there was ever a time for the people to speak up in anger and indignation, this is it. The filibuster must be broken. FEPC must be continued without restrictions or limitations.

BILBO TO THE RESCUE

By Charles N. Feidelson

Even opponents of the FEPC must find the cavortings of Messrs. Bilbo and Eastland profoundly distasteful. Senator Bilbo has been filibustering against giving this agency any recognition at all. He is not only "agin" having it as a war measure, he is prepared to bring other war and regular agencies to a standstill if only he can accomplish his purpose of throttling the FEPC. So he takes his Bilboesque way, which he himself has compared to Tennyson's brook—"for men may come and men may go, but I go on forever." And he does so to the vast chagrin of even his Southern colleagues who dislike the FEPC as much as he does, but who realize that there are other things in heaven and earth which deserve their attention. He has contrived to make both Democratic and Republican colleagues willing to resort to the painful device of cloture. 7-2-45

Long ago the country learned what Bilboism is. Certainly on the Senate floor it stands for the vulgarest malice and the most unblushing use of congressional immunity. The other day, for example, the senator found it convenient to attack Mrs. Roosevelt for her support of the FEPC. And how does he do so? By saying in effect that if she had been a better mother her children would not have given her so much trouble. Now that is Mississippi gallantry, that is fair play according to the Bilbo lexicon. Because Elliott Roosevelt has figured in headlines recently, and not too creditably, his mother is held responsible. This is the sort of thing we grew accustomed to when her husband was alive. But there was reason to expect, in view of the sad change which has taken place in her life, she would no longer be subjected to unwarranted aspersions upon a noble career.

Not to be outdone by his fellow Mississippian, Senator Eastland enters the fray. What is his objection to the FEPC? Not that, as a permanent enterprise, it would, even as some Southern liberals contend, make matters worse with respect to race relations, but that Negro soldiers have not done well in this war. He quotes "high-ranking generals" as telling him Negroes would neither work nor fight. He describes the Negro contribution to the war as "an utter and abysmal failure." This is far from being in accordance with the testimony already received on the performance of Negroes in this conflict. It would be interesting to have identified these "high-ranking generals" who were so ready to feed Senator Eastland's prejudice. It would be interesting to know what the Negro's record as a soldier abroad has to do with legislation intended to prevent job discrimination at home.

RIDICULOUS BUT TRAGIC

The 1945 Legislature, which has been described by Mr. Hugh Sparrow as "unpredictable," is entitled to another adjective for the registration amendment which will be submitted to the people next year. In the name of "white supremacy," there is seriously proposed as a fresh qualification that would-be voters be able to "understand and explain" the federal constitution. One would imagine such a proposition would have been laughed out of the General Assembly. Instead, it went through both houses as though it were anything except an utterly ridiculous way of trying to meet requirements imposed by recent Supreme Court decisions in behalf of the political equality guaranteed by our fundamental law.

Who in the General Assembly could expect to meet this test to the satisfaction of registrars intent on keeping him from qualifying as a voter? What registrar in Alabama, or elsewhere for that matter, is or can anticipate being an expert on the federal constitution? Ever since that charter was written it has been interpreted and reinterpreted until the Founding Fathers would scarcely recognize the work of their hands. What is the history of our Supreme Court except a constant shifting of emphasis and point of view making the constitution mean new things for new generations? What happened when the court in '37 about-faced on a number of issues? Why, if the constitution is something static and crystallized, does the Supreme Court still have to deal with constitutional problems? Why does the Supreme Court divide so often on constitutional points? Because the justices don't know as much about the federal constitution as an Alabama legislator or registrar?

We must have strict qualifications to protect the privilege of voting. But they should be fair, intelligent and workable qualifications, which can and will be applied to all applicants without regard for race, color or religion. Unless that be the case, we shall have not merely discriminations against Negroes; we are bound to have discriminations against whites who for one reason or another do not strike registrars as desirable voters. The poll tax now makes itself most viciously felt with respect to whites, not Negroes. As our life develops economic tensions and group animosities, how easy it would be to bar from the ballot box men and women, of whatever color, who do not suit the machine in power, on the pretense that they do not "understand" and cannot "explain" the constitution!

FEPC's Life Running Out As Bilbo Talks

Washington Post

By the Associated Press

Theodore G. (The Voice) Bilbo of Poplarville, Miss., yesterday strengthened his claim as the talkingest man in the United States Senate. 6-29-45

His tonsils humming with health, his desk piled high with reading matter, the balding Mississippi Democrat announced he was preaching the funeral sermon of the Fair Employment Practices Committee. He began it Wednesday afternoon.

Bilbo said FEPC's actual funeral would be held Monday. That's the first business day of the new fiscal year. He proposes to hold the floor until the present fiscal year ends tomorrow at midnight, to keep Senator Chavez (D., N. Mex.) from offering an amendment to the war agencies appropriation bill giving FEPC $446,200 to finance another year's policing of industry against racial and religious discrimination.

(On the other side of the Capitol, the House Rules Committee drove nails into FEPC's coffin by tabling legislation to grant it $125,000.)

Anybody who dropped in to the Senate gallery for as long as five minutes found out that Bilbo doesn't like FEPC. He doesn't call it this bill or this measure; it's "this damnable piece of legislation" or "this smooth deliberate scheme to integrate the Negro race with the white and foster intermarriage and interbreeding."

Bilbo read edtiorials from Negro newspapers. He read a column by Westbrook Pegler, in dialect. He read an extract from the Daily Worker, but explained he wasn't a Communist. He read letters from Southern friends.

"How long does the Senator intend to speak?" a colleague inquired gently.

Chavez challenged Bilbo to let the Senate vote on it. Bilbo said he wasn't taking any chances. 7-1-45

"I assure my friend from Mississippi," Chavez said, "that he can filibuster until Doomsday, but that motion will be offered."

Bilbo said:

"If you are so hell-bent on doing so I may not give you an opportunity to offer it."

"Until FEPC is dead," Bilbo replied. 6-29-45

Chavez charged Bilbo was imperiling the life of 16 war agencies by his filibuster. Bilbo said no, it was Chavez who was doing the damage by his insistence on offering his amendment. Its adoption would require suspension of the rules and a two-thirds majority.

HOUSE COMMITTEE VOTES TO KILL FEPC

Okays Burial Fund for Agency

By ART SHIELDS

WASHINGTON, June 25. — The House Appropriations Committee today voted to kill the FEPC while granting it funds to wind up its affairs.

Acting on a proposal offered by Rep. Cannon (D-Mo), committee chairman, the Appropriations Committee voted $125,000 to FEPC for three months for the stated purpose of "completely terminating the functions and duties" of FEPC in the next quarter.

The House Appropriations Committee maneuver, relates only to the temporary wartime FEPC.

As to the bill for a permanent FEPC, Rep. Joseph Martin, Republican House leader, declared he was ready to vote for that measure.

"I personally would vote for the billl," Martin declared, "but as Republican leader I couldn't personally lead a drive to bring it to the floor without specific instructions from the House conference (Republican caucus)." Daily Worker

SENATE FIGHT

A decisive fight over the wartime FEPC, whose funds run out June 30, is going on in the Senate, where Sen. Dennis Chavez (D.-NM), is leading the battle.

Chavez has offered an amendment to the War Agencies Appropriations bill to provide $446,000 for FEPC for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1946. His action was taken on the approval of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The showdown on the FEPC amendment did not come up today because the Senate recessed after brief memorial exercises for Sen. Scrugham (R-Nev), who died last week.

The test comes tomorrow—a stiff test indeed. FEPC supporters must win a two thirds vote to suspend the Senate rules to clear the way for action on the FEPC item. If the Rules are not suspended, opponents can raise points of order against introducing new appropriations items in the Senate which has not been approved in the House.

So strong is the FEPC popular tide, however, that supporters hope to cross the two thirds dam.

They can do so only if absentees are kept to a minimum they say. 6-26-45

TELEGRAMS POUR IN

Rep. Martin's statement on voting for a permanent FEPC in the House is tantamount to an invitation to the Republican caucus to so instruct him. It would be difficult after such instructions for Southern Democrats on the Rules Committee to refuse to let the the bill came to the floor.

The six instructing Democrats, who voted against two other Democrats and four Republicans to bog the bill down in the Rules Committee, would hardly dare to let the Republicans run away with such a popular issue.

Some 20 representatives of as many people's organizations put the FEPC issue before Martin today. And letters and telegrams, meanwhile, are pouring in.

FEPC's role in the war against Japan was dealt with today by Boris Shishkin, economist and AFL member on the seven-member Fair Employment Practices Committee, at a press conference today.

The FEPC, said Shishkin, by lessening racial discrimination, has actually saved American lives in the Far East.

U. S. Military Intelligence, he continued, has shown him copies of Japanese leaflets, reproducing white supremacy advertisements in American newspapers, which American troops captured in the Far East.

GREEN'S STATEMENT

An important declaration by William Green, AFL president, in support of FEPC, was disclosed by the committee today. Green's statement, which has not yet been published, was sent to the recent FEPC meeting in Town Hall, New York.

"The right to an equal chance to earn a livelihood without discrimination because of race, color or religion is an inalienable right in a democracy for which Americans have fought and died in this war," declared Green. ". . . The American Federation of Labor calls for prompt and unequivocal congressional action in continuing the FEPC as an essential tool of industrial democracy in the difficult days of readjustment ahead." 6-26-45

A message by President Truman told the same rally he hoped the people will not take defeat meeting "will have the effect of American policy regardless of what arousing the community and the action Congress took on the funds. nation to the vital importance of Negro people will not take defeat saving the Fair Employment Practices Committee." PC lying down.

TO MAP ACTION

The committee will meet again to consider further action later early next month in any eventuality. Congress will actively continue if funds are cut off, he declared.

Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, told the press conference at which Ross said. The protests will be "dramatic," Shishkin made his statement, that Milton L. Webster, vice-president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Cars said, the principles enunciated in the Presidential Executive Order, establishing the committee, remained John Brophy, CIO representative members, told reporters that the NAACP, and other committee members emphasized the necessity for a continued FEPC.

FEPC May Try to Run Regardless of Funds

Filibuster Threat Moves Negro Member To Promise 'Dramatic' Race Demonstration

Washington Post

By the Associated Press

The fight over continuing the Fair Employment Practices Committee hit new intensity yesterday with the agency's head saying it may continue operating on a volunteer basis even if Congress gives it no money.

Chairman Malcolm Ross said the FEPC may go ahead regardless and another member, a Negro, reported plans for a demonstration "more dramatic than a march on Washington."

This member, Milton P. Webster, international president of the AFL Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, told a news conference he couldn't disclose the nature of the demonstration now but "we are nott going to take it lying down."

Liquidation Fund Approval

He referred to slow action on legislation for a permanent FEPC. The House Appropriation Committee approved yesterday a $125,000 fund earmarked for liquidation of the agency in the three months after July 1.

Southerners in Congress, meanwhile, girded for a filibuster to talk to death any attempt to give FEPC a Congressional appropriation. Senator Bilbo (D., Miss.) threatened to "talk 'till Christmas if neessary, to stop funds for a lot of peckerwoods to go around and meddle into other people's business."

There were still two faint chances that FEPC may get operating funds: (1) a Senate Appropriations Committee amendment to the War Agencies bill to give FEPC $446,200 for the 1946 fiscal year, and (2) the House Appropriations Committee resolution to give FEPC $125,000 to liquidate itself, which FEPC supporters undoubtedly will try to convert into a regular operating fund if it ever gets to the floor.

The Senate amendment, which may come up today, requires a two thirds approving vote since the rider would provide funds for an agency lacking statutory authority. FEPC exists now only through an executive order of the late President Roosevelt establishing it to prevent employment discriminations during the war period because of race, color or creed.

Tied Tightly in House

The House resolution would have to be okayed by the House Rules Committee, which in the past has refused to approve legislation to make FEPC permanent. In this connection, the House minority leader, Representative Martin (R., Mass.) told a FEPC group that while he personally favored such a measure, he was "not in a position" to direct the House minority members in a "fight for it" unless the Republican conference authorizes that action. 6-26-45

Boris Shishkin, FEPC member and AFL economist, said the Army has discovered widespread use by the Japanese of racial prejudices in this country in an attempt to persuade Asiatic peoples that "this is a white man's war."

Ross said regardless of whether Congress votes FEPC any money the committee will hold its regular meeting July 7 and decide then on its future. He said that the committee, without funds, could not operate generally in industry but could continue to insist on non-discrimination by Government and contractors doing business with the Government. 6-26-45

Webster said the move to abolish FEPC leaves Negroes feeling "like we're being double-crossed—that this thing called democracy doesn't mean us at all."

"There probably will be the greatest upsurge of Negro opinion in history if the committee (FEPC) is knocked down," he declared.

Bilbo Filibusters FEPC Second Day

Daily Worker

6-29-45

By ART SHIELDS

WASHINGTON, June 28. — Sen. Theodore Bilbo (D-Miss), arch filibusterer against the FEPC lost the floor temporarily early this evening after yielding the floor for a quorum call. Before he could get it back the chair had recognized Sen. Robert F. Wagner (D-NY), who got recognition on the OPA bill, which had come out of the House-Senate conference.

Bilbo will try to get the floor back.

Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D-SC), has said that he will join in the filibuster too when the OPA bill has been dealt with.

Recklessly sabotaging the war effort, Sen. Theodore Bilbo (D-Miss), blocked passage of 39 billion dollars in military appropriations for nearly two days, while he filibustered against an FEPC fund item of only $446 00.

EXPIRES SATURDAY

Bilbo boasted that he would "dance on the grave of FEPC next Monday," after present funds expire June 30.

The 39 billion dollar military appropriations finally went through late this afternoon when Bilbo yielded the floor to Sen. Elmer Thomas (D-Okla), on the understanding that he could resume his filibuster again.

Bilbo, however, is still blocking passage of some five billion dollars in other needed appropriations, including nearly one billion dollars for government war agencies; more than three billions in the deficiency appropriations bill, and more than a billion dollars in other must bills.

The show-down may come tomorrow, when Senators, such as Dennis Chavez (D-NM), the author of the FEPC appropriation amendment, which Bilbo hasn't given him a chance to introduce, and James Mead, New York Democrat, are talking of taking some special action.

That action may be a demand for cloture—that is the limiting of discussion. 6-29-45

Bilbo again talked of a coming "revolution" to "wipe out" the friends of FEPC.

Just before the session opened he bared his fascist heart to reporters, as he told the story of a Negro lynching, with chuckles of laughter.

When he took the floor at 2:24 p.m., after Sen. Tom Connally had finished making a speech in support of the United Nations charter, he began shouting race hatred at once.

"Negro discrimination," he bawled, "will continue for the next 500 years."

The usual Bilbo Jew-baiting cropped out in his speech again and aagin. Thus Eugene Meyer, publisher of the Washington Post, and his wife, were assailed as "Jews."

Sen. Chavez rebuked Bilbo at one point, deminding him that Jews had given their lives for the United States at Okinawa Island and elsewhere in the war. But no other senator joined in the rebuke.

Chavez cracked down on Bilbo again when the Mississippi ku kluxer denounced Catholic priests for joining with Jews in some protests on FEPC's behalf.

Chavez is a Catholic.

In the House, meanwhile the Rules Committee tabled a House appropriations bill, authorizing $125,000 for FEPC for three months, to be followed by liquidation. Eugene Cox (D-Ga), chief anti-Negro member of the committee, however, feared that the bill could be amended on the floor so he had it killed. 6-29-45

Misrepresenting the South

Richmond Times-Dispatch

IF MISSISSIPPI wants to send to the United States Senate such men as THEODORE BILBO and JAMES EASTLAND, there is little the rest of the country can do about it, but the people of the other Southern States certainly do not have to remain silent under the possible imputation that these spreaders of interracial hate speak for anyone but themselves.

The tirades which BILBO and EASTLAND have loosed on the Senate floor of late against the whole colored race are n t approved or condoned by the rank and file of Southern whites. The average Southerner is fairminded and tolerant, and he believes in giving credit where credit is due. The blanket denunciations of all Negro soldiers which SENATOR EASTLAND has just issued do not appeal to the Southern people as either accurate or just. Furthermore, they stir up strife at the very time when the efforts of responsible people are in the opposite direction.

The fact that the Mississippian quotes unnamed "generals" as having said this or that, means little. High-ranking American commanders have said exactly the opposite, and with their names signed. GENERAL EISENHOWER is one who has praised Negro troops. Admittedly the Ninety-second Negro Division did not acquit itself well in Italy, but this does not justify the sweeping generalizations of SENATOR EASTLAND.

There have been individual Negro heroes in this war. DORIE MILLER, the colored mess boy who grabbed a machine gun at Pearl Harbor and won the Navy Cross, was the first. Others have won the Distinguished Service Medal, the Legion of Merit, and so on. When GENERAL JOHN LEE called in March for Negro volunteers for front line service against the Germans, the quota of 2,300 was quickly exceeded. They acquitted themselves well in the drive of the First and Seventh Armies into and across Germany. Many were killed, many others maimed.

The permanent Fair Employment Practice Committee, against which SENATORS EASTLAND and BILBO have been filibustering, should be discussed on its merits. The record made in the war by colored troops has nothing whatever to do with the case. It is humiliating to the South for two Mississippi demagogues to misrepresent the Southern people with their unfair diatribes.

A Law Not The Answer

Legislation Vs. Human Nature

THE man who sits behind the big desk at 1600 Pennsylvania avenue in Washington, D. C., no matter what his name or his political connections, is the President of all the people. This was true of George Washington. Is is true of Harry Truman. It has been true of every President we've had all along the line.

Therefore, the President of the United States frequently takes positions which to him, personally or politically, may not be pleasant, or practicable. But as the President of all the people, it is incumbent upon him to take such stands.

In our opinion, Mr. Truman's stand on the hotly debated and mis-named "Fair Employment Practices committee" is an example of a President's taking a stand as a purely technical and theoretical thing. Mr. Truman is an individual blessed with much common sense and as a man of such talents he is bound to know in his own mind that "you can't legislate human nature." But he has called for Congressional action guaranteeing by law certain practices upon the part of individuals, regardless of their personal choice in the matter. Mr. Truman is bound to know that such a law won't work, any more than national prohibition worked. But he undoubtedly feels it is his duty to espouse such a law and therefore he is espousing it.

No matter how promising any so-called "anti-discrimination" law may appear on paper, what it will do in practice is something else, altogether. The "FEPC," as the forerunner to proposed Congressional action is called, was brought into being not by law, but by a presidential directive possible under the War Emergencies act which gives the President broad powers during wartime. Mr. Roosevelt set up FEPC at a time when there was a shortage of labor and when it was necessary that the nation make use of every bit of labor it had; and also at a time when his political fortunes stood to gain by reawakened support on the part of the leftwingers of the country. Now, the leftwingers and spokesmen of the minority groups—in many cases they are identical individuals—seek to raise FEPC from the doubtful status of a directive-supported proposition to one supported by law. Mr. Truman has called for such a law, but powerful interests in Congress have announced they shall fight it to the last ditch.

THE basis for the fight against trying to force, by law, any national obedience to FEPC centers largely in the South. The white majority in the South simply does not want negro teachers in white schools; negro clerks in white stores; negro reporters in white newspaper offices, or negro doctors and nurses in white hospitals. No one objects to negro teachers in negro schools; negro clerks in negro stores; negro reporters and editors in negro papers; negro doctors and nurses in negro hospitals. As a matter of fact, the thinking whites not only approve negro leadership for negroes, but they go out of their way to aid and foster such negro leadership. And, by the same token, the best Southern negroes agree with the whites that both races will be better off and will be happier by adhering to the "color line." The Editor of The Morning Avalanche knows this to be true by virtue of numerous civic contacts with Lubbock's leading negroes.

The negroes of the South—and the negroes of Lubbock—do want better living conditions, and they should have them. This newspaper believes in a fair, square deal for the negroes; always has and always will. But we do not believe in a federal law attempting to force a merger of the races and neither do the wiser citizens among the negroes.

Of course, there are other angles to the FEPC than that which covers relations between whites and negroes. In the North, especially, the Gentile-Jewish friction plays a part. In other areas of the country, competition between persons of Anglo ancestry and Latin, and/or Slavic ancestory furnishes a background. But the fact remains that while a citizen—whatever his racial or religious background — has certain inaleinable rights in this country, it also is a fact that among those rights are the right to employ, or to mix with commercially, professionally or socially, whichever of his fellow citizens he so chooses.

A federal law, in our opinion, is no answer to racial and/or religious differences in the land today. Nor will a federal law ever be an answer to those differences. Tolerance, complete or partial, can come only with better understanding and broader vision—not with a statute enforced by courts, jails and police clubs.

FEPC PROPOSALS

The bill to establish a Fair Employment Practices Commission in Connecticut died in the Labor Committee after the House of Representatives had recommitted it. As a former Speaker of the House, Samuel A. Eddy, once remarked, the General Assembly should be credited at times with things it has refused to do as well as with measures it has passed. This proposal to enter the field of employer-employee relations, resting as it did on the unquestionably dubious presumption of what might be the intent of the accused employer or employee was wisely postponed. It will probably be resurrected for the 1947 General Assembly, especially if New York and Massachusetts demonstrate that the principle is workable. Meanwhile Connecticut has an Interracial Relations Committee that has done much in the past two years to promote the objectives of the broader measure buried by the Labor Committee.

Congress is having a tussle with a similar bill, drafted to make permanent the FEPC established through an executive order by the late President Roosevelt. President Truman, in character with his position while he was Senator, has urged the adoption of this measure, whose chief sponsor is Representative Marcantonio of New York's American Labor Party.

The battle in Congress has two phases. Congress has hitherto announced a policy of denying funds to temporary agencies of questionable legal authority. Relying upon that policy, the House Committee on Rules refused to report a special rule under which the House might have amended an appropriation bill by including a fund for the FEPC. But the Rules Committee has had to meet head on the bill to make the FEPC permanent. So far no rule to bring the measure to the floor has been reported to the House. Chairman Sabath of the Committee stated Thursday that action would be taken next Tuesday when one member now absent will be present. But his statement indicates a heavy majority against giving the bill the green light.

President Truman's demand for immediate action on the bill has made of it an Administrative "must" measure. If it fails to clear with the Rules Committee, on which the Democrats have eight members to the Republicans' four, Mr. Truman must look to his own party for the cause of his embarrassment. It is highly improbable that the four Democratic members from the South will give their consent to this legislation. The temporary FEPC stirred up the Negro question in the Southern Railway fireman's case. Congressmen from that section of the country are as bitterly opposed to the FEPC as they are to anti-lynching and poll tax legislation.

In opposing this type of legislation at the Federal level we would not join hands with the extreme sectionalists. The arguments that have been stated against the bill in Connecticut apply with equal force to the Federal proposal. Neither morals nor tolerance can be legislated into human beings. To attempt to do so now may cancel the progress made through the slower but certain process of education.

The Dangers of a Permanent FEPC

THERE are many sincere and public-spirited advocates of a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee, and the philosophy behind the proposal to establish such an agency in Washington is precisely in the American tradition. But although these things are true, this bill which is designed to help minorities probably would have precisely the opposite result, at least insofar as the Negro minority in the South is concerned.

Legislation rests on public opinion. No law which is strongly opposed by the overwhelming majority will ever be effective, or will ever achieve the results which it seeks to achieve. This is especially true of legislation such as that which seeks to establish a permanent FEPC. Here is a bill which involves some of the most emotionally felt issues in our public life, but which ignores those emotions in providing for enforcement. Such a law is often worse than no law at all. After much study of the issues involved here, we are convinced that if a permanent FEPC is established in Washington over the virtually unanimous, if not completely unanimous, opposition of the entire Southern bloc in Congress, the consequences can only be harmful.

REPRESENTATIVE MARY T. NORTON, of New Jersey, chief proponent of the bill in the House, has prepared a series of questions and answers about this piece of legislation. She says that the types of discrimination forbidden in the bill on the basis of race, color, creed, national origin, or ancestry are those "in employment or union membership, i. e., hiring, discharging, wages, seniority, transfers, demotions, upgrading, union auxiliaries, etc." Answering her own question, "Does the bill require an employer to hire Negroes, Jews, Mexicans, or other minorities?," she says: "No. An employer may hire or reject anyone he pleases, on any basis and for any reason, so long as a needed and qualified person is not rejected because of his race, color, creed, national origin, or ancestry." This answer, when analyzed, is really meaningless, for the second half of the sentence partially nullifies the first half. The important fact is that this law would make possible the imposition of heavy penalties upon employers for failure to hire colored persons.

This is not the way to broaden opportunities for the colored people of the South. This is the road to a vast amount of bitterness and strife. The lessons of the past should teach Congress that the entry of the Federal authorities into this delicate relationship of employer and employee, and the emphasis which would be placed in the law upon the race issue, would simply fan the flames of interracial antagonism, instead of quenching them.

Such a lifelong friend of the Negro race as OSWALD GARRISON VILLARD, whose greatest pride is that he is the grandson of WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON, the Abolitionist, is opposed to this type of legislation. He feels that it is more harmful than otherwise, and that it tends to accentuate race differences, instead of eliminating them. He and half-a-dozen eminent New Yorkers of liberal inclinations signed a statement in opposition to the IVES Bill, which is of a similar character, and which was passed in New York State a short time ago.

So liberal a man as SENATOR CLAUDE PEPPER, of Florida, is against the establishment of a permanent FEPC, and so is the militantly liberal Louisville Courier-Journal. Both have fought many battles for the Negroes of the South, but they can see that the sort of statute which is being advocated would, in all likelihood, increase existing tensions, instead of lessening them.

REPRESENTATIVE BROOKS HAYS, of Arkansas, one of the most enlightened and progressive members of the House, always a friend of the disadvantaged, made a long address on the House floor recently in opposition to this bill. "It is unity of purpose we seek," he declared, "not enforced relationships." He pointed out that the bill would not only cover the hiring of workers, but also their discharge, and he stated that where an employee was discharged and he complained to the FEPC that body could order the employer to reinstate the worker, and the employer would go to jail, if he declined. Similar penalties can be imposed for refusal to hire, if the law is violated.

It is only right, of course, that colored workmen who have made good on merit during the war, should not be laid off when there is a slump, simply because they are colored. But while this is true, it is also true that Federal decrees against individual employers, especially in the Southern States, are sure to be deeply resented. The desired results as to both hiring and firing should be sought by other means.

Some absurd and even hysterical things have been said by Southerners against this FEPC bill, and we consider them so much rodomontade. On the other hand, there is no use blinking the facts concerning this legislation, and the real dangers which it contains.

It may be argued that while far-reaching powers are conferred by the bill, they would not be exercised. What guarantee is there of that? None whatever. On the contrary, given the zeal and unquestioned integrity of many of the bill's advocates, they might well consider that the South ought to be singled out first for attention, since it contains by far the bulk of the country's Negroes. Should that occur, the fat would be in the fire, and irreparable harm would be done.

THE TIMES-DISPATCH has frequently championed the cause of better employment opportunities for our Negro citizens. We shall continue to do so, especially in the years immediately ahead, when it is so important that returning Negro soldiers and sailors be made to feel that they are being fairly treated. But this newspaper cannot support legislation to that end which could arouse great interracial hostility, and create almost interminable friction. If such consequences flowed from the establishment of a permanent FEPC—and they probably would—the Negroes would be the chief sufferers, and interracial progress would be set back for decades.

"The Battle Of The F.E.P.C."

Local Writer Assails Prejudices Underlying Opposition to Adoption of Proposed FEPC Bill in Congress — Success of Measure as Important as Winning "Battle of Berlin".

By DOROTHY M. THOMAS

America is striving to beat the Japs, now that Germany has been conquered, and bring peace and justice to the world. But will justice reign in the United States?

From the looks of things now we will have to fight here too, for equality for all men because the Southern Democrats are opposing the FEPC bill in Congress with all the force they can muster. But perhaps many of you do not fully understand just what 'FEPC" means and stands for.

The FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee is a bill which abolishes discrimination in the matter of employment to persons regardless of race, color or creed.

This means that persons belonging to minority groups, namely Negroes and Jews, will have a chance to better themselves economically because they will not be barred from certain jobs for which they are qualified. Of course, the Negroes in the United States will profit by the passage of this bill more so than the Jewish people, because they are discriminated against more than the latter.

Thousands of colored boys will return to the States after war is over and to what are they returning? If this FEPC bill is ousted the condition they left will be here for them to face. These boys have fought loyally for their country. They have done their job well even though they have been segregated since the day they went to their first Army camp.

Is it fair that a young Negro veteran be refused a decent job because of his color regardless of his education and ability. No, it certainly is not! Yet that is the situation he will have on his hands unless Southerners in House Rules Committee will let the FEPC bill go to the House to be considered. They don't want to see the bill go into action because of prejudice towards minority groups. This prejudice is directed almost totally to Negroes. The South, for the most part, feels that the Negro is inferior and should be kept in a certain class. Thus if the bill were passed the colored peoples of this country would elevate their status, economically and socially. Hence, the "thumbs down" attitude of our brothers from below the Mason-Dixon line.

Are they overlooking the fact that the Allies were fighting against such an idea—Hitler and his race-hatred fanaticism?

"Free the world," we said "free the oppressed races." Our boys did just that, they freed the unfortunate and imprisoned of Europe. Now it is up to us, every true American, to free the Negro. Of course, we realize that the Negro is not held prisoners in a concentration camp but he is a prisoner of prejudice, segregation and discrimination. In this land of freedom all men are to be treated equally. There is no better time ot start than now and our Southern politicians must realize this fact and act accordingly if we are to have a sound America in the years to come. The "battle of the FEPC" should be just as important to every American as was the "Battle of Berlin."

5 Southern Newspapers Cited in Favor of FEPC

Daily Worker 6-16-45

A review of editorial comment on FEPC inserted in the Congressional Record by Rep. Frank Hook (D-Mich) shows that at least five prominent southern newspapers have indicated a sympathetic attitude towards the anti-discrimination agency.

The Knoxville (Tenn) News-Sentinel said that "the ideal of equal economic opportunity is something more than an objective for a remote peace" but "bespeaks something we need here and now to produce with maximum efficiency for war."

The Durham (NC) Herald said that "it seems vitally essential to set up a permanent and broader FEPC immediately."

From the Birmingham (Ala) Age-Herald came the comment that "discrimination obviously can make the nation's acute wartime manpower problem more difficult. That the Federal Government should strive to mitigate such problems is an entirely understandable, if not imperative, undertaking. Not always has the FEPC acted wisely.

According to the Miami (Fla.) Miami-Record, the charge of Senator Walter George (D-Ga) that FEPC would lead to "communistic or national socialistic system" was "only a measure of the Georgian's capacity for reckless statement.

The Salisbury (NC) Post said:

"No question of social mingling of the races is involved. The issue is solely one of equal opportunity. We may hope that both employers and white workers will realize this simple truth, and that they will also realize that if opportunity can be denied to any group, for reasons of color, religion, or national origin, no minority group's rights are safe."

Sen. Bilbo Calls Atlanta 'Center Of Offbrands'

Atlanta Constitution

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Sen. Bilbo, Democrat, Mississippi, termed Atlanta a center of "offbrands of American citizenship" yesterday and a prominent Atlanta clergyman replied "any criticism from Bilbo is a compliment."

The exchange of words was brought on by a petition of Georgians asking congress to support legislation to create a permanent fair employment practices act.

Bilbo's comment, printed in yesterday's Congressional Record, described the Georgia capital as "the hotbed of southern Negro intelligentsia, Communists, Pinks, Reds and other offbrands of American citizenship."

The statements of the Mississippi legislator were contained in a letter addressed to the Rev. William Holmes Borders, Dr. M. Ashby Jones and Armand May, all of Atlanta. 6-22-1945

DR. JONES' STATEMENT

"The very fact that Sen. Bilbo made these statements is comment enough," said Dr. Jones, a retired Baptist minister. "Any criticism from Sen. Bilbo is really a compliment, and the fact that he is opposed to anything a group of liberals would do is not news."

Commented May:

"We are not advocating anything revolutionary, only evolutionary, and doing it in the normal American way by an appeal to reason instead of prejudice, which is outdated in the south."

Dr. Jones, May and the Rev. William Holmes Borders, pastor of the Wheat Street Baptist church here, make up the committee which drew up the petition.

PETITION'S SIGNERS

The petition, May said, was reproduced and sent all over the state. It has, he said, been signed by more than 1,000 Georgians, a great majority of them white persons. 6-22-1945

The signers, he said, include Methodist, Baptist, Episcopalian, Catholic, Congregational, Jewish and Unitarian ministers; businessmen, college presidents, newspaper editors and columnists, labor leaders, farmers, physicians, lawyers, social workers and "a spectacular number" of members of the armed forces. The signers, he said, represent every part of the state.

When the petition was sent to every senator and representative in Washington last Monday it contained 736 signatures, May said. Since then, he added, signatures have continued to come in.

BILBO "MYSTIFIED"

Bilbo, in his comment, said:

~~FEPC~~ FEPC

"I notice you state that your petition was circulated for a period of only four days, but it is strange and mystifying that you did not give the address of any petitioners.

"So it is natural to assume that the great majority of these petitioners, representing Negroes, Quislings of the white race and other racial minorities, hail from Atlanta.

"The intelligentsia of the Negro race believes that through the FEPC they will hasten the day of destroying the color line and bring about social equality between the white man and the black man.

"I will leave nothing undone this side of heaven or hell to defeat this damnable legislative scheme."

The South and the FEPC

Richmond Times Dispatch

Editor of The Times-Dispatch:

I read with interest your editorial, "The Dangers of a Permanent FEPC" (June 11). For more than nine years I have been a constant subscriber to this paper, and in recent years have read with appreciation some of your fair and liberal editorials. With the one in question, however, I fail to see with you as much danger in enacting the bills now before Congress to establish a permanent FEPC or an antipoll-tax law. 6-21-45

You say that "the philosophy behind the proposal to establish such an agency in Washington is precisely in the American tradition. But although these things are true, this bill, which is designed to help the minorities, probably would have precisely the opposite result, at least insofar as the Negro minority in the South is concerned." 6-21-45

If your indication is correct, it constitutes a terrible indictment against the fairness and even the honesty of Southern whites; at least some of them who employ colored workers. Why should any honest man, be he white or colored, object to a law guaranteeing fairness to any group of American citizens irrespective of color, creed or national origin? Thousands of colored soldiers fought and died on the battlefields of the Revolutionary War, the War of 1812, and in 1863, and again in 1898. More than 400,000 colored Americans wore the uniform and thousands shed their blood and died for our country in 1917-18. To date, in this war, almost 1,000,000 have donned uniforms, and thousands have made the supreme sacrifice. Millions of dollars of the colored people's money has gone into War Bonds, while millions of them are working on the home front.

Full rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness are justly due our colored people. The philisophy of States' rights may be alright, but to practice the evil of States' wrongs is an ugly habit.

The FEPC bill is not aimed at the South alone, but at unfair labor practices anywhere in the United States. No fear need be had about colored people suffering from the passage of the FEPC. The colored, especially the Southern colored people, know more about suffering than any other people in America.

I am Southern born and Southern reared, and am not young any more. Colored and white people in the South need to get together, and make friends as never before. We are losing valuable time and prestige. Candidates from every other section in the country can land in the White House, but our Southern men can hardly get the nomination by a major political party. Why? Because of the fights our Southern Representatives in Congress make against legislation fair to colored people. Southern candidates would lose approximately 3,000,000 colored votes, and no party wants a losing candidate. It's time for a change of Southern attitude toward colored people.

Threat of Filibuster Hangs Over FEPC Bill

Atlanta Constitution 6-22-45

WASHINGTON, June 21.—(AP)—Rep. Colmer, Democrat, Mississippi, called today for a senate filibuster to "deal the final, knockout blow" to the Fair Employment Practices Committee (FEPC).

The Mississippian, said both an appropriation to continue the agency after June 30 and a bill to make it permanent have been "stymied" in the house.

Declaring "the battle has now shifted to the senate," Colmer said in a statement:

"This action (filibuster tactics) is most imperative . . . because if either FEPC measure comes to a vote in either body, it would likely pass because of its political significance."

If a $500,000 appropriation for FEPC is placed in a war agencies appropriation bill by the senate, Colmer said southern opponents hope to defeat it in the house by parliamentary tactics.

The strategy, he said, would be to object to a house-senate conference on the bill, thereby forcing the appropriations committee to request a formal rule for a conference.

"The rules committee has held the line for more than four months," declared Colmer. "I don't think it will waver now."

682 Georgia Citizens in Plea To Truman Urge Permanent FEPC

Daily Worker

WASHINGTON, June 19 (UP).—Strong endorsement of a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission was sent to Congress today by a group of Georgia Citizens.

A petition signed by 682 persons, said to represent every section of the state, urged Congress "to fulfill the pledges of their parties" by enacting pending legislation to establish a permanent FEPC. 6-20-45

"Here in the South we have experienced the unwholesome consequences of discrimination in employment," the petition said. "Such discrimination has no place in American life; by its very nature it is Fascistic."

The petition, a copy of which was sent to President Truman, came from Atlanta. An accompanying letter signed by Armand May, William H. Borders and M. Ashby Jones, said the signatures were obtained in four days.

Fair Employment Budget Still Has a Slim Chance

P.M.

By Elizabeth Donahue
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 20.—A Government guarantee of the right of everyone, regardless of race, creed or color, to work for a living, was being seriously challenged today in the Senate. 6-20-45

The signal victory which working people won when President Roosevelt established the FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee) guaranteeing all minorities the right to a wartime job has received another vital blow at the hands of a Senate Appropriations Subcommittee following a total defeat in the House of Representatives.

The Subcommittee on a tie vote—with half the members absent—yesterday decided that the FEPC should expire June 30.

Little Prospect

Today the full Appropriations Committee will cast another vote on the issue, but there was little prospect that funds for continuance of FEPC will be restored.

The sixth and perhaps last chance for Congress to give legislative backing to the rights of minority citizens to secure a job will come when the Senate votes later in the week on the issue.

But the final vote in the Senate will be cast under a parliamentary rule requiring two-thirds of the members to vote first on the question of whether FEPC is even entitled to any discussion or consideration on the Senate floor.

Unless two-thirds of the Senators vote in the affirmative, the temporary, wartime agency outlawing discrimination in the hiring of workers, must be closed down ten days from today.

How They Voted

Thirteen of the 16 members of the Appropriations Subcommittee were on hand yesterday to vote a substantial increase in funds for the Office of War Information which was awarded $39,750,000—an increase of $21,750,000 above the amount approved by the House.

But when the vote on FEPC was counted only eight members of the Committee were present. The eight were equally divided on the vote which spelled defeat for the fair employment agency. 6-20-45

The four Senators who voted against giving FEPC any money were: Kenneth McKellar (D., Tenn.), Millard Tydings (D., Md.), Pat McCarran (D., Nev.), and Chan Gurney (R., S. D.).

Those who favored continuance of FEPC were: Elmer Thomas (D., Okla.), Carl Hayden (D., Ariz.), Homer Ferguson (R., Mich.), and Joseph Ball (R., Minn.).

Eight members of the Subcommittee, including three Republicans, and five Democrats were absent.

While the Subcommittee followed the House in severing FEPC's financial lifeline, the same Subcommittee more than doubled the funds which the House provided the Office of War Information.

The OWI's appropriation which has suffered a series of sharp cuts and increases since the budget was presented to Congress will be cleared by the full Senate Appropriation Committee today before it goes to the Senate floor.

When the President submitted the budget request for OWI he asked for $42,000,000 to finance the information agency's activities in Europe and the Far East. The fund included money for current OWI European operations now almost exclusively devoted to counteracting the effective Nazi propaganda which seeped into the minds of European peoples during the German occupation.

The Senate Committee brought it back to $39,750,000 in the hope that the House and Senate can eventually agree on a sum only slightly below that figure.

Among the propagandists who attacked OWI was the bush-league fascist Joseph Kamp, already under indictment for defying a House Committee. Kamp distributed elaborate booklets to each member of the Senate proclaiming that the OWI is controlled by Communists.

A letter from Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower indorsing OWI's European activities was held largely responsible for the shift in the Subcommittee which voted the agency the substantial increase.

Ickes Stresses Need For Permanent FEPC

Makes Appeal In Support of Town Hall Rally Tuesday

Declaring it would be a "national disaster and humiliation" to end anti-discrimination policies in this country, Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes, yesterday called for a permanent FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Commission) as insurance against "reconverting to racial prejudice, national bigotry and religious discrimination."

Ickes' appeal was made in a statement supporting the "Save the FEPC" rally in Town Hall, Tuesday evening, sponsored by the Council Against Intolerance in America. Representatives from more than 40 civic, educational, political, religious and labor organizations are expected to attend.

New Barbarism

"Millions of men of every race, color and creed," Ickes' message to the council declared, "are fighting to vindicate the principles of democracy and to preserve the freedom and dignity of the individual against the challenge of a new barbarism based on race hatred and intolerance.

"Thousands have already died in this struggle. It would be a national disaster and humiliation if those who fought valiantly abroad to defend the freedom and dignity of the individual against racial barbarism should come home to find that the bringing of peace meant a termination of the anti-discrimination policy that we have achieved in wartime.

"Today we stand embarked upon the task of reconversion for peace. Without a permanent FEPC we stand a good chance of reconverting to racial prejudice, national bigotry and religious discrimination. With it we shall reconvert to full peacetime employment based on the American principle of equality."

Supporters

Other statements supporting the rally have been received from Secretary of Commerce Henry A. Wallace, Senator James M. Mead (D., N. Y.), Bishop Francis J. Haas, of the Michigan diocese of the Roman Catholic Church; Rep. Mary T. Norton (D., N. J.); Rep. Joseph Baldwin, (R. Man.); R. J. Thomas, president of the United Automobile Workers Union; Philip Murray, president of the CIO and William Green, president of the AFL.

Speakers at the rally will include Pearl S. Buck, Rev. John LaFarge, S.J.; Rabbi J. X. Cohen, James Waterman Wise, Anna Arnold Hedgeman, Walter White, Sen. Dennis Chavez, John Brophy, Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam and Canada Lee.

A dramatic revue, Carry On, America!, written by Howard Fast, Norman Corwin and Langston Hughes, will be presented.

Failure of the FEPC.

To the News:

Mr. W. King calls attention to the fact that the FEPC was endorsed by both the Democratic and Republican parties and suggests that it be passed on trial and later repealed if it proves to be unsatisfactory. This sounds like a fair suggestion, but there are several reasons why it should not be done. One is that the FEPC has already been tried and proved to be unsatisfactory. Another is that it is always easier to get even a bad law passed than it is to get it repealed after it once becomes a law. We have some bad ones in effect now and they are often complained of but nothing is ever done toward repealing them.

Another thing that should be taken into consideration is that the motives which led to the endorsement of the FEPC by both parties during the heat of the presidential campaign were mostly political. It was done more to try to win or hold the vote of certain factions than for any good they thought was in the law itself.

If it has been a good policy to avoid criticisms and actions that were likely to cause friction among the Allies and to pursue an appeasement policy toward labor to keep down trouble on the home front during the war, it certainly should be a good policy to refrain from passing such laws as the FEPC that will be a permanent source of friction in peacetime.

Sometimes the public safety demands that action be taken regardless of friction, but I don't think the FEPC is a question of such urgency. Nor do I think the question of Negroes voting in the Democratic primary is one involving such righteousness so far as Negro voting is concerned as to merit court approval in the face of the irritation it may cause in the future.

Our purpose should be not to try to force Negroes and whites to mix, but to give to each group its natural and inherent right to have its own affairs to itself with just enough government supervision to insure protection and safety.

The war has brought upon us the realization that there is much wrong among the peoples of the world. Especially it has brought to our attention the fact that Negroes have often been misused and mistreated. In our efforts to correct these wrongs we should avoid the tendency to swing to the other extreme and try to embrace the Negro or any other people or system too closely.

Senate Committee Votes For FEPC Appropriation

Daily Worker

6-21-45

By ART SHIELDS

WASHINGTON, June 20.—FEPC prospects brightened today as the Senate Appropriations Committee, by 14 to 4, voted for an amendment to the War Agencies Appropriation Bill, furnishing $446,000 to carry on the committee's fight against job discrimination after June 30.

Today's action reverses the negative stand of the appropriation sub-committee, which yesterday stood off the issue by a 4 to 4 vote.

FEPC is still in serious danger, however. Opponents of the measure insist that a two-thirds vote will be necessary to suspend the Senate rules on additional appropriations to be put into a bill without danger of points of order. Getting a two-thirds vote requires a full Senate. Absenteeism can defeat it. 6-21-45

Sen. Dennis Chavez (D-NM) will offer the amendment.

The House Appropriation Committee struck the FEPC funds out. If the Senate passes the FEPC item the House is expected to accept it.

Strong statements were made in support of FEPC by CIO president Philip Murray and by FEPC chief Malcolm Ross before the appropriations committee acted.

"FEPC," said Ross, "is especially needed in the great cities of the east, the north and the Pacific, where the war industries brought in many Negroes, Mexicans and persons liable to discrimination on account of religion." 6-21-45

Negroes, he added, were the last to be hired and would be the first to be laid off in the industries where war contracts are being cancelled fastest.

Murray, speaking in the name of six million CIO members, said in part:

"The Fair Employment Practices Committee has made an outstanding contribution to the war effort and to our American democracy, by eliminating discrimination in employment in our war plants. Its continued contribution is vital not only to the speedy prosecution of the war against Japan but also to the preservation in our own country of the democratic ideals for which this war is being fought.

"Restoration of this appropriation will also be an evidence of our good faith to our Allies in this war whose own peoples have suffered the full measure of fascist discrimination."

Washington Calling

U. S. Needs FEPC

PRESIDENT TRUMAN has said as emphatically as possible that he wants the Fair Employment Practices Committee set up as a continuing Government agency. He said he staked not a little of his political prestige on this issue.

Unless it happened to touch them directly, most people have been unaware of the work of the committee during the war. It has been a kind of cushion to offset some of the tension growing out of the vast migration of peoples of every race and color into America's great centers of war production.

Above all it was an outlet for the victims of racial discrimination or for those who felt they had been discriminated against. They could make a complaint to one of the regional offices of the FEPC, and that complaint was carefully investigated.

If the complaint was a real one, then FEPC went to the employer to point out that under the terms of his war contract he had no right to discriminate against anyone in giving employment. In all but a very few cases this was sufficient to correct the situation. 6-21-45

THE COMMITTEE had only limited authority. As a last resort it could cite a case to the White House, and presumably the President, under his war powers, could compel the employer to comply.

Although both AFL and CIO have indorsed the work of FEPC, the committee has had complaints involving unions. The most conspicuous case of this type concerned the Boilermakers Union in West Coast shipyards. Negroes were admitted to what was, in effect, only second-class membership in the union and denied full status.

From many sources has come testimony as to the value of FEPC. Instances of serious racial strife have been few, in spite of the fact that this country has never seen anything like the mingling of peoples in work and in living that came with the war. FEPC has been there as a kind of lightning rod to help settle the grievances that could grow into violence.

Now, both in the House and the Senate, enemies of FEPC are trying to kill it by cutting off the appropriation. They are doing this in closed session, because they know that if it ever came to a vote on the floor FEPC would undoubtedly get a majority in both houses.

No one could argue that the need for the committee is ended. In fact, the biggest test is still to come.

Thousands of Negro workers have migrated to West Coast cities. Portland, Oreg., is an example. More than 25,000 Negroes are employed in shipyards there.

Vancouver, Wash., is another example. Before the war not more than a dozen Negroes lived in Vancouver. When I was there last fall they told me the Negro population was over 5000. The fact is, of course, that shipbuilding records could never have been set without these new workers.

POLLS TAKEN among the newcomers on the Pacific Coast show that a majority would like to stay where they are. And the West Coast is not the only area affected, by any means.

Testifying before a House Appropriations Committee, Chairman Malcolmn Ross of FEPC reported that during the five years from 1940 to 1945, the South had had a net loss of a half million Negroes who had gone to the industrial centers in the North and the West.

"Experience in World War I," Ross said, "shows that most of these people will stay. After World War I their cousins, sisters and aunts kept coming. There were a million Negroes, net, coming into the North during the '20s and even during the depression years. If the Government had never lifted a finger in this matter, those situations would exist."

As shipyards are shut down and industrial production is cut back, the fight for jobs will be intense. In 1919 there were 26 race riots. They grew, directly or indirectly, out of a similar struggle for jobs. FEPC can't establish peace and harmony by fiat, but it can help a lot.

A Fair Employment Practices Commission would not end racial strife in this country. That cannot be done by law. It can only come through education. But such a commission would be part of our education.

FEPC expires June 30 unless committee bottlenecks in House and Senate are broken. If they are broken, then a record vote will show FEPC approved.

Southerners Vote Down FEPC Bill

Black Dispatch

By HARRY McALPIN

WASHINGTON.—(By Telegraph) — The FEPC went down under a count of six to six today when the Rules committee "slaughtered" it in two rounds. 6-23-45

The first round, at 10:30 this morning left FEPC groggy from foul punches below the belt delivered by a Republican-Southern Democrat coalition.

Eleven members were present. A commitment to vote at 10:30 had been made. But, Representative Slaughter (D. of Mo.) was delayed by a grounded plane and was not in his corner. 6-23-45

Chairman Sabbath (D. of Ill.), the referee, called on the gladiators to come out and fight—get to the voting. He pointed out that Slaughter knew of their intentions and should have arranged to be present.

But two Republicans, reported to have been Brown of Ohio, and Allen of Illinois, supported the Southern Democrats who insisted on delay and postponement until 1:15 in the afternoon in order to give Slaughter a chance to arrive.

Slaughter came to the afternoon meeting—Round Two — accompanied by his "second," Colmer of Mississippi. They were in high spirits. It was the tip-off as to the style of fighting Slaughter would use.

Expressing genuine disgust about the bout, Sabbath said there was no "white hope" in view who might win a favorable rule for FEPC under present conditions. The only avenues open now, he stated, are by discharge petition or a two-third vote to suspend the rules. He told reporters that he will shortly go on the floor of the House and make an appeal for members to sign discharge petition No. 4 (which now has 128 signatures of a required 218). He said he will sign the petition himself despite the fact he is chairman of the Rules committee—an unusual precedent.

The Republican members of the Rules committee and other Republican congressmen already are pointing to the fact their party voted 100 per cent for the rule, and they are claiming the championship on a foul.

It is little less than subterfuge and chicanery that they should seek to make such political capital out of this very serious and needed legislation, ringside observers here are saying. On no less than five occasions they had the opportunity of landing a knock-out blow by insisting on a vote and getting a favorable rule for FEPC. Enough of them, however, lined up with the Southern Democrats in holding back their "Sunday punch" and forcing postponements and adjournments until a six-six tie vote was certain.

Thousands of Negro workers have migrated to west coast cities. Portland, Oregon, is an example. More than 25,000 Negroes are employed in shipyards there.

Vancouver, Wash., is another example. Before the war, not more than a dozen Negroes lived in Vaucouver. When I was there last fall, they told me the Negro population was over 5,000. The fact is, of course, that ship building records could never have been set without these new workers.

Polls taken among the newcomers on the Pacific coast show that a majority would like to stay where they are. And the west coast is not the only area affected, by any means. 6-21-45

Testifying before a House appropriations committee, Chairman Malcolm Ross of FEPC reported that during the five years from 1940 to 1945, the South had had a net loss of a half million Negroes who had gone to the industrial centers in the North and the West.

"Experience in World War I," Ross said, "shows that most of these people will stay. After World War I their cousins, sisters and aunts kept coming. There were a million Negroes, net, coming into the North during the '20s and even during the depression years. If government had never lifted a finger in this matter, those situations would exist."

As shipyards are shut down and industrial production is cut back, the fight for jobs will be intense. In 1919 there were 26 race riots. They grew, directly or indirectly, out of a similar struggle for jobs. FEPC can't establish peace and harmony by fiat, but it can help a lot. 6-21-45

A fair employment practices commission would not end racial strife in this country. That cannot be done by law. It can only come through education. But such a commission would be part of our education.

FEPC expires June 30 unless committee bottlenecks in House and Senate are broken. If they are broken, then a record vote will show FEPC approved.

F. E. P. C. Finds U. S. Successful In Fight on Bias

But Report to Truman Calls Victory Margin Narrow; Won 1,723 Adjustments

WASHINGTON, June 20 (AP).—The Fair Employment Practice Committee reported to President Truman today that "successful use of minority group workers in war industry has been achieved," with the guiding hand of government.

It also asserted that the Nazi hope that "religious hatred" would infect this country "has been forestalled," but added: "The margin of our victory over religious intolerance has been narrow. Hoodlums have attacked Jews in some of our war-time cities. The dangerous undercurrent is there.

"In war industries and government service citizens of the Jewish faith have been denied opportunity to serve their country.

"Yet it may still be said that such cases, however symptomatic, have been relatively few in number. The spread of religious intolerance has so far been kept in check by the force of the contrary opinion of the American public."

The report was the first the committee had made since it was created by Executive order May 27, 1943, to check discrimination in employment because of "race, creed, color or national origin." It covered the eighteen months' period from July, 1943, to December, 1944. The committee now is battling for its life in Congress.

The committee declared that the 13,000,000 American Negroes compose the minority group against whom "discrimination is practiced most frequently." Eighty-one per cent of the cases docketed in the last fiscal year involved complaints from non-whites; Jews, with a scattering of other creeds, filed nearly 9 per cent. The other 10 per cent concerned persons of foreign origin, with Mexican-Americans comprising the majority.

But it asserted that at critical points in the war-production program minority-group Americans "have played an essential role," adding: "Every twelfth American in prime war industries is a Negro. In Federal government service every eighth worker is a Negro. Mexican-American citizens by the scores of thousands have been keyed into the aircraft, shipbuilding and mining industries. Citizens of recent foreign extraction, under handicaps of different language and manners, have been accepted freely on our production lines."

The report of the committee, headed by Malcolm Ross, consisted of 152 pages.

5,803 Cases Docketed

The committee said it had refused to docket 1,442 complaints, largely for lack of jurisdiction. Of the 5,803 cases docketed, 64 per cent were dismissed for "lack of merit, insufficient evidence or other causes."

"Thus," it said, "F. E. P. C. has disposed of many controversies that would have been inimicable to the war effort. The other 36 per cent of cases were accepted, processed and brought to successful conclusion."

The committee said that in this sifting process there were 800 employers who never knew they had been charged with discrimination, because the F. E. P. C., without notice to the parties charged, persuaded the complainants that they did not have valid cases.

"The 1,723 satisfactory adjustments cover a wide range of territory and varying patterns of discrimination," it continued. . . . "Southern ship yards were persuaded to use Negro welders, aircraft plants to up-grade Mexican-Americans, white workers to cooperate with colored workers on the same production lines.

Work Schedules Shifted

"Reluctant Eastern manufacturers of highly involved war mechanisms through experience discarded their belief that Negro workers could not acquire the requisite skills. Government agencies accepted in new positions qualified minority workers referred by civil service. Trade unions policed their own non-discrimination policy in the cases of recalcitrant locals.

"Employers rearranged work schedules to permit Sabbatarians and orthodox Jews opportunity to observe religious customs. In some forty war plants where racial disputes led to work stoppages, the strikers were persuaded to go back to work and, having done so, paved the way for the removal of the causes of racial friction."

The committee said 69.4 per cent of its cases involved complaints against private industry, 24.5 per cent against Federal agencies and 6.1 per cent against labor unions. Cases from the industrial East formed 32.5 per cent of the docket; the Mid-West and Far West together came second and the South last.

"Yet compliance in Southern war industries does not lag notably behind the rest of the country," it said. "It is higher than in the Far West, although figures from that section reflect a large number of unsolved cases in one industry."

GOP, Southerners Run Out on Truman's FEPC Plea

P.M. 6-7-45

Gang Up, Prevent Vote By Bolting Committee Room

By Elizabeth Donahue
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 7.—President Truman's sharp reminder that it is "unthinkable" to abandon the FEPC fell on the deaf ears of a Republican-Southern Democratic coalition in the House Rules Committee which twice in 12 hours stampeded for the door when a vote on FEPC was imminent.

Hamstrung by a secret agreement under which both the GOP and Southerners have agreed not to vote the Bill out unless all members are present, Chairman Adolph Sabath of the Rules group was unable yesterday to hold a quorum together long enough to get a vote even though only one member of the Committee was actually absent from the Capitol Building.

Ignoring the President's message expressing urgent need for the Committee to report the Bill out to the floor without further delay, Rep. Howard Smith (D., Va.), yanked out his watch and looked shocked at the time and started the exodus yesterday morning when Sabath moved an executive session and brought the FEPC bill up.

Surprising

Although no one expected Smith and his three fellow polltaxers on the Committee to support FEPC, there was genuine surprise that the four Republican members of the Committee blocked action on the measure making the Fair Employment Practice Commission a permanent Government agency.

In view of GOP Leader Joseph Martin's persistent assurances that the Republicans would not violate their party platform—that they would support FEPC at the first opportunity—the four Republicans were expected to abide by their party's pledge.

But they did not. The purpose of their agreement with the Southerners to duck a vote until a full Committee membership is on hand, is a device to prevent the bill from reaching the floor.

With the full membership present and the Southern Democrats in control, the vote would be 6-6, thus preventing any action on FEPC. Yesterday, with one Southerner missing, FEPC could have been favorably reported if the Republicans had stood by their promise to support the measure.

After the unexpected collapse of the morning meeting, Sabath called the Committee together for an afternoon session.

GOPs' Turn

The somewhat comical effort of the Republicans to prevent a vote at this session confirmed reliable reports that it was their turn to carry the ball for the Southern Democrats.

One Republican—Rep. Charles Halleck of Indiana appeared. Another Republican, Rep. Leo Allen of Illinois, rushed in and out and said he had to attend another meeting.

The two remaining Republicans, Rep. Clarence Brown of Ohio and Rep. Earl C. Michner of Michigan never showed up, although their offices both reported that they were on the way to the Rules Committee at 2 p.m., the time the meeting was scheduled.

Rep. Brown

Brown was sitting on the floor of the House and so was Michner. The latter protested that "he didn't stay away on purpose," but admitted he knew the meeting was scheduled.

Six Present

So the afternoon meeting started off with Sabath, Halleck, Rep. Bayard Clark (D., N. C.), Rep. Eugene Cox (D., Ga.), Rep. Joe Bates (D., Ky.) and Rep. John J. Delaney present.

Judge Smith wandered in, observed that his presence gave the Committee a quorum, again looked at his watch and rushed out.

Rep. William Colmer (D., Miss.) arrived and stayed exactly 35 seconds. He took the situation in at a glance and also disappeared.

Rep. Howard W. Smith

Chairman Sabath adjourned the meeting for lack of a quorum, and scheduled another session for this morning when the farce will undoubtedly be re-enacted.

6-7-45

The only Committee member absent from Washington is Rep. Roger C. Slaughter (D., Mo.).

Although Slaughter is from the President's home state, he has so far been unalterably opposed to FEPC. He will not be back in town until next week.

Chance Is There

In his absence, the four Republicans along with Sabath and Delaney who both favor FEPC have every opportunity to beat the Southern Democrats—Cox, Smith, Colmer, Clark and Bates.

Meanwhile the temporary wartime FEPC, set up by President Roosevelt to eliminate racial and religious discrimination in industry, is in grave danger of going out of existence this month.

The only alternative is for the Rules Committee and both houses to act promptly on President Truman's strong recommendation that a permanent FEPC be approved "as quickly as possible."

House Group Acts to Starve FEPC to Death

P.M. 6-3-45

Fails to Provide Funds for Committee After July 1

WASHINGTON, June 2.—A slick scheme to kill off FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee) came into view when the House Appropriations Committee reported out the War Agencies Appropriation Bill for the fiscal year beginning July 1 without a cent for the FEPC.

Three other agencies likewise were omitted, but one of them (Office of Civilian Defense) previously had been slated for the scrap heap at the end of the present fiscal year, and the other two (OPA and FEA) are almost certain to be provided for.

The reasons given for all four sounded plausible enough, but there was a trick behind it.

Regarding both OPA and FEPC, the Committee explained that since bills affecting both agencies now are before Congress, it was thought wise to await their outcome before appropriating funds. (FEA was held up pending completion of estimates for lend-lease.)

6-3-45

Have Statutory Base

That may be all right for OPA, since the Senate is due to take up extension of the Price Control Act on Tuesday, and the House Banking and Currency Committee is slated to begin consideration of the same matter next week. Passage before expiration of the present Act at midnight June 30 is expected, and since OPA has statutory authority, a Congressional appropriation naturally would follow.

The same is not true of FEPC. In the first place, the bill before Congress pertains not to the existing FEPC, but provides for creation of a permanent FEPC and its enactment is very unlikely.

Southerners in the House have the bill blocked in Committee and a petition for its discharge is way short of the needed signatures. Certainly not even the most optimistic friends of the measure expect final passage by the end of this month, when funds and authority for the existing FEPC run out.

6-3-45

Time Short

Since the existing organization lacks statutory authority—it was created by President Roosevelt by Executive Order—it will die at midnight June 30, when the present fiscal year ends, unless a new appropriation is made before then.

A fight will be made on the House floor to amend the Committee bill to provide funds for FEPC. Rep. John E. Rankin (D., Miss.), has served notice that he will make a point of order. If sustained, that would end it, except that the fight to save FEPC could be renewed in the Senate. Last year an appropriation for FEPC barely squeezed by in the House, by a vote of 121 to 119. It again will have an uphill fight.

Marcantonio Hits Stall On FEPC as 'Double-Cross'

Daily Worker 6-9-45

Daily Worker Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 8.—Republicans in the House were filling the Record with pious words, trying to get out from under responsibility in the maneuvers which to date have kept House members from voting on FEPC, when Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP-NY), called their bluff.

Unless the Senate upholds democratic traditions by restoring FEPC funds to the War Agencies appropriations bill, he pointed out, the House Appropriations Committee must bear the responsibility for preventing the members from acting on FEPC.

"And now," he said, "we come to the grand mystery, the greatest detective story of the year—who did the killing? Who used the dagger?"

He alluded to the previous day's horsing around by the Rules Committee when in the face of President Truman's urgent request for a rule, a quorum failed to appear for a scheduled vote on the Permanent FEPC bill. 6-9-45

READY TO VOTE

Earlier Rep. Earl C. Michiner (R-Mich), influential Republican on the committee, had said innocently, "Some of us were ready to voet for it. Now the chairman announces that rain or shine we will vote Tuesday. I hope so." When Rep. Mary Norton (D-NJ), author of the bill, retorted that "unfortunately" most of the Democrats on the committee "are from one part of the country," Michener replied:

"Don't blame that on the Republicans. We've been accused of enough, God knows."

Marcantonio talked of the "Alphonse and Gaston act" which ran: "I didn't do it. You did. We Republicans didn't do it. You did." Actually the committee lined up six to five last week for the bill, he said.

But he said, "there was an agreement not to have a vote until the gentleman from Missouri (Roger C. Slaughter) returned. If on Tuesday the vote is six to six, the rule will not be adopted."

This he called "playing a sly game behind closed doors," and a "case of double crossing and double dealing from beginning to end." 6-9-45

Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D-Cal), told the House that the action blocking FEPC from the appropriations bill "raises questions among all the colonial people of the earth whether we are their friends and whether we ever will understand their longing for self-determination."

Among the most vociferous Republicans was the isolationist, Rep. Frank B. Keefe (R-Wis), who spoke of "these so-called minority groups" of whom the New Deal has made "political capital."

Chairman A. J. Sabath (D-Ill), of the Rules Committee dramatically told of the late President Roosevelt's "last message."

"President Roosevelt's secretary called on me at 3 o'clock on the day the President died, urging I do all I could to get the FEPC out for a vote."

Not all the piousness was on the side of the Republicans, of course. Rep. E. E. (Goober) Cox (D-Ga), declared that he would not vote to "write Marxism into our legislation." It was "class legislation" and the "class struggle" was not "Americanism."

Benson Denounces Sabotage on FEPC

Elmer Benson, acting chairman of National Citizens Political Action Committee, charged that behavior of Republicans on the House Rules Committee in handling FEPC legislation gives weight to the charge that the Southern Democrats are "sabotaging this bill."

In a wire to Rep. Joseph W. Martin (R-Mass), GOP House leader, Benson demanded that Republicans make good on their 1944 campaign platform pledge to support a permanent FEPC

North, South Arrayed In New House Battle Over Poll Tax Issue

Birmingham News 6-11-45

Federal Votes Involved; FEPC, Price Control Up; Hopkins' Return Waited

WASHINGTON, June 11— (AP) — Capitol Hill faces a busy week over such controversies as poll taxes, the Fair Employment Practices Committee and price control.

A Senate test of whether the price control program will be continued without major change is expected today or tomorrow. Two administration-opposed amendments are up for a vote.

In the House, the North lines up against the South again in two old struggles over poll taxes and FEPC. The tax squabble comes up on the floor today while the FEPC clash is first scheduled tomorrow in the rules committee with perhaps a later joust on the floor.

At issue is legislation to outlaw payment of poll taxes as a voting requirement in elections with federal offices at stake and to set up a permanent FEPC patterned after the agency President Roosevelt created by executive order.

Also on Capitol Hill, Claude R. Wickard's nomination as Rural Electrification Administration will be taken up by the Senate agriculture committee today.

The Honeymoon Is Drawing to a Close

Atlanta Constitution

That well-known political bride, Harry S. Truman, has baked the first pan of political biscuits not unanimously acclaimed by congress as just the kind mother used to bake . . . and the honeymoon is about over . . . as everyone knew it would be when Harry S. Truman met his first domestic issue.

He met it like a man—sending a strong note to the house on the FEPC measure. 6-7-45

It is not my purpose here to discuss that measure, except incidentally. I have not read the bill. I do have grave doubts about the present measures. But I do want to talk a little about President Truman.

He is not, we may all be thankful, another Careful Cal Coolidge. That was the label some of his critics tried to pin on him when destiny called him to the presidency of one of the great world powers.

He is a man. And he stands up like one.

The first domestic decision to cause some wincing was his demand upon congress for enactment of immediate legislation to increase unemployment insurance so that the nation might not suffer a depression and, more important, discontent, during the transition from war work to peacetime work. It is estimated there will be an increase in unemployment from 800,000 as of today to about 2,000,000 within two more months.

No Dole

There are those who believe we should suffer it out, letting the economic chips fall where they may. They are almost inevitably the same persons who are greatly agitated about Socialism and Communism. In their stupidity they do not see that if this nation acquires several millions of unemployed persons in a period when prices of all commodities are high and when congress is having pressure put on it to remove controls so that prices may go twice as high, great damage will be done to the fabric of our way of life, about which we have heard so much.

Nothing could, or would, push this country toward socialization of more of its activities than a period of depression and accompanying unemployment at a time when the cost of living is as high as it is. 6-7-45

Yet the same forces which seek to remove controls by abolishing OPA, so that prices may double and triple on every item of food and consumer goods, are those who oppose the covering of those legitimately unemployed by the shutting down of war plants and the lagging employment opportunities in peacetime plants by unemployment insurance. They are, ironically enough, as I already have said, those who lead the chorus which loudly deplores the so-called drift toward Socialism. They, and their kind, have created whatever drift we have.

The FEPC

No more controversial domestic measure has come before the country than the FEPC, the Fair Employment Practices Committee.

Instituted early in the war, it had as its primary purpose the obtaining of a sufficient amount of manpower in war plants and the ending of discrimination preventing that.

It should be recorded that the first cases before the FEPC were not those involving Negroes, but native-born, loyal Japanese and Chinese on the west coast, and, secondly, discriminations on the basis of religion. Some firms were advertising for "Protestant only," "Gentile only."

The FEPC inevitably became, however, almost entirely a Negro issue, the Negro being our largest minority group. It is worth recording, however, that before it became such an issue on a national basis, a great advance was made in voluntary compliances. It also must be recorded that until this day much of the objection to it has come from unions as well as from employers. Many of those now opposing, including Sen. Richard B. Russell, of Georgia, say they approved the original intent of the measure.

The FEPC obtained the support of almost all the political figures of the east, where large Negro populations in cities made it politically expedient to be for it.

So, inevitably and unfortunately, it drifted on until it became what it is today, a measure in which the south has been isolated as its chief regional opposition.

Blame for this must, in part, be laid at the doors of some of the administrators of the committee's regulations. They were, too often, not administrators, but reformers who tried to bring about of this was stupid and properly aroused anger and resentment. great social reforms in their work. Too often they lacked the slightest amount of diplomacy or understanding of human nature and But, my purpose is not to discuss the bill pro or con, but to point out that Harry S. Truman has met his first domestic issue blundered their way into emotional situations which need not have and without any equivocation. Whether you think him occurred. squarely and wrong or not is not so much the point. He made it. 6-7-45

Part of the blame also must be laid at the doors of those who He had a "hard" decision attempted to make far-fetched applications of the regulations in a manner not contemplated by the original executive decree. Much

NAACP Opposes Continuation of Smith Committee, Foe of FEPC

Washington Tribune D.C. 1-27-45

In an effort to defeat House Resolution 88, introduced by Rep. Howard W. Smith (D., Va.) favorably reported to the House on January 18, by the Committee on Rules, the NAACP has urged leaders of the House to vote against the measure.

The resolution would extend for another two years the select committee to investigate executive agencies, popularly known as the Smith Committee. In a telegram to House leaders opposing the continuation of the committee, Leslie Perry, administrative assistant of the Washington Bureau, said in part:

1-27-45

KKK Passed Over

"The major difference between the Dies Committee and the Smith Committee is that the former has received more publicity. Like the Dies Committee, which spent most of its time looking for Reds, while ignoring the KKK and other Fascist groups, the Smith Committee has wholly failed to investigate agencies like the Federal Housing Administration which encourages the use of restrictive covenants to keep Negroes out of the homes they so sorely need.

"Like the Dies Committee, the Smith Committee has been used by its chairman and other reactionaly committee members to assail New Deal agencies and liberals in Government who are doing their jobs well."

The Fair Employment Practice Committee has been the chief target of the Smith Committee. During December, 1943, the Smith Committee ransacked FEPC's files because the Boilermakers' Union complained that the FEPC was fighting jim-crow unions. Jim-crow auxiliary unions were recently condemned by the California Supreme Court.

It also held hearings in January of 1944 on the complaint of the Philadelphia Transit Company after it had been ordered by the FEPC to employ Negroes as street car and bus drivers.

At least one liberal Federal official is believed to have been fired after he had been brought before the Smith Committee on the charge that he was construing the executive order creating FEPC as prohibitive to segregation of Negro seamen recruited through the War Shipping Ad-

Let's Face It

Daily Worker

V-E DAY has brought with it a host of national problems that will require that we turn some of our attention back to Washington.

Take the case of the Fair Employment Practice Committee. It was established on the basis of a wartime emergency order by FDR. As such, its work is necessarily confined to war industry. No one except Congress has the authority to change that.

5-9-45

FEPC has achieved some excellent results. Partly as a result of its activities, the number of Negro workers engaged in war industry has been estimated at a million and a half.

But now that the war in Europe is over, some of this industry will be, or is already being, dismantled. Reconversion offers no protection to the Negro workers who are laid off from these industries. The presidential order and the activities of FEPC as now constituted no longer apply to them.

Many firms, where unions are either nonexistent or not particularly sensitive to the problem, are automatically laying off all Negro workers as soon as they reconvert to peace industry. As an example of what is happening there is the letter received by the National Urban League from a Baltimore firm, in which the head of the firm says he would be glad to answer the League's inquiry about Negroes employed but since the firm is no longer engaged in war work it no longer has Negro workers.

Some trade unions are grappling with the problem from the point of view of seniority and protection of Negro rights. But even if this is solved successfully, it is only part of the story.

WITH hundreds of thousands of Negro workers in the armed forces, some of whom will be released in the next several months, and more hundreds of thousands facing layoffs from war industry, what is needed is a basic national policy as embodied in the permanent FEPC measure now before the House of Representatives.

5-9-45

Despite the urgency of the situation and the difficulties that will result if the measure does not become law soon, it has been getting an awful kicking around in the House. Approved by the Labor Committee, it is now being held up by the arch-reactionary Rules Committee, which refuses to let it out on the floor. To get it by that committee, Rep. Mary Norton, Labor Committee chairman, has been compelled to resort to a discharge petition.

Up until late last week, there were only 102 signatures on the petition of the 218 required. Backers of the bill have appealed to the people to get after their Congressmen to sign it so as to give the House a chance to vote. They are confident that should it come to a vote it will pass the House. After that, the difficulty will come in the Senate, where the polltaxers will try to filibuster it.

5-9-45

IT IS well for us, at this point, to recall the campaign platform and pledges of the GOP on the issue. In order to overcome the unfavorable consequences of his ditching a New York State FEPC measure in 1944, Gov. Dewey put special emphasis on it in his presidential campaign. The Republican platform declared itself emphatically for a permanent FEPC.

Yet Republican members of the House Rules Committee were not helpful, to say the least, in getting the bill on to the floor. Nor has the House GOP leadership aided in its passage.

5-9-45

If you want to know the real GOP attitude, examine the results in the struggles for state FEPCs. Yes, Dewey's state did pass a good bill following irresistible intervention by the people. But in Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Minnesota, California, and other states, GOP blocs have been almost solid against such legislation while Democrats have been almost uniformly solid for it.

Clearly, if FEPC legislation is to be passed in Congress, the GOP will have to be "persuaded" to live up to its campaign pledges. And though Dewey's state has passed such a measure, he is still the titular head of his party and bears considerable responsibility for the position it takes in Congress and in other states.

Negro Leaders Laud Truman

Walter White, secretary of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, today called President Truman's statement on the FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee) "magnificent."

In a message to the President, White said:

"Your statement to Congress denouncing action of the House Appropriation Committee in refusing funds to the FEPC is magnificent. Not only members of minorities are grateful but all Americans who are concerned about winning the war and making democracy real."

Dr. Channing Tobias, Negro leader who consulted frequently with President Roosevelt on FEPC matters, said he had written President Truman praising him on his action to save FEPC.

"The President's letter to Rep. Adolph J. Sabath,' Tobias said, "leaves no one in doubt as to his position on FEPC. Mr. Truman has faced the issue fully and the entire Nation of right-thinking people of all colors and creeds applauds his resolute stand."

FEPC Told of Union Abuses

AFL Local Insists on White Drivers

4 FORCED TO QUIT

Companies Willing to Hire Colored Men

By ART CARTER
Staff Correspondent

DETROIT — Colored employees of a trucking company handling essential war work were fired and replaced by eight white parolees, the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee was told Saturday as complaints against an AFL Teamsters' local and ten companies were aired here.

The companies charged with discriminatory employment practices were:

The Mannion Express Co., Shippers' Dispatch, Inc., the McFarren Cartage Co., Opland Trucking Co., the Detroit Delivery Co., Dealers' Transport Co., Associated Truck Lines, Inc., Fourteenth Avenue Cartage Co., U.S. Truck Co., Inc., and the Douglass Trucking Lines, all located within the Detroit area.

An eleventh company, the White Star Trucking Co., was originally cited for the hearings, but charges against the firm were dismissed late Saturday when it developed that the company had made efforts to hire colored workers as truck drivers, but had been blocked in every attempt by the union.

Charges Against Union

The union, Local 299, whose representatives refused to appear as witnesses because the FEPC had no power to subpoena them, was cited on four counts.

1. For negotiating collecive bargaining agreements with trucking companies requiring over-the-road drivers to be union members;

2. Refusal to admit colored to its membership unless it was clear that they did not intend to obtain truck driver employment, thus automatically barring them from work in this occupation;

Companies Threatened

3. Stating publicly in the press and privately to the companies that colored should not be hired as truck drivers, then using its bargaining rights as authority to dictate to the companies, and

4. Threatening to pull its truck drivers off company trucks when firms, in dire need of drivers, hired colored drivers, unless the latter were discharged.

Companies Oppose Bar

Each of the companies, via letters and conversations with investigating officials, insisted that they would be willing to hire colored workers but were blocked by union opposition of the Local 299.

The parolees from Michigan's Jackson Prison, were hired by the McFarren Cartage Co., because of an acute shortage of available men, and presumably were given union membership although four colored men had been forced out of work at the same company by union opposition and union refusal to admit them to membership.

The story of the employment of the parolees was revealed by Mrs. Lethia Clore, FEPC area examiner, who interviewed Victor H. Marsh, white, superintendent of the company.

Forced to Fire Five

Marsh told Mrs. Clore, she testified, that he hired William Blackburn and George Flagg, as drivers; Willie Woodward and Hardy Harrison, as helpers, and the four were unloading and hauling meat when the union complained to the company and threatened to pull all drivers off the firm's trucks unless the men were dismissed.

This happened February 8, 1945, according to Mrs. Clore's testimony.

Last August 15, L. D. Wallace, a driver with seven years' experience, was hired at McFarren Co., but on August 21 (six days later) released and told by Mr. Marsh that the union (Local 299) objected to his employment because they did not employ colored.

Houston, Horn Absent

Five members of the committee were present for the hearings in the Federal Building, with Malcolm Ross, chairman. Others were John Brophy, Boris Shishkin, Milton P. Webster and Mrs. Sara Southall. Charles H. Houston, Washington, and Charles L. Horn were unable to attend.

George W. Johnson, vice chairman of the committee, was present, with Manuel Block of the committee's legal staff, serving as hearing examiner, and Frank D. Reeves, Washington, and Simon Stickgold, Chicago, attorneys for the committee.

Union Bias Told at FEPC Hearings

Color Bars Revealed by Detroit Drivers

NO DEFENSE MADE

Trucking Companies Blame Closed Shops

DETROIT — Detailed descriptions of how the AFL Teamsters' Local 299 succeeded in creating and maintaining a pattern of discrimination in a large segment of the trucking industry in the Detriot area were outlined by witnesses at the Fair Employment Practices Committee hearings, recently.

Testimony by a dozen experienced drivers and government officials showed clearly that the discriminatory practices not only circumscribed job opportunities for qualified drivers, solely because of their race, but had seriously impaired the effective flow of war materials.

No representative of the union appeared, each hiding behind the lack of subpoena power by the FEPC.

USES Admits Compliants

Officials of the United States Employment Service, however, told of scores of complaints from colored men who had been referred to jobs through USES, and FEPC investigating agents described how they had tried in vain to get the union to alter its policy.

Bias on the part of the Associated Truck Lines, Inc., was revealed by Henry Thomas, who testified that in April, 1944, company officials told him the union would not allow them to hire colored.

Similarly, Zuett Jefferson, who has had 16 years driving experience, was denied a job at the Douglas Truckling Lines.

Janitor Accepted

J. E. Douglas, president, he declared told him, "We have no policy against colored. We have a colored janitor, but the union refuses to issue cards to non-whites and we have a closed shop agreement."

The refusal of Local 299 to accept his transfer from Local 247 was cited by Oscar L. Purvey, as the reason for his rejection by the U.S. Trucking Co., Inc., which required membership in Local 299.

Joseph Smith, bus driver for the Detroit Street Railway, said he was hired by the Detroit Delivery Co., but fired before he worked because white drivers threatened to walk off the job.

The company sent his referral card back to USES, however, marked "did not hire."

Had Driven in 36 States

Stennis E. Lloyd, who has had interstate driving experience in 36 States, said he was sent to the Dealers Transport Co., for a job by USES, but sent away with the explanation, "We don't hire colored drivers here. We hire 'em in Chicago."

A driver with 28 years' experience, George E. Johnson declared that he was hired by the Mannion Express Co., but later discharged because Local 299 objected to his working without a union card.

Johnson, member of Local 337, sought transfer to Local 299, but the transfer was refused unless he paid a $200 fee.

Experience Ignored

Despite his 25 years' experience, Charles Jones who sought work at the Opland Trucking Co., was flatly refused because of his color, it was revealed.

Three others, Joseph H. Smith, Edward Calloway and K. C. Bills, each with over five years experience, sought work at the Detroit Delivery Co., but were also refused because they were colored.

Calloway said that the manager told him he could not hire colored now, although he retorted, "There is no better time than now," but still he did not get the job.

Local Secretary Blamed

Similar evidences of discrimination by the trucking companies because of the union's anti-colored policy was revealed by all the drivers who testified.

Cyrenius Newcomb, USES director, admitted that the "uncompromising stand of James Hoffa, (Local 299 secretary) prevented the hiring of colored men" by the trucking companies.

Edward M. Swann, examiner in charge of the Detroit FEPC office, said further that a Local 299 business agent told him that if he "put colored to work as drivers, the rest of the drivers would quit."

Refused to Set Precedent

Owners of Shippers Dispatch, Inc., told the FEPC that a union agent told them "not to hire colored, but to tell them there were no jobs open."

When FEPC examiners suggested that the company hire colored drivers anyway, inasmuch as there was a tremendous need for experienced drivers, the firm's agent declared, "I'll be darn if we're going to be the guinea pigs."

The detailed testimony dealt with an alleged ban on experienced Negro truck drivers by Local 299, Teamsters Union (AFL).

USES AND FEPC officials testified managers of trucking firms usually said they were willing to hire Negroes as drivers, but were prevented by union regulations.

Union representatives were not present at the hearings.

Taft Silent on 'Broken Pledge'

AFRO-AMERICAN 2-24-45 Md.

WASHINGTON — Senator Robert A. Taft (Rep., Ohio) refused this week to reply to charges of double-crossing colored constituents, made by Carl Murphy, editor-in-chief of the AFRO-AMERICAN Newspapers, following the introduction of what the latter called his emasculated FEPC bill.

In refusing to answer the letter, Senator Taft declared:

"I do not care to answer all of the intolerant letters sent me by colored citizens [Indicating that he had many.] I explanied my position fully in a statement to the press when the measure was introduced and have no further comment to make." 2-24-45

Reminded of GOP Pledge

In his letter, Mr. Murphy inquired whether Senator Taft thought that he knew more about the problem of colored people than the party leaders like Governor Dewey and others who supported the Chavez Bill, which called punitive action against those who discriminated against colored persons in employment, and whether his weak measure was not a violation of the pledge given in the party platform which he (Senator Taft) helped to frame.

Senator Taft declared that, when the plank was drawn, no question of the powers of enforcement was either discussed or considered.

"Surprised" at Implications

"It was a surprise," he said, "when I saw to what extent employers would be regimented in this measure, and I had no such idea in mind when I pledged to work for the establishment of a permanent FEPC.

"The Chavez measure is based on a section of the labor relations act which I considered abortive, in that it permits those injured to bring suit against an employer without observing the rules of legal evidence.

"It is my belief that it will be possible for any person to build up a case of race prejudice against any employer regardless of what the other extenuating circumstances for failure to promote might be.

Favors Persuasion

"It is my belief that more can be accomplished and that colored people themselves will be better off if we use methods of persuasion instead of rigid enforcement. My bill calls for the establishment of regional commissions to work in the various communities along this line.

"It may be possible that some institution may take on a certain per cent of colored and others would be better off with all colored employees, as some are with all white employees. These matters should be worked out by consultation.

Fears Filibuster

"I believe that, by pressing for passage of the Chavez measure, we will just run into a filibuster from the South, which will get nothing done.

"I cannot guarantee that my bill will not also be filibustered, but I believe it will face less opposition than the other bill. Then, if we find later that this method is not producing results, we can come back later and ask the Congress to payy another type of bill.

"Cold Amend Bill"

"I am not opposed to amendments which will strengthen my bill where the concern involved affects the whole community, like in the case of the Capital Transit Company and other public utilities, but I am against the regimentation af all private employers."

Taft Attempt To Frighten Negro Railroad Workers

Miami Whip 7-62-

The "white" bugaboo was waved to Negro railroad workers last week when Sen. Robert Taft of Ohio introduced his toothless FEPC bil. Taft tried to frighten Negro support away from a compulsory FEPC bill by picturing the possibilitoy of black-white competition for Pullman porter and dining car waiter jobs. 2-24-45

Taft pleaded the case of the employer. He said that compulsory provisions of the FEPC bill "heretofore introduced in the senate will hinder progress towards solving the problem rather than achieve it." He added that "the act goes much further than the National Labor Relations act in providing an almost complete regimentation of employers." 2-24-45

Race and religion will enter into every decision, Taft said. The Methodist Book concern will have to employ Catholics and Catholic institutions will nave to employ Protestants. Then he added:

"White waiters and porters could insist upon most of the work in the Pullman sleepers and dining cars."

The Ohioan followed the anti-white scare he intended to throw into Negro FEPC backers by saying that "in the long run this board (permanent FEPCO would tell every employer how he must make up his labor force."

The NAACP reminded Taft of the trick to set up an investigating commission with no compulsory powers. 2-24-45

"You can not help but realize this proposal of yours, for a commission to investigate and find out whether there is discrimination and its extent, is a move that deceives no one," the NAACP said. "What is needed is action to correct the discriminatory practices known to exist. 2-24-45

After denouncing the Ohio Republican leader as the perpetrater of "a political trick unworthy of a senator and party leader of your prominence," the NAACP assured him that its "advice to our members over the country and to other citizens is that until your action is repudiated by the Republican party and its congressional leaders, the party must be held responsible and must be viewed as being opposed to any effective measures to guarantee Negro Americans a chance at employment without discrimination. For aside from stating your views, the plain purpose of the bill you have introduced is to divide and alienate support for the effective legislation (S101) now before the senate."

Social Advance Calls Bill Great

AFRO-AMERICAN Balt., Md.

Passage Essential to Economic Freedom

HEARING TUESDAY

2-24-45

Stand May Curve GOP Rift in Assembly

ALBANY, N.Y.—Gov. Thomas E. Dewey told an interracial delegation Friday that he is "very definitely" in favor of the Ives-Quinn anti-discrimination bill which provides a permanent State Fair Employment Practice Committee. 2-24-45

"This bill is one of the great social advances of our time," the Governor told the group which was headed by Charles Evans Hughes, Jr., chairman of Mayor LaGuardia's New York City Committee on Unity.

Seen as Move to Curb Rift

Observers here feel that the Governor's clear statement of position my prevent a further split among Republican legislators, a minority of whom are supporting opposition groups and individuals including biased railroad brotherhoods and industrial and commercial employers.

Because of opposition pressure, a public hearing on the bills has been set for Tuesday afternoon in the Assembly chamber although the Assembly was due to take final action on the main bill the same day. 2-24-45

The main bill, outlawing employment discrimination because of race, color, creed or national origin was reported favorably by the Assembly Ways and Means Committee last week.

Following the two-hour conference with the Governor, Mr. Hughes, with other members of the delegation representing the New York City-wide Citizens' Committee on Harlem, issued a prepared statement saying the Ives-Quinn bill had been discuseed.

Would Promote Harmony

"The Governor told us," he said, "that he believed that this bill is one of the great social advances of our time. It would serve, he (the Governor) said, to assure aquality of opportunity for all elements of our citizenship regardless of race, creed, color or national origin and would be a lasting forward step in promoting harmony among the people of the State.

"The Governor told us that he believed this bill would make the rights guaranteed by our constitution a living reality and that its passage was an essential step in the process of preserving economic freedom which is fundamental to human liberty.

Endorsed by Major Groups

"We told the Governor of our gratitude for his active sponsorship of the fight against discrimination and offered all possible assitance in bringing the merts of the bill to further attenton of the public and of members of the Legislature.

"We assured him of our belief that the bill soundly carries out the intention of the act passed last year creating the commission and of the forthright statement in the Governor's annual message in which he said, 'I cannot urge too strongly that, after the commission has rendered its report, action should be taken to place our State in the forefront of the nation in the handling of this vital issue.'"

The statement pointed out that the bill "has the active endorsement of major groups throughtout the State, including the outstanding Protestants, Catholic, Jewish, labor, patriotic welfare, civc and veterans' organizations, as well as outstandng spokesmen in every walk of life, and of every racial and national origin."

Members of Delegation

Members of the delegation in addition to Mr. Hughes were:

Dr. Wilbur T. Clemens, genereal secretary, New York State Council of Churches; Charles A. Collier, Jr. executive secretary of the City-Wide Citizens' Committee of Harlem; Stephen S. Jackson, former Domestic Relations Court Justice;

Thurgood Marshall, special counsel of the NACCP; Justice Nathan D. Perlman, of the Court of Special Sessions, member of Mayor LaGuardia's Committee on Unity and chairman of the legislative committee of the American Jewish Congress; City Court Judge Francis E. River, member of the board of directors of the New York State Citizens' Council;

Professor James H. Sheldon, adminstrative chairman of the Anti-Nazi League and chairman of the New York Metropolitan Council on Fair Employment Practices, and C. D. Williams, chairman of legislative committee of the United Neighborhod Houses.

White Writers Charge Taft Double-Crossed Minorities

Afro-American Md: 2-17-45

WASHINGTON

Under the heading, "How Senator Taft Double-Crossed the Country's Minority Groups," Charles Van Devander and William O. Player, in their syndicated column, Washington Memo, had this to say last Wednesday:

The story of how Senator Taft (R., Ohio) had double-crossed not only the colored people of the nation—whose votes the Republican party so desperately sought in the last election—but also the members of all other minority groups in the country is best told chronologically. It goes like this:

Pre-election

June 27, 1944—The Republican party adopted a platform, drafted by a committee headed by Senator Taft, containing the following plank: 2-17-45

"We pledge the establishment by Federal legislation of a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission."

Sept. 20, 1944—The Senate Committee on Education and Labor, of which Senator Taft was (and is) the ranking Republican member, voted out unanimously a favorable report on a bill by Senator Chavez (D., N.M.) to create a permanent FEPC with full enforcement powers.

Nov. 1, 1944—Governor Dewey, in Buffalo, declared on behalf of himself and his fellow Republicans that, if victorious, "we shall establish the FEPC as a permanent agency with full legal authority."

Post-election

Feb. 2, 1945—An Ohio delegation, seeking Taft's support of permanent FEPC legislation scheduled for early consideration, was astounded to hear, from the Senator's own lips, that:

(a) He had never really favored the original bill. 2-17-45

(b) He had joined in the favorable vote during the last Congress only because he knew the legislation would have to be carried over for action by the new Congress.

(c) He was against any bill giving the FEPC enforcement powers.

Feb. 5, 1945—Taft introduced a bill of his own, to set up a "permanent" FEPC—with authority to "make comprehensive studies," "to call witnesses and inquire into specific cases of discrimination," "to make recommendations," and to "take every step to secure community interest and co-operation and voluntary compliance by employers and labor unions."

But to enforce anything? No!

In describing his bill to the Senate, Taft added: 2-17-45

"In my opinion, any . . . compulsory measure will create more bad racial and religious feeling than any other method which can be pursued. I think it will do the colored race much more harm than good. Progress against discrimination must be made gradually and must be made by voluntary co-operation and education. . . ."

F. E. P. C. To Make Complete Study Of Capital Transit Co. Testimony Before Deciding Future Action

New York Age 1-27-45

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Charges of discrimination in violation of Executive Order 9346 against the Capital Transit Company were examined in public hearing before the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice January 15 and 16, in the Court of Appeals courtroom. 1-27-45

In accordance with regular procedure, Malcolm Ross, Chairman of the committee, announced that a full study of the record will be made prior to issuance of a decision.

The complaints alleged that the company, despite a serious need of workers in "platform jobs," refused to hire qualified Negro applicants. Some of the complaints date back to 1942.

Edmund L. Jones, counsel for the company, declared the company was willing to hire Negroes in operating jobs, but was convinced from past attempts that such a move would precipitate a walkout of its white workers. He cited a report prepared by Paul Lunt, author-sociologist, which indicated "a distinct possibility of a complete stoppage of transportation if Negroes are hired in platform jobs" by the company. 1-27-45

Louis Wirth, sociologist of the University of Chicago, also testified, and challenged the accuracy of Mr. Lunt's report and contended that no substantial support for the fear of a walkout had been offered.

Five complainants testifed they were turned down upon applying for jobs, and several officials of the company testified in its behalf, including E. D. Merrill, president of the company. Mr. Merrill admitted the company's failure to hire qualified Negro applicants in operating jobs and expressed regret that the "situation exists," but insisted that the company "has no prejudice whatsoever against hiring Negroes for platform service." The situation, he maintained, is beyond the control of the company.

Richmond Times 6-11-45

THERE are many sincere and public-spirited advocates of a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee, and the philosophy behind the proposal to establish such an agency in Washington is precisely in the American tradition. But although these things are true, this bill which is designed to help minorities probably would have precisely the opposite result, at least insofar as the Negro minority in the South is concerned.

Legislation rests on public opinion. No law which is strongly opposed by the overwhelming majority will ever be effective, or will ever achieve the results which it seeks to achieve. This is especially true of legislation such as that which seeks to establish a permanent FEPC. Here is a bill which involves some of the most emotionally felt issues in our public life, but which ignores those emotions in providing for enforcement. Such a law is often worse than no law at all. After much study of the issues involved here, we are convinced that if a permanent FEPC is established in Washington over the virtually unanimous, if not completely unanimous, opposition of the entire Southern bloc in Congress, the consequences can only be harmful.

REPRESENTATIVE MARY T. NORTON, of New Jersey, chief proponent of the bill in the House, has prepared a series of questions and answers about this piece of legislation. She says that the types of discrimination forbidden in the bill on the basis of race, color, creed, national origin, or ancestry are those "in employment or union membership, i. e., hiring, discharging, wages, seniority, transfers, demotions, upgrading, union auxiliaries, etc." Answering her own question, "Does the bill require an employer to hire Negroes, Jews, Mexicans, or other minorities?," she says: "No. An employer may hire or reject anyone he pleases, on any basis and for any reason, so long as a needed and qualified person is not rejected because of his race, color, creed, national origin, or ancestry." This answer, when analyzed, is really meaningless, for the second half of the sentence partially nullifies the first half. The important fact is that this law would make possible the imposition of heavy penalties upon employers for failure to hire colored persons.

This is not the way to broaden opportunities for the colored people of the South. This is the road to a vast amount of bitterness and strife. The lessons of the past should teach Congress that the entry of the Federal authorities into this delicate relationship of employer and employee, and the emphasis which would be placed in the law upon the race issue, would simply fan the flames of interracial antagonism, instead of quenching them.

Such a lifelong friend of the Negro race as OSWALD GARRISON VILLARD, whose greatest pride is that he is the grandson of WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON, the Abolitionist, is opposed to this type of legislation. He feels that it is more harmful than otherwise, and that it tends to accentuate race differences, instead of eliminating them. He and half-a-dozen eminent New Yorkers of liberal inclinations signed a statement in opposition to the IVES Bill, which is of a similar character, and which was passed in New York State a short time ago.

So liberal a man as SENATOR CLAUDE PEPPER, of Florida, is against the establishment of a permanent FEPC, and so is the militantly liberal Louisville Courier-Journal. Both have fought many battles for the Negroes of the South, but they can see that the sort of statute which is being advocated would, in all likelihood, increase existing tensions, instead of lessening them.

REPRESENTATIVE BROOKS HAYS, of Arkansas, one of the most enlightened and progressive members of the House, always a friend of the disadvantaged, made a long address on the House floor recently in opposition to this bill. "It is unity of purpose we seek," he declared, "not enforced relationships." He pointed out that the bill would not only cover the hiring of workers, but also their discharge, and he stated that where an employee was discharged, and he complained to the FEPC, that body could order the employer to reinstate the worker, and the employer would go to jail, if he declined. Similar penalties can be imposed for refusal to hire, if the law is violated.

It is only right, of course, that colored workmen who have made good on merit during the war, should not be laid off when there is a slump, simply because they are colored. But while this is true, it is also true that Federal decrees against individual employers, especially in the Southern States, are sure to be deeply resented. The desired results as to both hiring and firing should be sought by other means. 6-11-45

Some absurd and even hysterical things have been said by Southerners against this FEPC bill, and we consider them so much rodomontade. On the other hand, there is no use blinking the facts concerning this legislation, and the real dangers which it contains.

It may be argued that while far-reaching powers are conferred by the bill, they would not be exercised. What guarantee is there of that? None whatever. On the contrary, given the zeal and unquestioned integrity of many of the bill's advocates, they might well consider that the South ought to be singled out first for attention, since it contains by far the bulk of the country's Negroes. Should that occur, the fat would be in the fire, and irreparable harm would be done.

THE TIMES-DISPATCH has frequently championed the cause of better employment opportunities for our Negro citizens. We shall continue to do so, especially in the years immediately ahead, when it is so important that returning Negro soldiers and sailors be made to feel that they are being fairly treated. But this newspaper cannot support legislation to that end which could arouse great interracial hostility, and create almost interminable friction. If such consequences flowed from the establishment of a permanent FEPC—and they probably would—the Negroes would be the chief sufferers, and interracial progress would be set back for decades.

FEPC Reports Dixie Opposes Equal Chance

Atlanta World 2-4-45 G2.

Recalcitrant In Attitude Toward Negro

WASHINGTON —(ANP) — The south is still proving recalcitrant in its attitude toward utilization of Negro Labor, a report of the FEPC discloses. During the year 1944 3,835 cases were docked while 3,721 were closed. Of the cases closed 1,324 or 35.7 per cent resulted in satisfactory adjustment.

2-4-45

The smallest total of satisfactory adjustments among the regions in which there are field offices was that of Region VII where 368 cases were docketed during the year, 214 closed with 25 satisfactory adjustments. The region embraces Georgia, South Carolina, Tenn. Florida and Miss.

The pending load of 2,054 cases as of January 1, 1945 showed an increase of 123 over the figure as of the preceding January 1.

An additional sub-office will be set up by the committee in Cincinnati, it was said to help in handling an increased number of cases originating in that area.

BOILERMAKERS REBUFF FEPC

Chicago Defender 3-3-45

TAMPA.—Florida Boilermakers this week showed the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee "where to get off."

Willie Joe Ray, business agent for Local 433, A.F. of L. Boilermaker's Union refused point blank to discuss the organization of auxiliaries for Negro workers with Dr. Witherspoon Dodge of Atlanta, regional FEPC director.

The local here which will not admit Negroes to membership also refuses to set up "jim crow" auxiliaries and thus prevents colored workers from obtaining skilled jobs in Tampa shipyards with which the union holds contracts.

Dr. Dodge said while here this week that he would ask FEPC Chairman Malcolm Ross to call an immediate hearing on the matter. Following a two-day investigation of hiring policies in the shipyards, Dodge declared: 3-3-45

"It is perfectly clear that the Boilermakers here will not do as other locals in the South have done—form auxiliaries so that Negroes can work at skilled trades to help the war effort."

Although he wrote Ray from Atlanta saying that he would like to confer with the business agent while in Tampa, Dodge was told both days while here that Ray was "out of town" and that Ray's secretary had no authority to discuss the matter with the FEPC director.

Two Bills Introduced To Make Agency Permanent

By United Press

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5. – Rep. William L. Dawson (D., Ill.), said in a statement that establishment of a permanent FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee) would aid in utilizing "every American citizen in all our efforts to bring this war to a speedy close."

Dawson is one of the two Negro members of the newly convened 79th Congress. The other is Rep. Adam C. Powell (D., N. Y.).

Dawson

A permanent FEPC, he said, would assure the use of every citizen, "according to his knowledge and skill, regardless of race, religion or national origin."

Rep. Charles M. LaFollette (R., Ind.) has introduced a bill to establish a permanent, five-man FEPC.

Meanwhile, Rep. Joseph C. Baldwin (R., N. Y.), introduced another bill for creation of a permanent FEPC. Baldwin said that his bill differed from other FEPC measures in that all rules and regulations of the proposed commission would have to be approved by Congress before it's effective.

FEPC and Navy Sign Agreement

AFRO-AMERICAN 1-6-45

PHILADELPHIA

A new procedure for handling cases of alleged discrimination in civilian employment because of race or religion has been worked out between the Navy Department and the Fair Employment Practice Committee, G. James Fleming, FEPC regional director, announced Tuesday.

In cases involving employees of naval shore establishments, a marked improvement in adjusting complaints on the local level is provided for in the new agreement, Fleming pointed out at the FEPC office in the Stephen Girard Building. 1-6-45

FEPC Can Represent Worker

In such cases, he said, FEPC representatives may not only discuss the charges, but where a case goes through the navy's grievance procedure, an FEPC examiner may represent employees at certain points in this procedure.

If a complainant is still dissatisfied after his grievance is decided and appeals to the FEPC for further assistance, regional directors may appeal to the Navy Department through the Washington office of FEPC, according to the new plan.

Provision is also made to facilitate conferences between navy representatives in plants and naval shore establishments "to discuss policies, procedures and practices of general interest concerning matters of discrimination."

Conferences Helpful

Easy means of conference on the local level is one of the most constructive ways to correct complaints of alleged discrimination in employment, Mr. Fleming pointed out.

"In this manner," he said, "complaints which are not valid can be immediately dismissed, allowing the time needed for those cases which must go through several steps of negotiation. Local contacts also mean greater understanding of each other's problems on the part of the FEPC and navy officials."

Fleming also made known that Army-FEPC relations now provide for the fifreest relations "with a view toward adjusting as many charges of discrimination as possible on the local level."

FEPC Directive to Munitions Plant

Afro-American 1-6-45

WASHINGTON

The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice has directed the United States Cartridge Company, St. Louis to accept available and needed workers in its munitions plants without discrimination because of race or color, Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, announced December 29.

The committee also directed the company not to lay off or discharge workers through a dual seniority system that is not applicable equally to colored and white workers, and not to maintain any racial quota system of employment.

Four Complaints Dismissed

The decision follows public hearings held on complaints against the company last summer in St. Louis. Of the seven specific complainants. who had been rehired and two others reinstated. Four complaints were dismissed.

An official of the plant which has seven buildings with only white workers and one with only colored, had testified that the company tried to follow the population ratio by employing 90 per cent white and 10 per cent colored.

The use of dual seniority systems, it was revealed, resulted on one occasion in more colored being discharged than would have been under the single seniority system and a disproportionate number of whites discharged during two subsequent cutbacks.

FEPC Cites Capital Transit Company For Employment Bias; Public Hearings Start Jan. 15th

New York Age 1-13-45

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Capital Transit Company, of Washington, D. C., by refusing to hire qualified Negro workers has failed to utilize available manpower on its trolley and bus lines, according to a complaint served Tuesday on the company by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice. Restrictive racial hiring on transit lines serving Federal war workers is cited by FEPC as a violation of Executive Order 9346, which forbids discrimination in war industries or government service because of race, creed, color or national origin. 1-13-45

Hearing in the case will be held before the seven members of FEPC January 15 and 16 in the courtroom of the Court of Appeals, Malcolm Ross, Committee chairman, said The company has been requested to appear and present its testimony.

Specific charges that fourteen Negro men and women applicants were refused employment by the company are cited in the committee's complaint. In reviewing the hiring policies of Capital Transit over the last two years, FEPC said that an original discriminatory order for "white only," placed with the United States Employment Service, of the War Manpower Commission, was later modified by an expressed company willingness to accept referrals without regard to race While this brought 105 applicants from Negroes for positions as bus operators, motormen, conductors and checkers, the committee charges that the company nevertheless refused to hire the applicants and that discrimination because of race still continues.

The FEPC complaint asserts that the company's refusal fully to utilize available manpower has resulted in inadequate transportation service to Government and District war workers "to the detriment of the prosecution of the war, the morale and national workers' unity."

In addition to Chairman Ross, the following FEPC members will sit in the case: Miss Sara Southall, vice president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters; and John Brophy, War Labor Board member and director of industrial union councils for the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

St. Louis Firm Gets

any racial quota system of employment which, the committee finds, results in refusal to hire in violation of Executive Order 9346. 1-5-45

Four Complaints Dropped

The decision of the committee follows public hearings held on complaints against the Cartridge company last summer in St. Louis. Of the seven specific complainants who alleged discrimination, the committee, on the findings, directed the company to hire one Negro worker who had been refused employment, and to reinstate two other Negro workers. The committee dismissed four complaints that they found were not supported by the evidence.

The United States Cartridge company's plant is composed of eight buildings or units in the St. Louis area, seven of them having only white production workers and one having only Negro workers. 1-5-45

A company official testified at the St. Louis hearings that, in setting up these units for the production of ammunition under War and Navy contracts, the company had attempted to follow the St. Louis population ratio by employing 90 per cent white workers and 10 per cent Negro.

Suffer Under Dual Plan

Examination of cutbacks occurring last spring showed that the use of different seniority systems, one for Negro and one for white workers, resulted on one occasion in more Negroes being discharged than would have been under the single seniority system provided in the labor-management contract with the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, CIO. and that during two subsequent cutbacks the white workers suffered a disproportionate number of discharges under the dual seniority system.

It was admitted by a company witness that it would have been easier to solve the cutback problem had the Negro workers originally been fully integrated instead of placed separately in one of the units. William Sentner, general vice president of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, CIO testified that it was impossible to apply equitably the principle of seniority when there are segregated units within a plant. 1-5-45

Quota System Mishievous

In its decision the committee found that a racial quota system "is equally as mischievous when used to select employees for layoffs as when applied with regard to their hire.

Executive Order 9346 does not provide that Negroes or other minority groups shall be hired or retained in employment in accordance with population ratios. The order, on the contrary, forbids the use of extraneous considerations of race, creed, color, or national origin in hiring or in laying off employees.

It is no defense to argue, as the respondent has done, that its quota system on certain occasions operated to the advantage of Negro employees and to the prejudice of white workers. The executive order forbids discrimination against white as well as against colored employees."

Two more Coast plants agree to bypass unions

Los Angeles Tribune 4-9-45

WASHINGTON — Two more West Coast shipyards have notified the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices that they will comply with FEPC directives to bypass jim crowing unions in the hiring of Negroes, it was announced this week.

Notifications were received from the Oregon Shipbuilding Corp. and the Kaiser Co., Inc., both of Portland, Ore. Previously, word of compliance had been received by the FEPC from Western Pipe and Steel Co. and Consolidated Steel Corp., both of Los Angeles, the four companies employing a total of 90,000 workers in the construction of ships for the government.

The FEPC has yet to hear from the California Shipbuilding Corp. of Los Angeles, Chairman Malcolm Ross said.

All five companies had been involved, along with the AFL International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Shipbuilders and Helpers of America, in negotiations with the FEPC since 1943.

The FEPC then found that the closed shop contract with the union and the refusal of the union to admit Negroes to full membership discriminated against Negroes. Unless the union agreed to scuttle its jim crow auxiliaries, the plants should bypass the union in hiring Negroes, the FEPC ruled. 4-9-45

The union, which was ordered to grant Negroes full membership rights, has not yet complied.

Cincinnati War Plant Discrimination To Be Examined By FEPC

New York Age 3-17-45

CINCINNATI, Ohio—Complaints of discrimination in employment because of race or color against eight war plants will be examined in public here March 15, 16 and 17.

The firms named in the complaints are the Crosley Corp., F. H. Lawson Co, Baldwin Co., Victor Electric Products, Inc., Kirk and Blum Manufacturing Co., Cambridge Tile Manufacturing Co., Streitman Biscuit Co. Division of the United Biscuit Co. of America, and the Schaible Co. All are engaged in essential war work. 3-17-45

Sixty-three complaints have been listed by the committee against the firms, alleging refusal to employ or train qualified Negro men and women in other than menial capacities despite a need for workers and accusing three of the compaines of refusing to hire Negroes at all

The full FEPC committee will sit at the hearing.

Asserts Rights Involved

Courier-Journal Ky

To the Editor of The Courier-Journal.

In your editorials on the Fair Employment Practices Commission, you say very aptly that it is more of an educational question than a matter of legislation. But it seems to me that you overlook a very pertinent point. That point is the question of inate human rights.

A few years ago I was acquainted with a business executive who, by reason of some personal distaste, would not have a blonde in his office. Crude, perhaps, but was it not his right? 3-17-45

Let us picture the hypothetical case of a woman who had two children, a son and a daughter. The son mistreated and killed in a prison camp, the daughter, a nurse perhaps on Corregidor, mistreated by the Japs. After the war the woman advertises for a housemaid. The ad is answered by a Japanese woman. On first sight this bereaved mother says, "No, I can't use you. I don't want a Jap around me." Would that mother be outside her human rights? Yet it would be a violation of the F.E.P.C. 3-17-45

The Negroes themselves should be able to see that this F.E.P.C., although embodying an undeniable principle, and although supported by many sincere people, is at heart merely another politicians' vote catcher.

Let us not be so quick to let hysteria run away with plain common sense.

FEPC WINS FAVOR IN GEORGIA

1-27-45 Pittsburgh Courier Pa.

ATLANTA—"Conditions of the Negro worker would have been far worse if FEPC had not come to this region," declared Dr. Witherspoon Dodge, new regional director of the Fair Employment Practices Committee. Dr. Dodge pointed out that there had been no violence in connection with the work of FEPC in this region and said that the agency had been "a real help in improving the rights of the Negro worker and a better relationship between Negro and white workers." 1-27-45

Dr. Dodge recalled that in the beginning there was great protest over the setting up of FEPC offices in this region and in Atlanta. As evidence of the improved thinking of the people of this region on the merits of FEPC, he pointed out that this fight against FEPC had greatly diminished.

He said that the present change of attitude on the part of unions towards the Negro is most encouraging. He explained that there was a certain manufacturing plant in Georgia that the CIO had been trying to organize for some time without success. When the employer hired Negroes in skilled work the white workers of that plant came to the Textile Workers of America, CIO, and said that if the union would get the Negroes but the white workers would allow the union to come in and organize the plant. Although the union had spent great effort to organize this plant, they refused the offer on this biased basis, Dr. Dodge said

Dr. Dodge long has been a public figure of national repute. For many years he was pastor of one of Atlanta's leading churches After serving for some time with the CIO he came back to Atlanta in his present appointment. John Hope II is field representative in the same office.

FIRMS ORDERED TO CEASE BAN ON NEGRO WOMEN

Washington Tribune D.C. 1-27-45

The President's Fair Employment Practice Committee on Wednesday ordered the Carter Carburetor Corporation and the Wagner Electric Corporation of St. Louis to cease refusing jobs to qualified Negro women on racial grounds.

Malcolm Ross, chairman of the FEPC said fulfillment of President Roosevelt's executive order against discrimination in hiring for war plants could not wait "upon inertia of the exhaustion of the supply of white labor." 1-27-45

"It requires the complete cessation of discriminatory employment practices at once, particularly at this time when a drastic shortage of manpower in our war industries is delaying the production of war material for our armed forces overseas," the chairman stated.

Scandal and panics can unite more women than money can men.

Fair Employment Laws Pending in 14 States

People's Voice 3-24-45

By AUGUSTA STRONG

Action in 14 states outside of New York is being speeded up at the instigation of Negro, civic, and labor organizations for the enactment of legislation to prevent discrimination in employment against racial and religious minorities. In four neighboring states—New Jersey, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts, hearings on proposed bills are set for this week, with every evidence of wide popular support favoring the laws. 3-24-45

PV has queried the governors of the states where anti-bias laws are pending as to their stand on the local FEPC bills. Most of those who replied gave a pretty fair example of fence-sitting. Briefly the situation in the various states is as follows:

PENNSYLVANIA

Popular strength is centered around the Brown Bill, similar to New York's, which has been endorsed by the Harrisburg and Philadelphia Central Labor Unions, the state CIO, and the Political Action Committee. Hearings are at Harrisburg March 27. Gov. Edward Martin wired PV on the bill: "I have taken the position that I have no 'must' legislation, but I think my desires have been very well expressed in the press."

MASSACHUSETTS 3-24-45

Public hearings are still proceeding on FEPC legislation, with the Catholic Church, which is highly influential here, the American Federation of Labor, CIO, American Jewish Congress, and a large coalition of organizations supporting such a law. At this week's hearings the opposition, hitherto silent, is expected to open fire. Gov. Maurice J. Tobin refused to commit himself either for or against the bill to PV.

NEW JERSEY

Republican Gov. Walter E. Edge is backing a bill, introduced by Assemblyman James O. Hill, lone Negro legislator, which provides for a fair employment commission under the Dep't of Education, with penalties of $500 or 90 days in jail for violators of the law. Another bill has been introduced by Democrats, and Hill has come in for some criticism from Negro organizations for introducing a bill without sufficient consultation with minority groups and their leaders. Hearings take place March 20th in Trenton.

CONNECTICUT

Five bills have been introduced, the chief point of difference being the question of enforcement provisions. Representative Harold Conroy's bill is reported to come closest to New York's law and is the one which unions and many civic groups are supporting. Public hearings take place March 20th in Hartford.

ILLINOIS 3-24-45

Gov. Dwight H. Green told PV: "Illinois law now guarantees fair employment practices by employers holding war contracts. A bill is now pending to establish a fair employment practices commission. I favor principle of legislation to protect racial minorities in employment."

WISCONSIN

A joint House and Assembly bill has been introduced making appropriations for a fair employment practice committee and setting up penalties for violation. The bill is sponsored by Senator Tehan and Assemblyman Simmons.

OHIO

Gov. Frank J. Lausche wired PV: "Several bills have been introduced in the Legislature having to do with fair employment practice. May I assure you they will be given careful consideration."

KANSAS 3-24-45

The Republican controlled judiciary committee of the state legislature killed the FEPC bill, introduced by Rep. William H. Towers, veteran Negro legislator from Kansas City.

Although FEPC bills are pending in the states of Michigan, Colorado, Washington, Illinois, New Mexico and no progress has been reported this week. Indiana passed a weak FEPC law without "teeth" on Feb. 20.

Hiring and Laying Off By Dual System Disapproved

St. Louis Argus 1-5-45

The Segregation Of Employes In Separate Buildings Stamped As Drawback

The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice has directed the United States Cartridge Company, St. Louis, Mo., to accept available and needed workers in its munitions plants without discrimination because of race or color, Malcolm Ross, chairman of the committee, announced today. The committee also directed the company not to lay off or discharge workers through a dual seniority system that is not applicable equally to Negro and white workers, and not to maintain any racial quota system of employment which, the committee finds, results in refusal to hire in violation of Executive Order 9346. 1-5-45

The United States Cartridge Company's plant is composed of eight buildings or units in the St. Louis area, seven of them having only white production workers and one having only Negro workers. A company official testified at the St. Louis hearings that in setting up these units for the production of ammunition under War and Navy contracts, the company had attempted to follow the St. Louis population ratio by employing 90 per cent white workers and 10 per cent Negro. Examination of cutbacks occurring last spring showed that the use of different seniority systems, one for Negro and one for white workers, resulted on one occasion in more Negroes being discharged than would have been under the single seniority system provided in the labor-management contract with the United Electrical Radio and Machine Workers of America, CIO, and that during two subsequent cutbacks the white workers suffered a disproportionate number of discharges under the dual seniority system. 1-5-45

Segregation Condemned

It was admitted by a company witness that it would have been easier to solve the cutback problems had the Negro workers originally been fully integrated instead of placed separately in one of the units. William Sentner, general vice-president of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, CIO, testified that it was impossible to apply equitably the principle of seniority when there are segregated units within a plant.

In its decision the committee found that a racial quota system "is equally as mischievous when used to select employees for layoffs as when applied with regard to their hire. Executive Order 9346 does not provide that Negroes or other minority groups shall be hired or retained in employment in accordance with population ratios. The order, on the contrary, forbids the use of extraneous onsiderations of race, creed, color, or national origin in hiring or in laying off employees. The executive order forbids discrimination against white as well as against colored employees."

Position Conflicts with GOP Platform Pledge

WASHINGTON

Senator Robert A. Taft (Rep., Ohio), last week bluntly informed an interracial delegation of civic, political, church and labor leaders from his State of his opposition to the establishment of a permanent FEPC with enforcement powers. 2-10-45

The Senator told the group that he is in favor of and has introduced a permanent FEPC measuse based upon voluntary compliance.

During the last session of Congress, however, Senator Taft cast a favorable vote for FEPC legislation then before the Senate Labor and Education Committee.

Denies Conflict with Platform

When it was pointed out that the pre-election FEPC bill and those with enforcement powers now being studied by the House Labor Committee are virtually identical, Senator Taft said that he had voted favorably for the former because he knew no Senate action could be taken before the Seventy-eighth Congress adjourned.

When his attention was called to the pre-election commitments of the Republican party in favor of a permanent FEPC, he said that this commitment had not been necessarily for an FEPC with enforcement powers.

"Pushing Too Fast"

"I think you are pushing too fast," the Senator told the predominately colored group. "The colored people are much better off than they were ten years ago."

According to Taft's bill, the duties of the proposed commission, which would seek "removal of discrimination in regard to hire, or tenure, terms or conditions of employment, or union membership because of race, creed or color," would be:

Has No Enforcement Power

To make comprehensive studies of such discrimination, receive and investigate complaints, recomment ways and means for the elimination of the discrimination; confer, co-operate with, and furnish technical assistance to employers, labor unions, and other private and public agencies in formulating and executing policies and programs for the elimination of such discrimination;

Formulate, in co-operation with other agencies, comprehensive plans for the elimination of such discrimination as rapidly as possible, in regions or areas where it is prevalent, and publish and disseminate reports and other information relating to such discrimination and to ways and means of eliminating it."

The bill calls for a five-man commission, one of whom shall be named by the President as chairman, all at a salary of $10,000 a year each.

The bill does not include discrimination because of national origin. Senator Taft said he felt this unnecessary and foolish because when people come to America, they want to be just Americans.

WASHINGTON—(NNPA)—In a form letter sent out by Senator Robert Taft concerning his attitude on the FEPC, the word "Negro" is spelled with a small "n."

The letter which has come to light following the conference of the Senator with an interracial delegation from Ohio, says: "I have your recent communication. I am in facor of a permanent FEPC to promote the removal of discrimination in employment against negroes and others."

Defeat Handed Proposed FEPC Bill On Coast

First Major Drive In California Blocked; But FEPC Backers Press Fight

4-2-45

SACRAMENTO, (Negro Press Bureau).—The State of California, Augustus H. Hawkins (D.), of Los Angeles, an almost exact replica of the famed FEPC bill recently en-its governing body, the Assembly, last week took the stand, at least temporary, that it would not follow the lead of New York in establishing a state Fair Employment Practice Committee, with enforceable teeth in it.

A bill introduced by the lone Neacted and signed by New York's Governor Thomas E. Dewey, was voted down in committee.

Backers of Bill

Assemblyman Don Fields (R.), of Glendale, chairman of the Government and Efficiency Committee, which considered the proposed measure, reported the vote of the committee to a vast and interested audience, the defeat of the measure by a 10 to 8 margin. The vote revealed that the 10 Republican members had voted nay, while 8 Democrats favored sending the measure to the floor. Scores of prominent speakers had addressed the committee favoring passage of the bill.

Prominent leaders of numerous organizations and representatives of several racial and minority groups made fervent pleas for enactment of the measure. Notably were representatives of Jewish people, Mexican, NAACP, Church Federation, Interracial groups, CIO and Catholic leaders. Every county in the state was represented by some person or group so interested are the people in this type of legislation. From Los Angeles were speakers, Leon H. Washington, Jr., publisher of the L. A. Sentinel, Dr. H. Claude Hudson, Fredrick M. Roberts and Nina Blackwell, of the local branch NAACP. 4-7-45

Would Be "Pressured"

Assemblyman Hawkins was stunned at the failure of the committee to authorize the measure to reach the floor where formal debate could take place. So great was the crowd present for the hearings, that it was necessary to switch from the room where committee hearings are generally held, to the larger quarters of the Assembly chambers. Hawkins told newsmen he has hopes of being able to get the necessary 41 votes among the Assemblymen to lift the bill out of committee and bring it on the floor.

A similar bill is slated to be aired before the upper branch of the California legislation, the Senate soon. That bill which has the blessings of the state's Republican Governor Earl Warren, was introduced by Republican senators. No reason could be found for the Republican members of the committee turning back the state FEPC bill, other than the presence of a too vociferous number of left wing persons on the side of the bill. It is believed, the GOP members didn't want to feel they were being "pressured."

Transit company submits

Los Angeles, Calif. Tribune 4-2-45

OAKLAND — The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices this week was assured by the Key System that the company "intends to carry out any directions" that the committee may issue on the hiring of Negroes as platform personnel.

The announcement, made by Robert Littler, Key System attorney, came at the end of a week-long FEPC hearing during which the Key System and the AFL Carmen's Division 192 were charged with discrimination against Negro workers.

Withdrawing its original protest against the hearings on the grounds that the FEPC was without jurisdiction or authority, the company admitted that it had refused to hire Negroes as platform workers and inserted a statement that "The company has not hired Negroes by reason of its belief that they would not be accepted or cleared by the union."

In his final arguments, A. Bruce Hunt, FEPC attorney, charged that the union, which walked out of the hearings last Tuesday on the grounds tnat they were "unconstitutional and un-American," discriminates by failing to give the same clearance to Negroes as is accorded to white workers, and by failing to admit Negroes to union membership. 4-2-45

COMPANY'S DUTY

In final charges against the Key System, Hunt contended that the company had backed up the union's anti-Negro stand and stated that it is "the duty of the Key System to locate these people (who had previously been rejected,) seek them out and rectify the wrong which has been done. The failure to do so makes it a violation of the executive order. It is a continuing violation."

Harry L. Kingman, FEPC regional director, took the stand to state that "The eyes of the whole world are going to be on San Francisco when world leaders meet here. It is important that we here practice democracy and give equal opportunity to Negroes and other minorities."

Los Angeles - Calif. Tribune 4-2-45

Two Los Angeles shipbuilding companies, Western Pipe and Steel and Consolidated Steel corp., have notified the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices that they will comply with its directives and will ignore the union clearance system as long as the union continues to discriminate against Negroes. 4-2-45

Directed by the FEPC to cease discharging Negroes who refused to accept inferior union status in the Boilermakers' Auxiliary, the two corporations said this week they will do so. Three other Coast companies were so ordered, but they have not been heard from. They are Oregon Shipbuilding Corp., Kaiser Co., Inc., both of Portland, Ore., and the California Shipbuilding Corp. of Los Angeles.

The union, the AFL International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Shipbuilders and Helpers of America, were ordered to grant Negroes full membership rights without discrimination, but they have not yet complied. 4-2-45

All five of the companies and the union have been involved in negotiations with the FEPC since hearings were held here in 1943.

The closed shop contract with the union and the refusal of the union to admit Negroes to full membership discriminated against Negroes, the FEPC found.

N. Y.'s FEPC Will Go Into Effect July 1

State Leads Nation; Is First To Enact Law To Outlaw Job Jim Crow

By JULIUS J. ADAMS
(Staff Correspondent)

ALBANY.—In a solemn and impressive ceremony in the executive chamber here Monday afternoon, Governor Thomas E. Dewey signed the Ives-Quinn (FEPC) Bill. And thus, sent to the New York State law book an act designed to eliminate discrimination in employment on account of race, creed, color or national origin. 3-17-45

The new law goes into effect July 1, and will be administered by a commission of five members, each to receive $10,000 a year, and to be appointed by the Governor. The commission will seek to eliminate discrimination in employment by conciliation, persuasion and mediation where possible, but will have authority to issue "cease and desist" orders when other means fail. Violators of these orders will be subject to a fine of $500 or imprisonment for one year or both. Findings of the commission are subject to court review. 3-17-45

Dewey's Statement

In signing the bill, Governor Dewey, who had been highly praised for his distinguished leadership in securing passage of the measure, declared: "Our success in achieving the objectives of this measure, will, of course, depend greatly upon the wisdom, tolerance and understanding of the members of the commission. The law must be administered with intolerance and generosity of spirit on all sides. By its work the commission will meet from day to day the hidden irritants which if cumulated would fester discontent among many groups of our citizenry. It is far better that these evils receive open consideration an effective treatment than that they be suppressed to become the weapons of whispering malcontents. 3-17-45

"It must not be understood that the State is here attempting to impose itself as arbiter of social or personal likes or dislikes. By this act the State declares the simple principle that in employment there shall be no discrimination by reason of race, creed, color or national origin. It expresses the rule that must be fundamental in any free society—that no man shall be deprived of the chance to earn his bread by reason of the circumstances of his birth."

Governor Dewey, who earlier, had described the law as a reaffirmation by the people of New York of their faith in "the simple principles of our free republic," and one that gives reality to the principles on which the nation was founded, was presented by Lieut. Gov. Joe R. Hanley, who presided at the ceremony. 3-17-45

First to be introduced by the Lieutenant Governor was former U. S. Attorney Charles H. Tuttle, who served as counsel for the commission against discrimination.

Lauds Dewey

Mr. Tuttle said: addressing the Governor, "Your Excellency, in the annals of American democracy this day will be noted and honored for its proclamation of economic justice. Today, New York true to its leadership in social justice, lays the corner-stone on which other states and even the National Congress are already eager to build and on which the future can rear an enlargement of the abode, of the Ark, of liberty.

"No Governor of this or any other state has ever by his signature given legal life to a nobler charter of freedom. No Governor has done more by vision and leadership to achieve so historic an advance in the interpretation and application of democracy," Mr. Tuttle declared. 3-17-45

"To those members of the legislature", Mr. Tuttle continued, "who for this enactment laid aside partisanship and to the dedicated members of the temporary commission this moment is one of deep joy.

"We are grateful to you, sir", Mr. Tuttle said, "for permitting us to share with you in it fond satisfaction.

Ives, Quinn Praised

"The Mr. Ives (Irving M.), the chairman of the temporary commission, whose wide and genial guidance and whose miraculous gift for harmony kept its members in essential unity, and to Senator Quinn, who in the Senate led the cause of this bill in the name of both political parties, the thanks of the people of this State is gratefully due. 3-17-45

"Custom dictates", he added, "that when a great piece of social legislation has been enacted it shall be baptized with the names of its legislative sponsors. I hope, sir, that this ceremony which your leadership has made possible will be christened the newly born law, the Ives-Quinn Act, for all time.

"Concluding, Mr. Tuttle said, "again we thank you for giving us this opportunity to share with you this truly historic event."

Others who spoke were Frank M. Weil, a member of the temporary commission; Dr. Alvin Johnson, director of the new School of Social Research, chairman of the War Council Committee on Discrimination, and vice chairman of the temporary commission; John F. Brosnan, a member of the temporary commission, the Rev. George H. Sims, pastor Union Baptist Church, New York City, and a member of the temporary commission, and Assemblyman Ives and Senator Quinn.

FEPC "Damn Foolishness"

Philadelphia Tribune 3-20-45

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Governor Chauncey Sparks of Alabama described the proposed FEPC legislation as "damn foolishness" and said that an employer should be free to hire whom he pleased without "interference."

"They have no right to say whom a man shall hire or whether his face should be black or green or any color," he added.

Mr Truman Leads

President Truman's sharply worded letter to Chairman Sabath of the rules committee of the House of Representatives demanding continuation of the FPEC, or Fair Practices Employment committee, has an importance beyond that of the immediate issue. It is the most significant action, in its broader implications, which Mr Truman has taken since becoming President.

For nearly eight weeks, following his succession, emphasis has been placed in Washington dispatches on the strength of Mr Truman's belief in government by party and, at the same time, on his effort to achieve maximum national unity by welcoming Republican leaders, both past and present, in consultation. But his letter to Mr Sabath makes it clear that the kind of party government Mr Truman believes in is party government under leadership from the White House.

Most students are agreed that with its elaborate checks and balances our American system of government works efficiently only when there is such leadership. That was Woodrow Wilson's view long before he became President. But after writing his book, "Congressional Government," and before entering the White House himself, he saw the principle successfully applied by Theodore Roosevelt.

It would be folly to attempt to forecast, either on the strength of a single letter to the chairman of a House committee, or upon all of his acts during eight weeks in office, exactly how much of a leader Mr Truman will finally prove. But it seems increasingly probable that he will at least prove more of a leader than either Coolidge or Harding.

Harding's essential philosophy of government, if he can be said to have had one, was that as a coordinate branch of the government Congress should function pretty much as it saw fit, although the inevitable demands which his office as President forced upon him did, in time, oblige him to attempt a minimum leadership. That attitude earned for him the comment from a satisfied senator that he was "a bed of roses," a comment which had originally been applied to McKinley years before.

While he was governor of Massachusetts, Coolidge once admitted to a visitor who had urged him to revive a measure which he was ready to sign if passed by the Legislature, but which the Legislature had beaten by a narrow margin, that he "did not like to ask the Legislature to change its mind." There were times, after he got in the White House, when Coolidge quite definitely wished that Congress would change its mind, as when the Senate rejected his nomination of Charles Beecher Warren as attorney-general.

Yet Coolidge's basic attitude as President was not very different from what it had been as governor. It is to be doubted that he would have written to the chairman of a powerful congressional committee telling him and the committee that it was wrong for the committee to prevent a certain bill from coming before the House of Representatives so that the members of the whole body could vote upon it and pass it, as they ought to pass it.

Such a letter is not suggestive of the theory that, as a coordinate branch of the government, Congress should be allowed to function as it sees fit, free from White House interference. The letter even deals unhesitatingly with what may be called the internal machinery of Congress. With all his desire for unity and party cooperation, Mr Truman is not a "bed of roses" for congressional connoisseurs to enjoy.

As for the immediate issue, which has especially to do with the relief of Negroes from discrimination in employment, numerous southern members of both houses are not going to like Mr Truman's course any better than Senator McKellar and Senator Stewart of Tennessee liked his reappointment of David E. Lilienthal as head of the TVA. But with the encouragement of Mr Truman's stand it seems clear that, if the rules committee fails to respond to his letter to Mr Sabath, who is personally in sympathy, a majority of the House will force action and abruptly take the matter out of the committee's hands through a petition. Such a petition will become mandatory and effective as soon as it has the names of 218 out of the 435 members.

FEPC

When the issue is transferred to the Senate, after action by the House, a situation of extraordinary interest may develop. A bill similar to that pigeon-holed by the House rules committee has already been reported out of committee in the Senate and is on the Senate calendar. If there is a disposition on the part of southern senators to resort to filibustering tactics, as on anti-lynching bills and anti-poll tax bills, what will Mr Truman do about it?

Mr Truman has now intervened in the affairs of the House of Representatives to protest against the abuse of its rules by its rules committee. Will he be prepared to protest against the abuse of the Senate's rules by southern members of his own party who may take advantage of those rules either to talk a measure to death or to force a revision of an appropriation bill as the only means of securing its passage.

If that situation should arise and Mr Truman should meet it in that way, summoning public opinion to his support against the filibustering tactics of the Senate, he would be well launched on a career of very assertive leadership. And he would have the country behind him.

30 Civic Groups Support Save-FEPC Rally Next Week

Thirty civic groups, representing labor, the Negro, the three major religious faiths, and various professions are supporting a "Save the FEPC" rally at Town Hall next Tuesday night under sponsorship of the Council Against Intolerance in America.

The Council and the Negro Labor Victory Committee, which is one of the sponsors of the Negro Freedom Rally at Madison Square Garden June 25, have separately sent President Truman messages praising him for his demand that Congress appropriate funds for the wartime Fair Employment Practices Committee and pass the bill providing for a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission.

James Waterman Wise, director of the council, said: "The work of FEPC has been and will continue to be of utmost importance if we are to play fair not only with returning veterans, but with every American's right to employment."

The Negro Labor Victory Committee, representing 107 CIO and AFL unions, wired Truman: "The hundreds of thousands of Negro and white workers affiliated through their unions with this committee join the millions of progressive Americans, both North and South, in praise of your action."

The Garden rally June 25 will feature a dramatic revue, Carry On, America!, written by Norman Corwin, Howard Fast and Langston Hughes. Also on the program are Paul Robeson, Fredric March, Canada Lee, Libby Holman and Josh White, Hazel Scott, Hilda Simms, Mary McLeod Bethune, Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., Councilman Benjamin J. Davis, Jr., and Dr. Channing H. Tobias.

Ready to Meet the Issue

For the passage by congress of a bill perpetuating the FEPC, at least one argument can be advanced. It would make the issue plain. Were the bill to become law and attempt to enforce it were made, it would and it should be disobeyed and resisted in the South. The South should put those who would enforce it on notice that they would needs send an army of coercion to occupy the South—even as armies are this day occupying Germany.

The proponents of the measure would as well understand that the right of a textile corporation, of a newspaper corporation, a bank or any other corporation or employer, to discriminate between races will be upheld by force, in the South, if necessary, that nothing short of military coercion will prevent the South from nullifying an FEPC bill if it shall become a law.

The FECP bill is a preliminary step toward compelled racial amalgamation, and The News and Courier is convinced that the overwhelming majority of Northern white people are opposed to it. It is convinced that the rational leaders of colored people in the South are also opposed to it.

If another "Reconstruction" is to be attempted in the South, the sooner that the issue shall be understood, the better for the American people. Passage of the FEPC bill by congress would uncover the designs of the politicians who would sell out the white race for the negro vote in a dozen great American cities.

Poll Tax And FEPC

WASHINGTON POST
6-19-45

The spectacle of a certain group of Senators filibustering against the antipoll tax and FEPC bills must be very encouraging to Nazi and Fascist elements throughout the underground. It will give them hope and proof that some Democrats do not really believe in democracy, justice, fair play, and the orderly procedure of constitutional government. While arrogating to themselves certain immunities and so-called "State rights" they deny to other States the privilege of passing on vital questions which affect their (the other States,) interests. For instance, the innate sense of justice of a majority of real Americans would recognize the "equality of all men before the law"—"the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

Again the poll tax States are represented out of proportion in the Federal Government to their voting strength and keep, by reason of an indefensible seniority rule, a number of obstructionist diehards and race baiters in key positions to the injury of the whole commonwealth. Let us hope that a new sense of patriotism and a willingness to submit disputed laws to the Supreme Court may actuate would-be filibusterers when the two aforementioned bills come before the United States Senate.

We Can't Legislate Tolerance

Bills are now pending in both the House of Representatives and the Senate with approval of the labor committees of both houses which would convert the Fair Employment Practices commission into a permanent government bureau with tremendous legislative and judicial powers over the hiring and firing of employes of all firms and individuals with as many as five on their payrolls.

The FEPC was established by the late President Roosevelt as a war emergency measure to promote production of war materials. The bills would extend the controls of the commission to peace time, with all the autocratic powers of a war agency.

The objective of the bills is commendable, to improve the economic status of the Negro and other racial minorities, but the acts as drawn are unsound, unworkable and smack so strongly of the totalitarianism we are now fighting to destroy that they should be rejected or at least amended by Congress.

The acts are unsound and unworkable in that they attempt to legislate racial tolerance and good will into the hearts and minds of not only all employers but also all workers. We cannot force upon people personal relationships to which they have strong personal objections, and to attempt to do so would do more harm than good. Instead of helping the Negro cause, it would tend to promote still more racial intolerance and encourage strikes, violence, and possibly race riots. We have had race riots during the war in such large industrial centers as Detroit and Los Angeles, and other cities have been and still are potential danger spots. The causes of such conditions cannot be eliminated by law; they must be gradually erased through educational movements promoting racial tolerance and good will and the application to personal living of the Golden Rule.

The best place to start, insofar as the Negro is concerned, is in the schools. The federal government would get farther by seeing that every Negro child is given a good education or vocational training fitting him for a better position in life than it will by forcing Negroes into employment side by side with others in all fields of business and industry.

It also is unsound to extend into peace time the type of dictatorial powers given the OPA and other wartime agencies, which have permitted them in many instances to use gestapo methods against individuals with practically no appeal to the courts from their actions.

Under the FEPC proposals individual employers would no longer have full freedom to surround themselves with loyal and capable employes of their own choice. Instead they would be subject to court action every time they happened to choose a white applicant for a job in preference to one of some other color or race.

These proposals, if enacted into legislation, would set the stage for an era of racketeering damage suits filed by troublemakers and professional agitators, with the disappointed jobseeker furnished trained legal help by the government to prosecute his case. The whole setup would impose still more beaureauracy on the people.

It would be regimentation of the first order to give a Washington bureau final authority over the choice of a firm's employes. The committees which prepared these bills should back up and start over, working out measures designed to attain the desired objectives through methods which are in keeping with American principles and a system of free enterprise.—Norman Transcript.

Petition for Permanent FEPC Signed by Atlanta Citizens

The Atlanta Constitution

A number of Atlantans, both white and colored, have signed a petition urging congress to enact a permanent fair employment practices law.

Headed "A Petition From Citizens of the State of Georgia," the document urges that congress pass the law as requested by President Truman. 6-15-45

The text of the petition is:

"To Members of the Congress of the United States:

"With far-sighted vision the founders of our republic laid for its foundation stone the divine principle of human dignity. In a shrine in the library of congress, revered by the people of the United States, rests that document which enunciates the basic philosophy of this nation: 'We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.' In support of that declaration is pledged 'our sacred honor.'

TWO WARS FOUGHT

"Within a generation, two devastating wars fought in defense of democracy have impressed its meaning and implications upon the people of the world.

"Today ,two schools of thought are in conflict: democracy with its philosophy of individual rights and dignity; Fascism with its ideology of force, built on discrimination against racial and religious minorities.

"Such discrimination has no place in American life; by its very nature it is fascistic. Yet such discrimination exists in our country, and mocks our words before the world. It has handicapped in matters of employment the practice of discrimination against properly qualified persons because of race and creed 'forces large segments of the population permanently into substandard conditions of living, thereby creating a drain upon the resources of the nation.' Passage of the act would be in line with other federal legislation, for in the past 10 years congress has enacted 23 laws which forbid discrimination in their administration, and the supreme court of the United States has repeatedly condemned discriminatory employment practices. Furthermore, the administrative procedure of the proposed commission is not new, since it would be like that of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, and a number of other administrative agencies, with orders enforceable only by the courts. 6-15-45

BOTH PARTIES PLEDGED

"Establishment of a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission is supported by some sixty-odd national organizations. Both the Republican party and the Democratic party are committed to such legislation by their party platforms, as well as by the fact that the presidential nominees of both parties promised support to this legislation in the last national campaign.

"We are approaching the end of our military war. Events are moving swiftly. We cannot afford to permit our actions to lag behind the tempo of irresistible forces.

"We join with President Truman in calling upon the congress to fulfill the pledges of their parties by enacting S. 101-H. R. 2232, setting up a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission to prevent economic discrimination based on race, creed, national origin or ancestry." 6-15-45

Signatures by Atlantans were:

Armand May, Rev. William Holmes Borders, Father Samuel Chew Williams Fleming, Dr. M. Ashby Jones, Kendall Weisiger, C. F. Palmer, Dean B. R. Brazeal, Bishop W. A. Fountain Sr., Dr. Rufus E. Clement, Dean Raimundo de Ovies, L. D. Milton, Rabbi David Marx, Julian V. Boehm.

Dr. Edward G. Mackay, C. A. Scott, Rev. M. L. King, Professor Glenn W. Rainey, Lucy Randolph Mason, Dr. H. B. Trimble, Delkin Jones, Dr. Nat G. Long, Dr. Roger D. Bosworth, Mrs. Herman Heyman, Dr. Thomas A. Anderson, Dr. Forrester B. Washington, Dr. Lester Rumble, Dr. R. L. Russell, J. W. Dobbs, Dr. William H. Gardner, Dr. Leroy E. Loemker, C. R. Yates, J. P. Jones and Waights G. Henry Jr.

A document accompanying the petition claims that the following organizations are backing the law:

Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, American Association of University Women, American Civil Liberties Union, American Friends Service Committee, American Jewish Committee, American Jewish Congress, American Unitarian Association, American Unitarian Youth, B'nai B'rith, Catholic Interracial Council, Central Conference of American Rabbis, Common Council for American Unity, Congregational Christian Churches (Council for Social Action).

Congress of Industrial Organizations, Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Evangelical and Reformed Church, General Synod; Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, Fraternal Council of Negro Churches in America, Improved Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the World, International Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters (AFL), International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union of America (AFL).

Iota Phi Lambda Sorority, Jewish Labor Committee, Jewish War Veterans of the United States, League of United Latin-American Citizens, March on Washington Movement; Methodist Church, General Conference; Methodist Ministers' Union, Military Workers, Joint Board (AFL), National Alliance of Postal Employes, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, National Association of Colored Graduate Nurses.

National Bar Association, National Community Relations' Advisory Council, National Conference of Christians and Jews, National Consumers' League, National Council of Catholic Women, National Council of Jewish Women, National Council of Negro Women, National Council of Student Christian Associations, National Council for a Permanent FEPC, National Farmers' Union.

National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, National League of Women Shoppers, National Negro Insurance Association, National Urban League, National Women's Trade Union League of America, Negro Newspaper Publishers' Association, Postwar World Council, Presbyterian General Assembly, Sigma Gamma Rho Sorority, Southern Conference for Human Welfare, Southern Tenant Farmers' Union, Study Conference on Just and Durable Peace, Union of American Hebrew Congregations, Union for Democratic Action, United Council of Church Women.

Upholsterers' International Union of North America (AFL); Women's Division of Christian Service, Methodist Church; Women's Division of the American Jewish Congress, Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, Workers' Defense League, Young Men's Christian Association, National Board; Young Women's Christian Association, National Board in making maximum use of our manpower for war production. It has been used effectively in the propaganda of our enemies. If continued it will weaken our leadership in the council of nations; it will lessen the chances for a durable peace. 6-15-45

DISCRIMINATION

"Here in the south we have experienced the unwholesome consequences of discrimination in employment. A large segment of our people held at a low wage level has depressed the income of all and has stunted the progress of the area.

"In 1941, the late Franklin D. Roosevelt, in order to make full use of the nation's manpower and to demonstrate on the home front the principles of democracy for which we are fighting abroad, created by executive order, under the war powers granted him by the congress, the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice as a temporary war agency. It is a significant fact that in his last campaign for office, Mr. Roosevelt singled out by name the Committee on Fair Employment Practice, from among all the war agencies, and advocated its continuance in peace.

The Nation - 6-16-45

UNLESS decisive pressure is brought to bear upon Congress during the next few weeks in support of the President's appeal, the Fair Employment Practices Committee will pass out of existence on June 30. It will cease to exist just at the moment when reconversion will create the gravest danger of wholesale employment discrimination against Negro war workers. This critical situation has arisen as a result of a typical underhanded maneuver by Representative Rankin and his diehard Southern tory associates. Having overruled President Roosevelt's request for a $599,000 grant for the 1945-46 fiscal year, the House Appropriations Committee has withheld all funds for the agency on the ground that there is a bill before Congress to establish the FEPC on a permanent basis. And the appropriation measure is to be brought before the House under a rule that would make it possible for Rankin, by raising a point of order, to block any motion to provide for the FEPC. He has served notice that he will do this.

Meanwhile Rankin has seen to it that the bill for a permanent FEPC is bottled up in the Rules Committee, where it has been held for weeks. The bill continues to be kept there despite President Truman's vigorous appeal that it be brought up for action because of the urgency of the reconversion problem. In view of Mr. Truman's close association with many of the Southern Democrats who have been leading the fight against the bill, many observers doubted that he would take the lead in pushing the measure. The President not only demonstrated real political courage in defying the White Supremacy bloc, but showed once more his capacity for striking at the root of an issue when he declared that "discrimination in the matter of employment . . . because of race, creed, or color is not only un-American in nature but will lead eventually to industrial strife and unrest." 6-16-45

As a result of the President's leadership the Rules Committee may yet be compelled to report out the measure. If the committee continues to sabotage it, it may still be forced out on the floor by petition. This, however, can be achieved only if the voters back home begin to flood their Congressmen with messages requesting prompt action. If the bill is brought to a vote in the House, most observers believe that it can be passed. 6-16-45

In the Senate the situation is equally difficult, if less complicated. A bill similar to the House measure has been reported out of committee and is expected to be taken up within the next week. But the opposition has served warning that it will resort to a filibuster if necessary to prevent the bill from being passed. The chances of favorable action before June 30 are slight. Here, too, the one hope that a permanent FEPC may be set up in time for the reconversion period lies in intensive pressure from the voters. It is also possible for the Senate to force restoration of funds for the FEPC in the current war-agencies appropriation bill and thus repair the damage wrought by legislative trickery in the House. The outcome of this struggle will go a long way toward deciding whether we shall have less or more racial conflict in the post-war years.

House Rules Body Blocks Action on Permanent FEPC

Daily Worker

Daily Worker

Daily Worker Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 12.—The Rules Committee today completed its job of sabotaging the Permanent FEPC bill, voting six to six on the bill. While a petition to discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill is being circulated by its author, Mrs. Mary Norton (D-NJ), labor and progressive forces are concentrating too for the more immediate "must" legislation, appropriations for the present FEPC. 6-13-45

The House Appropriations Committee's action in killing the appropriation from the War Agencies Appropriations bill may be reversed in the Senate with enough pressure.

PLANE GROUNDED

The Republicans on the Rules Committee, while voting for the bill, actually worked for the polltax Democrats on the committee to bottle it up. Chairman A. J. Sabath, recently arisen from a hospital bed, told reporters with some chagrin that he had tried to get a rule for the bill.

"We had agreed definitely to vote this morning at 10:30," he said. "But the members came in waving telegrams that Slaughter's plane was grounded, and they insisted we wait until he arrive this afternoon." 6-13-45

By waiting for Slaughter to arrive a tie vote was ensured. Sabath and John J. Delaney of New York voted for the bill, with Republicans Leo Allen (Ill), Earl C. Michener (Mich), Charles A. Halleck (Ind) and Clarence J. Brown (O), it was learned.

Voting against it were Slaughter and the Southerners, A. E. Cox (Ga), Howard W. Smith (Va), J. Bayard Clark (NC), William M. Colrem (Tex) and Joe B. Bates (Ky). Bates voted for the Marcantonio anti-polltax bill later.

Asked about the charge that a "deal" had been made in the committee to delay the vote until Slaughter's return, a deal in which Republicans figured prominently, Sabath said weakly: "There was no agreement. But when I saw that the people who I expected would vote for the bill were insisting with the others that it was only 'fair' to wait for Slaughter's return I saw we couldn't get a rule."

He said he expected to sign the petition.

A LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT

The Chicago Defender

WASHINGTON — Here is the full text of President Harry S. Truman's letter to House Rules Committee Chairman A. J. Sabath on the Fair Employment Practices Committee:

"I understand that the House Appropriations committee has deleted from the war agencies appropriation bill for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1945, all appropriations for the Fair Employment Practices Committee. This action will have the effect of abolishing the committee and terminating its work without giving the members of the House of Representatives an opportunity to vote on the question.

"The Fair Employment Practices Committee was originally established before the attack upon U. S. at Pearl Harbor and was an integral part of our defense production program. It has continued since then in one form or another and has grown steadily in importance. Its work has been based on the principle that the successful prosecution of the war demands the participation of all available workers regardless of race, creed or color, and that the policy of the United States was to encourage all such persons to full participation in the war effort.

"The war is not over. In fact a bitter and deadly conflict lies ahead of us. To abandon at this time the fundamental principle upon which the Fair Employment Practices Committee was established is unthinkable. 6-16-45

"Even if the war were over, or nearly over, the question of Fair Employment Practices during the reconversion period and thereafter would be of paramount importance. Discrimination in the matter of employment against properly qualified persons because of their race, creed or color is not only unAmerican in nature, but will lead eventually to industrial strife and unrest. It has a tendency to create substandard conditions of living for a large part of our population.

"The principle and policy of Fair Employment Practices should be established permanently as a part of our national law.

"I understand that one reason assigned for omitting an appropriation for the present committee is that a proposal is now before Congress to establish a permanent and statutory Fair Employment Practices Committee. The legislation providing for this committee is now in the Rules Committee. Unless it is sent to the floor, the members of the House will have no opportunity to vote on it. The result will be that on July 1 next the principle of Fair Employment Practices will have been abandoned by the House of Representatives. I, therefore, urge the Rules Committee to adopt a rule permitting this legislation to be voted upon by the members of the House as quickly as possible."

The South and FEPC

Richmond Times-Dispatch

THE CRUX of the South's opposition to the NORTON bill establishing a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee—a bill which seems to be at least temporarily dead—lies in the penalties which are provided in the measure for enforcement by Federal courts against Southern employers. Fines or jail sentences, or both, are to be imposed upon such employers, if they do not employ, discharge, promote, demote, upgrade and transfer employees in accordance with the rulings of this Federal body, with headquarters in Washington.

Richmond Times Dispatch

One of the most distinguished Negroes in America, P. B. YOUNG, SR., president and publisher of the Norfolk Journal and Guide, the well-known colored weekly newspaper, writes a temperate dissent in today's Voice of the People from our editorial of Monday in opposition to the proposed permanent FEPC.

He takes the view that whereas we declared that "legislation rests upon public opinion," and "no law which is opposed by the overwhelming majority will ever be effective," none of the legislation now on the statute books for the protection of the Negro is favored by the majority of Southerners. Hence, says MR. YOUNG, why draw the line at a permanent FEPC?

It is a fair question, and it deserves an answer. But we doubt if public opinion in the South is as antagonistic to legislation for the protection of Negroes as MR. YOUNG deems it to be. For instance, we should say that a majority of white people in Virginia approve the appropriation of public funds for the education of Negroes along the same lines that are provided for whites from the same funds. Furthermore, we believe that a majority of Virginians approve equal facilities for Negroes, not only in the public schools, but also in such spheres as publicly provided health facilities, and in waiting-room accommodations and on transportation lines. True, such facilities are not always available, but this is due to various factors. We are frank to say that we believe public acceptance of these things is a recent phenomenon. Will not that acceptance be damaged, if not destroyed, if too drastic methods are invoked now?

Our correspondent makes the point that "Southerners would certainly administer" the FEPC law, if it was placed on the books. True, regional representatives of a permanent FEPC would probably be Southerners. But that alone would not guarantee their good judgment, since there are stupid and prejudiced Southerners. In the second place, the penalties would all be imposed by the Federal courts. As we understand it, those courts would have no alternative but to hold in contempt any employer who did not comply with the orders of the FEPC. The courts, it appears, would have to impose either fines or jail sentences, or both, upon offending employers.

Here, it would seem, is a proposed piece of legislation which goes considerably further in attempting to force Southern whites into line on interracial matters than any of the other earlier legislation which MR. YOUNG mentions. It is precisely here that most of the trouble with the projected FEPC will arise. Some Southerners deserve to be sent to jail for their antisocial and unfair practices, but the great majority are trying to be decent citizens. Some of the latter have not been brought to realize the importance of fair treatment for colored citizens, and if they were thrown into jail, the ensuing uproar can only be imagined.

What we are trying to say is that persuasion, conciliation and education will be more effective in the long run as a means of achieving better relations than the coercive power of the Federal government. The existing FEPC has accomplished a good deal without such power. To endow a new agency with the sweeping authority which is proposed would be the surest means of provoking a drastic reaction against the Southern Negro on many fronts.

For a Permanent FEPC

Richmond Times

Editor of The Times-Dispatch:

In reference to your editorial June 11, "The Dangers of a Permanent FEPC," I wish to comment upon your statement, "Legislation rests upon public opinion. No law which is strongly opposed by the overwhelming majority will ever be effective, or will ever achieve the results which it seeks to achieve."

6-14-45

Historically, that is true. But for the protection of minorities should we enact only laws that are approved by the majority? Literally, that is all that can be done, but if that is sound, a majority of the voters in Virginia would not approve an income tax. Can you name a single law now on our statute books that provides protection to the Negro in the enjoyment of earned benefits as a citizen that has the approval of a majority of Southern people? How were these laws enacted, you may ask. The answer is that the State laws were enacted with the tacit understanding that they were not to be enforced with equal effect upon both races. For a classic example, see proceedings of the Virginia Constitutional Convention, 1901-1902.

Take education, for example. Do you believe that a majority of the white people in Virginia approve the appropriation of public funds for the education of Negroes along the same lines that whites are provided for from the same funds? Examine the record.

Do you believe that the criminal statutes, civil statutes, or any statutes now on the books are administered without prejudice to the Negro where a white person is involved?

Do you believe that any law now on the statute books, that provides equal protection of the law for Negroes; any law that provides equal public facilities for Negroes; any law that provides anything for Negroes in the same manner that it provides for white people has the approval of a majority of public opinion?

I don't think you can cite a single case. Then why stop making laws or trying to enforce laws? Why give up and say that we will do nothing to halt the economic extermination of Negroes because such action will not meet the approval of a majority?

A majority of the white people in the South do not approve the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States and would repeal them if they could. I think you are as much aware of that as any man in touch with Southern public opinion.

We do not get full benefit of the letter of existing laws, but we do get something. The South would not approve an FEPC, but its establishment would have a tremendously persuasive effect on this region, without causing any new trouble, because Southerners would certainly administer it.

I think that you are also aware of the precarious conditions that brought about the original presidential executive wartime FEPC.

You, Mr. Mark Ethridge and Senator Pepper, among others, oppose FEPC. But you do not offer anything as an alternative remedy for the Negroes' precarious economic plight, brought on by one segment of organized labor which in the South particularly is pushing them completely out of all but manual labor jobs; industrialists who are terribly frightened by organized labor; and politicians who are able to remain in Congress and in power in other places by instilling in the hearts of white people the fear that if the Negro rises to the level of a decent livelihood there will be intermarriages—a fictitious claim.

You have overlooked one important thing. The Congress would vote on FEPC, and a law would be enacted by the elected representatives of a majority of the people in the United States, but for the fact that Southern members of Congress, by employing delaying and obstructing parliamentary tactics, prevent such a vote. More than one-third of the Negroes now in the United States live outside the South. Why not give them a chance?

Norfolk. P. B. YOUNG, SR.

"If Not FEPC, Then What?"

Richmond Times

Editor of The Times-Dispatch:

In spite of the reputation for a liberal point of view which The Times-Dispatch enjoys, I confess that I was not disappointed in your editorial of June 11 apropos "The Dangers of a Permanent FEPC." As a citizen of Virginia who was born and reared in this State, I am disturbed by the Virginia brand of liberalism which professes adherence to the principles of educational, legal and occupational equality but does nothing toward implementing these professions. As a case in point, these same so-called liberals of the State on one hand agreed that salaries of teachers should be liberalized, but on the other hand opposed measures initiated by the NAACP to secure equalization, and made no effective effort toward equalization themselves.

Now it appears this same pattern is up for repetition in the matter of occupational opportunity. Certainly the basic ideal of the FEPC is professed by interracial bodies and the liberal press of the South. Yet these same agencies can see nothing good in a measure designed to put into practice their profession, and have at the same time no alternative to offer.

If not an FEPC, then what? You say, "This is not the way," but you do not suggest what is the way. While I appreciate the fact that "The Times-Dispatch has frequently championed the cause of better employment opportunities for our Negro citizens," this is not exactly my idea of an adequate substitute for an FEPC.

A young Negro war veteran of my acquintance, a graduate of a college and of an army special service school, sought to use the local (Petersburg) office of the United States Employment Service. The best employment that it could offer him was a job as a porter in one of the local stores. Other Negro veterans will return with all of the hundred and one skills acquired in the army. It is only reasonable and fair that ex-servicemen, regardless of color or creed, have access to jobs which will utilize these skills. How do you propose to secure to these Negroes just opportunities without recourse to legislation?

It seems to me that all persons who profess to be liberals should first of all formulate consciously their philosophy. Any liberal credo would certainly include the principle of equality of occupational opportunity for all citizens. If you believe in equal occupational opportunity, then you are not consistent when you oppose a move in that direction, unless you have something better to propose.

Fitting subjects for editorial sequels to "The Dangers of a Permanent FEPC" might be "The Dangers of No FEPC" or "The Times-Dispatch's Alternative to FEPC." MRS. P. H. BAKER.

Ettrick.

Critical of FEPC Editorial

Richmond Times Dispatch

Editor of The Times-Dispatch:

The recent editorial opposing a permanent FEPC was an example of the mental and logical contortions necessary to defend the indefensible. The writer had an object in view—that of defending the status quo, by any means available. If one could visualize the movement of his thought, it would resemble a broken field runner on the gridiron, meeting obstacles and twisting and squirming to circumvent them.

His idea seemed to be that the Negro is due justice, but we must not apply pressure to Southern whites to enforce it, lest they resent it. But that would be to undermine all law, because every one at odds with the law resents the teeth in the law; yet we do not suspend law because of the resentment of the criminal element. If I seem to be classing as "criminal" that class of whites who stand athwart the progress of justice, I do mean just that, for there is a moral law, whether the nation has one or not, and the damnable practices of the South are at variance with that moral order. Certainly the editor did not intend to oppose law in general, but we generally get tangled up when dealing in mental gymnastics.

Pressure Needed to Pass Forceful FEPC Measure

AFRO-AMERICAN

Norton Bill Faces Senate Opposition After Anticipated Favorable Action in House

3-3-45

(Special Correspondence)

WASHINGTON

Enactment, during this Congress, of the Norton bill to create a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission will require even greater pressure than was exerted on behalf of similar bills in the last Congress.

The House will pass it by a majority vote which will cut across party and sectional lines, but a filibuster looms against it whenever it reaches the Senate and a motion is made for its consideration by that body. 3-3-45

Whether the Taft bill, which lacks compulsory features, would be allowed to be brought to a vote in the Senate is conjectural.

Die-Hards Unreasoning

There has been so much hysterical speech, instead of dispassionate discussion, of the activities of the FEPC that it is doubtful that Southern Senators like Theodore (The Man) Bilbo, of Mississippi, and Richard B. Russell, of Georgia, would permit even the Taft bill to come to a vote without a filibuster, even in wartime.

The Norton bill was favorably reported from the House Committee on Labor last Tuesday. It embodies the best features of bills to establish a permanent FEPC introduced by Reps. Charles M. LaFollette (Rep., Ind.), Joseph C. Baldwin (Rep., N.Y.), William L. Dawson (Dem., Illinois), Frank E. Hook (Dem., Mich.), Everett Dirksen (Rep., Ill.), Adam C. Powell, (Dem., N.Y.), Helen G. Douglas (Dem., Calif.), George H. Bender (Rep., Ohio), Charles R. Clason (Rep., Mass.), Clyde Doyle (Dem., Calif.)

War Objectives Cited

"One of the principal objectives of the tragic war in which we are now engaged is to establish the principle that all men, no matter what their religion, color, or national origin, are born with the right to freedom to worship and work to safeguard their spiritual and economic welfare," the report states.

"The men and women of America hold this belied so dear that the yare fighting and dying on the battlefields of the world to uphold it. 3-3-45

"Equal Opportunity Essential"

"When the war comes to a victorious end, and our men and women return to peace-time occupations from the battlefields and from the production of war materials, there must be equal opportunity for all. 3-3-45

"The men who have fought for economic freedom for peoples throughout the world will not, and should not, be satisfied with anything less in our own country.

No Social Equality Issue

"Let it be clearly understood this bill has for its purpose economic opportunity. The opponents of the bill are attempting to confuse the issue by bringing up the question of social equality. We repeat, there is nothing in the bill concerned with anything other than economic equality."

Rep. Clare E. Hoffman (Rep., Mich.), whose views often coincide with those of Rep. John E. Rankin (Dem., Miss.), leader of the "white trash" bloc in Congress, submitted a minority report opposing the bill on the ground that "moral and social inhibitions and inborn race prejudices cannot be wiped out by legislation."

Issues Confused

A baiter of organized labor, Mr. Hoffman criticized the bill because it contains no provision against the closed shop. The bill, he said, ignores the "obvious fact that individuals have the right to work without discrimination because of membership or nonmembership in a labor union."

The purpose of the measure, he contended, "is to bring about, through Federal legislation, a social intermingling (and some advocate intermarriage) among the races." 3-3-45

Needs Summarized

As the basis for the legislation, the bill sets forth that Congress finds discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color, national origin, or ancestry

1. Leads to interracial tension and conflict;
2. Forces large segments of the population permanently into substandard conditions of living;
3. Creates a drain upon the resources of the nation;
4. Causes a diminution of employment and wages which disrupts the market for goods in commerce, resulting in commerce being burdened and obstructed.

Constitutional Foundation

The bill declares that the

FEPC Bill

right to work free from discrimination is an "immunity" of citizens of the United States, which shall not be abridged by any Federal or State agency.

Under its terms, the bill outlaws discriminatory practices by private employers, labor unions, and Federal agencies. It makes unlawful a discriminatory refusal to hire, refer, upgrade, promote, or classify properly.

It also forbids wage differentials based upon race, discriminatory transfers or assignments, discriminatory discharges, and discrimination in the application of seniority rules. 3-3-45

Union Abuses Checked

The bill also forbids an employer to confine his hiring to any source that discriminates, and makes it an unfair labor practice for any labor union to deny membership because of race, creed, color, national origin, or ancestry or to discriminate among members because of such factors.

Discrimination is forbidden against employees who oppose discrimination or assist their fellow employees who belong to a minority group.

5 Would Get $10,000 Each

The FEPC would be quasi-judicial agency consisting of five members appointed by the President for 5-year terms, subject to confirmation by the Senate.

Commissioners would receive $10,000 a year. Upon appointment of the new FEPC, the present FEPC created by executive order would pass out of existence, but its records, employees, and unexpended appropriation would be transferred to the new FEPC.

The bill would empower the FEPC to prevent race or religious discrimination by the issuance of cease-and-desist orders. The issuance of such orders would follow the filing of charges with the commission, the holding of hearings before it, and the making of findings of fact. 3-3-45

Same Support as NLRB

Orders of the commission would be subject to judicial enforcement and judicial review in the same manner, to the same extent, and subject to the same provisions of law, as in the case of orders of the National Labor Relations Board.

This means that any party aggrieved by a final order of the commission may obtain a review of such order in the Federal circuit courts.

No penalty is provided for a violation of an order of the commission, but if a court commands obedience to such an order, violation of the decree would be punishable as a contempt of court.

FEPC Bill Action Rushed by House

AFRO-AMERICAN md.

2-3-45

WASHINGTON

In what was viewed as an attempt to eliminate one controversial aspect of the May Manpower Draft Bill, the House Labor Committee voted on Tuesday to rush action on permanent FEPC legislation now before the committee.

Mrs. Mary T. Norton, House Labor Committee chairman, appointed a seven-man sub-committee headed by Congressman Jennings Randolph (Dem., W.Va.) to draft a report which will be returned to the full committee on Thursday.

Action by the full committee and a report to the House is expected immediately thereafter.

Will Speed Manpower Bill

If immediate action is taken by the House on the FEPC measure, it was pointed out, one of the major obstacles to agreement on the May Bill will have been eliminated.

Meanwhile, on the floor of the House a stalemate has developed between a Southern Democrat-Northern Republican alliance and labor members of Congress.

The debates over the inclusion of an anti-closed shop and FEPC amendment in the manpower draft measure makes it apear unlikely that a vote will be reached on the measure this week.

FEPC Backslide

NEW MASSES

IF WE don't watch out, we Americans will wake up on June 30 to discover that we have no agency for fair employment practices at all and that the great gains we made in the 1944 election campaign, when popular pressure forced even the GOP to pledge support of a permanent FEPC, are wiped out by the simple fact that there will be no money for such an agency. After the shameful business of turning up a War Agencies Appropriations Bill with no provisions at all for the temporary FEPC, and in the face of the fact that a bill establishing a permanent FEPC would have to be passed before the present agency expires on June 30, a vicious little bloc of Southern poll-tax Democrats and their familiar Republican allies have maneuvered three times in twenty-four hours to keep the bill for the permanent committee bottled up in the Rules Committee, where it has already lain for two months. President Truman made a powerful direct plea for the bill, calling any abandonment of "the fundamental principle upon which the Fair Employment Practice Committee was established 6-19-45 "unthinkable." Neither this forthright action on the part of the President nor the delegation of progressive Congressmen, led by Vito Marcantonio (ALP, N.Y.), who descended on the Rules Committee's session has budged the brazen reactionaries who are holding up the measure. It is evident that the Rules Committee intends to postpone the permanent measure fatally by continuing its deadlock.

Only the most overwhelming popular pressure can guarantee that the democracy we voted for in 1944 will not be legally strangled. The necessary $500,000 appropriation for the temporary FEPC can be restored in the Senate, and all Senators should get such a flood of mail and wires and delegations as to leave no doubt where the people stand. President Truman should be backed to the limit in the administration fight for the measure, and urged if necessary to issue an executive order under his war powers. For the consequences of losing FEPC to winning the war and effecting a proper reconversion would be very serious indeed.

Politics Imperils FEPC Support

By JOSEPH V. BAKER

Republican Congressional support for the establishment of a permanent Commission on Fair Employment Practices may be endangered, leaders of that party here fear, by the insistence of Negro Democratic committeemen in Philadelphia that the setup's patronage be distributed "on a political basis." A statement opposing that view will be issued early this week, by the Republican State Negro Council, according to executives of the unit.

The local movement, which has had repercussions throughout the country, has grown out of a demand by Negro Democratic committeemen in Philadelphia that G. James Fleming, Regional Director of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices, with offices here, be removed due to the fact that he is a registered Republican. The removal demand was made publicly by William Johnson, president of the Democratic Committeemen's Organization.

AN F. D. R. SUPPORTER

Never active in Republican political circles and admittedly a supporter of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt, Mr. Fleming is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin, holding the Phi Beta Kappa key; a former editor of a local Negro newspaper and for a number of years editor of a national fraternal journal. In rating from Washington headquarters of the FEPC, Mr. Fleming has had unusually high recognition, according to sources closely allied with the unit.

In seeking the removal of the Philadelphia Regional executive of the agency's work, the Democratic Committeemen's head said that the $5600 post was a Democratic job and pushed vigorously for immediate action despite the fact that members of the unit "admitted for the record that Fleming is competent."

The Negro political executive said that the appointment of a Democrat of that race to the post was necessary so that committeemen of that party could "have some say concerning patronage that they have had such a large share in winning."

ATTEMPT CONDEMNED

Vigorously condemning any attempt to "reduce the national effort for a Fair Employment Practices measure to the level of politics." Theodore Spaulding, well-known Negro attorney and president of the local branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, has branded the attempted political grab as "outrageous."

The N. A. A. C. P. executive said that the 14,000 members of his organization would, in his opinion, resent this unfortunate political play" with the FEPC setup in this area.

Distaste for the open political move has also been expressed by Arthur Huff Fauset, chairman of the United Peoples Action Committee. A staunch supporter of the Democratic Administrator and leader of a number of left-wing movements here, Fauset said that the commendable job done by Mr. Fleming stood above whether he "chooses to ride an elephant rather than a donkey."

CIVIC LEAGUE SUPPORT

Organization support for the Regional executive has come, also, from the strong North Philadelphia Civic League, whose president, Dr. John K. Rice, has been forwarded by local Democrats as a "stalking horse" candidate for the Fleming post. Condemning the move, Dr. Rice told G. James Fleming that he had "done a good job and I see no reason for your removal regardless of politics." Dr. Rice said that he would refuse the position were it offered to him.

In the meantime, Negro Republican leaders, many of whom have been active in the movement for both State and Federal legislation which would regulate employment practices and labor union discriminations, are taking the position that if the Philadelphia political attitude is to become the national pattern, they can "see little need of adding still another political wing to the Democratic Party."

'POLITICAL' IN INTEREST

A spokesman for the Republican State Negro Council said that his organization would seek "either an immediate denunciation of the Philadelphia Democratic Committeemen's Organization by that party's National Committee, or an open admission that the party's interest in fair employment practices is outright political."

The taking of such a stand on the part of the Democratic National Committee as well as local Democratic leaders, also will be sought, it is thought, by church and civic units in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, which comprise the region which Mr. Fleming administers.

This move will be taken, it is believed, despite the fact that sources close to the national offices of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices have assured Pennsylvania residents that the unit's leaders "are ashamed" of the Philadelphia attempt to make its work partisan.

We Can't Back Truman On FEPC, Cox Says

Atlanta Constitution

WASHINGTON, June 9.—(AP)—With Democratic ranks sharply split and southern congressmen defying the administration, the showdown is due next week on two controversial issues—FEPC and the poll tax.

Legislation against the poll tax required in seven southern states will be considered Monday in the house. 6-10-45

The proposal to create a permanent fair employment practices committee will be voted on Tuesday in the House Rules Committee, where it has been stalled for months.

Southerners in general said today they will stick by their opposition to the proposals, even though it may result in a major break with President Truman.

"We just can't go along with the President this time," declared Rep. Cox, Democrat, Georgia, in a typical comment.

Of several questioned, nearly all predicted to a reporter that the anti-poll tax measure will succeed —temporarily—but the FEPC bill will be blocked. Here's their general idea of what will happen.

The house will approve the anti-poll tax legislation, as it has done in two past congresses. But then, as also has happened twice before, southern senators will talk it to death in the upper chamber. It was dragged out of committee for floor action, by a discharge petition signed by 218 house members.

The rules committee is expected to vote against the FEPC plan, despite a letter from Mr. Truman to Chairman Sabath, Democrat, Illinois, urging favorable action. Four committee members are from the "solid south" and two others, Reps. Slaughter, of Missouri, and Bates, of Kentucky, from so-called border states.

The southerners concede that if the FEPC bill should get to the house floor it would pass in that branch of congress.

On the poll tax issue, supporters argue the levy should be banned in order to allow freedom of voting. Opponents contend such a move would invade rights of the states to determine voting qualifications. 6-10-45

On FEPC, proponents declare such an agency is needed to insure fair play among job seekers, regardless of their race, color or creed. Those opposed assert, however, that FEPC officials promote social equality among races and thereby incite ill feeling.

As this is written, there is real danger that we may lose much of the ground we have gained under the New Deal in assuring fair employment practices for minority groups. A sneak attack by some members of the House Appropriations Committee resulted in no recommendation of funds for the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice. The omission was explained as simply a delay "to await legislative developments" on a permanent anti-discrimination program. At the same time, the House Rules Committee was blocking consideration of such permanent legislation by refusing to give the pending Norton bill a rule. New Republic 6-18-45

Those who want federal guarantees against job discrimination are temporarily boxed in. Some parliamentary experts fear that even if the original appropriation request were restored by the Senate committee, it might be stricken out from the floor on a simple point of order. In that case, a fight would be made to include the FEPC in a deficiency-appropriation bill or to rush through the bill for a permanent committee. Lacking a rule, this would have to be done by means of a discharge petition signed by two-thirds of the House.

This fight has again revealed the blatantly undemocratic nature of House procedure and the need for its reform. Meanwhile, we too still have to resort to parliamentary tricks to find a way to preserve what tools against discrimination we now have.

FEPC Bill

Anti-Discrimination Bills

Atlanta World

In the current issue of the Nation's magazine, Will Maslow holds forth encouraging prospects for the enactment of some form of legislation insuring fair employment practice state by state. He points out that some 12 northern states are now seriously considering bills for state Fair Employment Practice Commissions; that the chances for the enactment of strong, comprehensive measures seem excellent in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and that the chances are good in Rhode Island, Connecticut, Wisconsin and Michigan. "Not since the Civil War," declares the writer, "has there been so much local interest in preventing racial or religious discrimination in employment: forty-nine different bills have been introduced in 20 states during the current year." 4-20-45

Although there is no central organizing force behind these bills, it is reported that the CIO, American Jewish Congress and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People are circulating and pushing the model bills. In every state where such bills are under consideration the impetus appears to have been generated by the pioneering example of the New York State Legislature. And in almost every state these bills have been endorsed by Catholic, Protestant, Jewish, and Negro leaders, by state A. F. of L. and C. I. O. unions and by influential civic organizations.

Amid this rather widespread effort and interest in fair employment practice legislation, it is strangely interesting to note that the National Association of State Chambers of Commerce has initiated a move to block such state legislation as well as federal enactment of a Fair Employment bill. "It is quite evident, "declares the Association, "that all of this hue and cry for legislation covering fair employment is the result of a concerted effort by certain radical elements to sow the seeds of discord into our economic and political system, so that they may turn this discord to their own benefit." 4-20-45

The National Association of State Chambers of Commerce has a convenient and ready definition for radical elements. They make a mockery of fairplay and social justice when they contend that the seeds of discord are being sown when citizens organize to give all workers an equal chance to work at wages based on skill and experience instead of color and race. We hope no one will become too seriously impressed with the earnestness of the State Chambers of Commerce to keep down the seeds of discord by dealing cards against fair employment in the states or by the federal government. You cannot make happy people by starving them to death.

House Jimcrowers Hit Permanent FEPC

Daily Worker N.Y.

4-20-45

By Federated Press

WASHINGTON, April 19.—Stubborn southern tories ganged up in the House Rules Committee today in a determined fight against the Norton bill creating a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission and finally drew a tart comment from Chairman Mary Norton of the House Labor Committee that the rules group "is determined not to let us bring out any bill."

Mrs. Norton opened discussion on the bill by recalling that it was reported out by her labor committee Feb. 20, that a request for a rule was made Feb. 23 and a hearing was granted March 8.

"We now again request a rule to give the House an opportunity to vote on this bill. The subject was widely discussed in the last campaign and both Pres. Roosevelt and Gov. Thomas E. Dewey were for it," she said.

As Mrs. Norton finished, Rep. E. E. Cox (D-Ga), asked why the legislation was necessary. She replied that "the reasons are obvious. We are telling the world we believe in democracy and in economic opportunity." 4-20-45

JUST LANGUAGE

"But," Cox interposed, that's just language. What are the facts?"

Mrs. Norton answered that "minority groups are being discriminated against now. I don't think you are serious in asking that question." When Cox insisted he was, Mrs. Norton said "Negroes are being discriminated against. They always have been."

She also added that she was satisfied that the legislation would not aggravate the situation.

After getting an affirmative answer when he asked if the bill was offered in the name of democracy, Cox asked if "you think it right to deprive an employer of free choice in selecting employes?" He then went into a speech about his fear that long hearings and decisions of the FEPC based on "the unsupported testimony of a single complaining witness" would not be democratic. 4-20-45

Mrs. Norton assured Cox that the bill was aimed at "the color line," but denied it would touch state laws prohibiting inter-marriage. At one point, Mrs. Norton said, "I'm an American. I don't believe in Jim-crow.

Rep. Clyde Doyle (D-Cal), was offered by Mrs. Norton as an attorney to answer legal questions. He proved a weak witness, permitting Rep. Charles A. Halleck (R-Ind), to lead him into conceding that both the FEPC bill and the Wagner Labor Relations Act should include provision for the use of "rules of evidence," something the successive administrators of the NLRB have fought constantly as destructive of the basic U. S. labor law. Hearings will continue tomorrow.

Polltaxers Threaten Violence Against FEPC

Daily Worker

By Federated Press 4-26-45

WASHINGTON, April 25.—In an ugly demonstration polltax Democrats riddled the permanent Fair Employment Practice bill before the House Rules Committee today after one Congressman warned that the opponent of the FEPC, followed FEPC bill would result in "strife Rivers before the committee. and possibly bloodshed."

Having already broken its own record for delay by keeping the FEPC bill (HR 2232) tied up for two months, the Rules Committee ordered further hearings with no indication as to when it may be expected to vote on sending it to the floor. 4-26-45

Appearing first was Rep. L. Mendel Rivers (D-SC), who advised the Rules Committee that the FEPC bill "is in most violent conflict with American principles." He charged it violates the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution (due process of law) and the right of trial by a jury.

After repeating several times that the law could not be enforced, Rivers was asked by Rep. E. E. Cox (D-Ga) if he "meant that the spirit of resistance to government is not dead?" 4-26-45

Rivers answered that the "American people have tolerated regimentation because of the war effort, but under no pretext will they tolerate this bill. There would be strife and possibly bloodshed if it is passed."

Later on Rivers branded the bill as "a fraud" and charged "you can't do what this bill says without the Army, Navy and Marine Corps and perpetrating the horror camps of Europe." 4-26-45

In the midst of the testimony Chairman Adolph J. Sabath read a letter from Chairman Mary T. Norton of the House Labor Committee saying that it had overwhelmingly voted to insist on the bill being sent to the floor as written and without the crippling amendments suggested within the Rules Committee.

HOUSE RULES BODY, MRS. NORTON CLASH

She Accuses the Committee of 'Unfairness' in Not Sending FEPC Bill to Floor

4-20-45

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, April 19—A smoldering Congressional controversy, one of the bitterest with which the new Administration is faced, flared anew today as Chairman Norton of the House Labor Committee accused the Rules Committee of systematic "unfairness" in not sending the fair employment practices bill to the floor.

As the committee sat in momentary silence, she said:

"I say from the bottom of my heart that this committee has been most unfair to the Labor Committee. I have a feeling of intense bitterness."

Later she said that if the Rules Committee did not act by the middle of next week she would file a petition asking that the bill be taken from that gorup and brought directly to the floor. The petition would require 218 signatures.

Chairman Sabath of the Rules Committee, who is a proponent of the bill, expressed belief that the group could make its decision by Tuesday or Wednesday. He held a "cautious hope" that he could marshal enough votes to recommend it to the floor.

Bill Approved Feb. 20

The bill was approved Feb. 20 by the Labor Committee, but has since been pending in the rules group. 4-20-45

The verbal fireworks were set off by Mrs. Norton's appearance before the Rules Committee in behalf of the bill, which would make unlawful racial discrimination in the employment of workers and would create a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission to succeed the temporary agency set up by executive order of the late President Roosevelt.

Her chief opponent was Representative Cox, Democrat of Georgia, but he received support from Colmer of Mississippi and Smith of Virginia, Democrats.

When Mr. Cox asked, "Is this bill aimed at the color line?" Mrs. Norton replied:

"Most assuredly, the Negroes are the great victims of discrimination."

Mr. Cox and other members argued that the bill, modeled in part on the Wagner Act, would make the proposed commission "prosecutor and judge all in one" in appeals from its decisions of fact would be determined by the commission and the courts.

Would Permit Amendments

Mrs. Norton asserted that she would not b ythe committee was willing to consider "any amendment offered in good faith," but adde that denying to Congress the right to discuss this thing on the floor."

"As one who really feels kindly those people. A big proportion of the whites in my State feel kindly toward the Negroes."

"But what have you ever done for them?" Mrs. Norton asked and added: 4-20-45

"We want to bring the people in the South up to the same standard as the rest of the country."

"What people of the South?" Mr. Colmer inquired.

"The large majority," Mrs. Norton replied. "We would like to bring them up to a standard of living that is decent."

"The South," Mr. Colmer said, "is perfectly able to take care of itself. This bill would bring the greatest disunity this country has ever seen." 4-20-45

Mr. Cox asserted that Mr. Norton "doesn't believe in home rule," and she answered, "That's silly. Are you going to ask me now if I believe in my grandmother?"

In concluding, she said, "I hope you won't feel too bad about what I have said about this committee."

"We are accustomed to it," Mr. Cox replied. "It is like water off a duck's back."

ANTI-BIAS BILL PASSES STATE SENATE; NEW YORK WILL BE FIRST STATE TO HAVE OWN FEPC WHEN GOV. DEWEY SIGNS BILL

New York Post 3-10-45

ALBANY N. Y. — By a vote of 49 to 6, the New York State Senate on Monday night passed the Ives-Quinn Anti-Discrimination bill establishig the nation's first official commission to fight racial and religious discrimination in industry. The bill will be signed either late this week or early next week by Governor Dewey.

The end of the final roll call on the bill, which came at 10:10 p. m. after 85 minutes of debate, found the only opposition coming from Republicans. Just as in the Assembly, when the bill was passed last week, the entire Democratic minority voted for the bill, 21 Democratic Senators voting with 28 Republican Senators for the measure while 6 Republican Senators voted against it. Of these, only one negative vote came from New York City and that was cast by Senator Robert Bainbridge, of Staten Island.

On completion of the voting, Gov. Dewey hailed the action in the following statement: 3-10-45

"Passage of the Ives-Quinn bill to combat racial and religious discrimination in employment is a historic step. I am happy indeed that our State has led the entire Nation in this great social advance which will assure equality of opportunity for all our people, regardless of race, color, creed or natonal origin.

"I congratulate the leaders of the Legislature and its members on the passage of New York State's employment bill of rights."

Senator Frederic H. Bontecou, Poughkeepsie Republican, made the only attempt to amend the bill when it was called up for final passage before a packed Senate chamber that included several hundred forced to stand, for lack of seats. Senator Bontecou's amendment to make the bill inoperative unless approved by a majority in a state-wide referendum, was beaten 38 to 16 with all 16 votes being cast by Republicans, among them being Senator Frederic R. Coudert, jr., of Manhattan's Silk Stocking District. 3-10-45

Senator Walter J. Mahoney, Buffalo Republican, and member of the 23-man commission which drafted the legislation, delivered the closing argument for the bill.

"I think that the great thing that can be said of this bill," Senator Mahoney told his colleagues, "is that it is the epitome of the idea that all men are created equal and that the basic opportunity to earn a living shall not be denied because of race, color or religion....It is a milestone in our progress as a democracy....There is in this bill the greatest possibility of either good or evil of any bill ever put on our statute books." 3-10-45

But, said the Senator, the key to the sensible administration of the law is the make-up of the five-man commission which Gov. Dewey wil lappoint. The bill be- Dewey will appoint. The bill be- a five-man commission charged with fighting racial and religious discrimination in employment as the opening gun in a long-range and broader program aimed against all types of discrimination. To prepare the way for the long-range goal, the bill provides that the commission may begin immediately to administer educational and persuasive anti-discrimination programs all over the state.

In the field of employment, the bill carries maximum penalties for offenders convicted of discrimination of a year in jail or $500 fine or both.

Action and Education Both

Courier-Journal 3-17-45 Ky.

To the Editor of The Courier-Journal:

I am interested in the discussion in your editorial columns and The Point of View of the proposed Permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission. In general, I think your editorial position, maintaining that legislative fiat will not in itself bring about social change is reasonable and I agree with you on general principles. Social reform will not be accomplished by legislative action alone. 3-17-45

However, having agreed thus far, I cannot swing with you over to opposition to F.E.P.C. My observation has been that social reform has nearly always been the result of many different forces and influences being brought to bear on the problem and one of the more important of these influences is legislative action—in the present connection, an F.E.P.C. measure with teeth. It is not a case of either legislative direct action or gradual education of public opinion, but both. 3-17-45

Furthermore, as I see the collective bargaining principle in labor-employer relations being strengthened by the Wagner Labor Relations Act, I am encouraged to feel that a permanent F.E.P.C. will be similarly workable. OSBORNE FISCHBACH.

We Still Dissent 6-30-45

Editor Constitution: As six of the signers of the petition for a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission, now being circulated throughout Georgia, we take this means of thanking you for your editorial of June 15.

Atlanta Constitution

We were particularly gratified by your statement: "None can dispute the principle of the FEPC. Certainly no American citizen should be discriminated against because of religion or race."

There has been considerable misunderstanding about some of the provisions of the proposed legislation. The Atlanta Constitution has rendered the public a very real service by clarifying certain aspects of the bill and by pointing out that a number of the charges against it grow out of "ignorance and prejudice."

As to your statement that the bill contains police provisions for enforcement, may we call your attention to Sections 8 and 9. You will note that, to the contrary, the authority of the proposed commission would be limited to investigating complaints and issuing directives. You will note further that its directives could be enforced only by the courts. This procedure is the same as that of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

We agree with you that society cannot legislate morals. We cannot by law control a man's attitude toward another, but we can by law prevent him from interfering with the rights of another. Our statutes are full of such protective legislation. For instance, when we repealed the prohibition amendment, to which you made reference in your editorial, we still retained laws protecting society against those under the influence of intoxicants.

The FEPC would have no jurisdiction over moral attitudes. The legislation would, however, confirm and seek to make effective our national policy that attitudes on race and creed shall not be translated into practices which interfere with the rights of others to economic opportunity. 6-30-45

Employing a person involves many factors other than records of education, recommendations, etc. Yet these are all a court may consider—the tangible things. As proposed the bill is an attempt to regulate morality in the economic field. The Constitution still must dissent.)

FEPC Reports Only Slim Victory Over Religious, Racial Hatreds

Washington, June 21 (AP)—While reporting that minority groups have been succesfully used in war ndustry and "religious hatred" has been forestalled, FEPC says Negroes and Mexican-Americans constitute a "known economic problem."

In a report to President Truman last night covering the first 18 months of its existence through December, 1944, the Fair Employment Practice Committee said the immediate problem is to guard against discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin in the syphoning of workers from cutback plants into new war work and civilian goods production.

Nazi Hopes Forestalled

It further asserted that over 400,000 minority group workers still are available for war industries or for other essential work.

The seven-man committee was created by President Roosevelt May 27, 1943. It is about to pass out of existence June 30 unless Congress gives it more money or makes it a permanent body.

While asserting Nazi hopes to infect this country with religious hatred has been forestalled, the report said:

"The margin of our victory over religious intolerance has been narrow. Hooduums have attacked Jews in some of our wartime cities. The dangerous undercurrent is there. In war industries and government service citizens of the Jewish faith have been denied opportunity to serve their country.

"Yet it may still be said that such cases, however symtomatic, have been relatively few in number."

The committee said the 13,000,000 Negroes in this country comprise the minority group discriminated against most, adding that 81 per cent of the cases docketed by it in the last fiscal year involved complaints from whites. Jewish complaints, with a scattering of other creeds, constituted about 9 per cent. The remaining 10 per cent concerned foreign origins, with Mexican-Americans comprising the majority.

"Private industry was charged with discrimination in 69.4 per cent of the cases, federal agencies in 24.5 per cent and labor unions in 6.1 per cent," the report continued.

"The discriminatory practices faced by minority group workers have importance in this order: Refusal to hire, unwarranted dismissal, refusal to upgrade, discriminatory working conditions and refusal to refer qualified workers for employment."

The committee said the "best barometer" of the progress of minority groups is to be found in the measure of gains by Negro workers. Non-whites, of whom 96 per cent are Negroes, constituted 8.3 per cent of all workers in war industries in November, 1944, as against only 2.5 to 3 per cent three months after Pearl Harbor.

Job Policy Reversed Under Ives-Quinn Act

WILL ABIDE BY LAW

New Policy Effective July 1, Officials Say

All indications point to a reversal in the lily-white employment policy of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company in order to comply with the provisions of the Ives-Quinn Anti-Discrimination Act which becomes effective on July 1, the AFRO learned this week.

Personnel officials of the company, which has not hired one colored employee in the last 25 years and which includes not even one colored worker among its 15,000 at its main office at 1 Madison Ave., have given assurance that they will abide by the law and hire people of all races, creeds and colors.

They have also stated clearly that they will not indulge in token employment in order to get around the law, and that everyone hired will receive equal rights and privileges in all types of jobs and for upgrading.

Confined to N.Y. State

However, they went on to say that this policy applies only to New York State where the bill will be in effect and not to other States where many other of their offices are maintained.

Miss Layle Lane of the March-on-Washington Movement told the AFRO that her organization has already sent out letters to people telling them to apply for jobs with the company.

In the letters was included a statement the personnel manager of the Metropolitan had made to them, saying they would abide by the law, and that this was being done because of the law and not by previous pressure applied.

Reached at his office, Charles A. Collier Jr., executive secretary of the City-Wide Citizens' Committee on Harlem, said the question of employment of colored people was raised when his committee met with Mr. Ecker, chairman of Metropolitan's board of directors, last fall.

Mr. Ecker then said that he would think it over, but nothing further developed.

"Couldn't Get to First Base"

"We couldn't get to first base in our conference with him," Mr. Collier explained. "It is possible that the Metropolitan is going ahead and will act in compliance with the FEPC law."

Mr. DeMar of the N.Y. Urban League expressed great hope for the success of the law.

"I do know that the Metropolitan is exploring the possibilities of employing colored people as clerks, stenographers, agents and as managers and that those points are under consideration now," he said. "An effort is being made to do something about it.

"When I talked with Mr. Ecker and with C. W. Taylor, vice-president in charge, they stated that up until the bill was passed nobody had proposed any suitable plans for the employment of colored workers. Mr. Taylor went on to say that he didn't believe legislation was the proper way."

Job Field Revolutionized

Mr. DeMar pointed out that the FEPC law has changed the entire posibilities for employment of colored in the entire New York area.

"It will take some time before things take effect," he warned, "but the bigger concerns are making an honest effort to integrate colored workers into jobs they never held before.

"Take the firm of Johns-Manville which has recently hired several colored employees, a thing they never did before."

He said there will be an industrial committee discussion next Monday in which a representative of the employees of the Metropolitan will meet with the N.Y. Urban League to confer on employment policies. He was not free to reveal her name at this time.

Truman Again Asks F. E. P. C. Consideration

Memphis World 6-19-45

Rep. Norton Asks Republicans To Sign Petition

BY HARRY S. McALPIN

(Washington Bureau of Atlanta Daily World and NNPA)

WASHINGTON — President Truman said again Wednesday that he is sincerely hopeful that the House Rules Committee will give the Congress a chance to vote on the F. E. P. C. bill.

He made this statement to his news conference in answer to this correspondent's question.

The President expressed also the hope that Congress will undertake to restore the $17,000,000 cut from the appropriation of the Office of War Information by House action. He said that in his judgment the things being done by OWI need to be done in the interest of the nation still fighting a war which is far from over and which the people need to know is far from over.

"DRASTIC" CUT 6-19-45

The OWI budget was cut from $35,000,000 to $18,000,000 by vote of the House of Representatives.

Senator Kenneth McKellar, Democrat of Tennessee, acting chairman of the Senate Appropriation Committee, stated Wednesday that he believed the Senate will restore at least a part of the cut, which he termed "too drastic."

The President's expressed hopefulness concerning the FEPC has aroused speculation as to whether he was merely stating a wish or whether he meant by being sincerely hopeful that he has sought further consideration by Rules Committee which turned down the F. E. P. C. with a 6-6 vote, with some assurance that at least one of the opposition votes will be changed.

Rep. Norton, Democrat of New Jersey and author of the FEPC bill said in an interview that she was relying on Republican representatives "to live up to their party pledge" and sign a petition to take the measure away from the committee. Rules Committee Chairman Sabath, Democrat of Illinois, announced he would sign the discharge petition, and, like Mrs. Norton, called on Republicans to do likewise. Both said the Republicans should "prove their sincerity" in view of this party's convention endorsement last year of FEPC legislation. The Democratic convention adopted a similar plank.

113 NAMES NEEDED

The discharge petition has about 125 signatures; it needs 218 to take the FEPC bill away from the Rules Committee. Mrs. Norton said only about 10 Republicans have signed thus far. 6-19-45

No funds for continuation of the temporary FEPC beyond June 30 were provided in the war agencies appropriation bill passed by the House last week, but Mrs. Norton predicted the Senate would insert the requested $599,000 and that the House would agree.

Southern Democrats banked on a Senate filibuster threat to smother House-approved legislation to abolish poll taxes. Southern senators promised lengthy filibusters, such as have prevented passage of previously House-approved poll tax bills.

FEPC ENDANGERED AS DEADLINE NEARS

Popular Action Can Save It

By ART SHIELDS

WASHINGTON, June 27.—With only four days to go before FEPC funds expire, Sen. Theodore Bilbo (D-Miss), opened his filibuster against the proposed Fair Employment Practices appropriation at 1 p.m., with a violent attack on Negroes, Jews, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, the American Newspaper Guild, etc.

He was still on the floor when the Senate adjourned four hours later, and will get the floor when it opens at noon tomorrow.

He will yield the floor shortly afterwards to Sen. Tom Connally (D-Tex), chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, just back from San Francisco, who will speak in behalf of the United Nations charter.

Then Bilbo gets the floor for his filibuster again.

Bilbo's filibuster held up nearly one billion dollars in appropriations for the National War Labor Board, the War Shipping Administration, the Offices of the Alien Property Custodian, of Defense Transportation, of Economic Stabilization, of War Information, of Inter-American Affairs, of Censorship and other war agencies.

The FEPC amendment, appropriating $446,000 for the non-discrimination committee, had not yet been introduced by Sen. Dennis Chavez (D-NM), when the Ku Klux Mississippian began his hate marathon.

FEPC, in fact, wasn't yet the order of business when the Senate recessed for the day. Bilbo wouldn't give Chavez a chance to present the amendment, which the Senate Appropriations Committee, by a vote of 14 to 4, had instructed him to offer.

Bilbo was talking against time. The FEPC forces today apparently had the two-thirds majority needed to suspend the Senate rules and permit an appropriation item, not yet approved by the House, to come on the floor without danger from points of order.

Sen. Kenneth McKellar (D-Tenn), presiding officer of the Senate, a bitter foe of FEPC, conceded that the two-thirds vote might win when he got the floor in late afternoon to offer what he called a "compromise" to bring "peace."

McKellar's "peace" offer, however, had a suggestion of death to FEPC. He had been negotiating with both sides, he said, to get them to agree to appropriate $250,000 for FEPC for six months.

FEPC could die at the end of six months, it had been said in negotiations, but McKellar wouldn't say that on the floor, where he just talked of "friendship," "compromise" and "peace," and let's stop fighting and get on with the war agencies bill.

Sen. Alben Barkley (D-Ky), majority leader, who came in at this time, said he hoped an agreement could be made.

Chavez, the FEPC spokesman, could have rejected the compromise offer completely and held out for the full 12-months appropriation called for in the amendment. His position was strong. Protests were pouring in on Congress from all parts of the country.

Instead the New Mexican said he would accept the $250,000 for six months offer on one definite condition—that no liquidation of FEPC was implied at the end of that period.

But Bilbo said no. He rejected McKellar's offer, he said, unless the liquidation of FEPC were guaranteed after six months.

Otherwise he would continue the filibuster.

McKellar, who saw the weakness of the anti-FEPC crowd, wanted Chavez to give up his no-liquidation proviso. He tried to tempt the New Mexican with the idea that he might put through a permanent FEPC bill in the six months ahead.

But Chavez wouldn't compromise any further.

ATTACKS NEWS GUILD

Early in the filibuster Bilbo interrupted the reading of a wire that he had received from John Ryan, organizer of the New York Newspaper Guild, by bawling at the men in the Press Gallery overhead: "I hope none of you boys are organized," he shouted.

Ryan's wire had denounced his filibuster plans as an attack on American democracy. And Bilbo, in a reply, which he read to the Senate, tiraded against the Guild wire as "rotten" and "Communist," etc.

At one point Bilbo threatened a "revolution" if the fight for Negro rights continued. He's threatened that often before.

Phrases like "N . . . r lovers" abounded in his long distance diatribe. He abused Mrs. Roosevelt for, he said, "trying to teach social equality to the American N . . r." He jeered at Negro and white bishops who had protested the plans to kill FEPC in messages from the South, and Jew-baiting ran rampant.

Dr. Franz Boaz, the famous anthropologist, was assailed as a "Jew." FEPC, said Bilbo, would tell employers to hire "Jews" and Negroes. There was constant reference to the employment of Jews and Negroes in FEPC offices.

"Julius Streicher could hardly have done worse," said one reporter.

Polltax Repeal and FEPC

Daily Worker 6-15-45

by Doxey Wilkerson

IT IS important to understand the basis of bitter congressional opposition to FEPC and to polltax repeal. If we know the nature and the motives of our enemy, we are better armed for the struggle.

This week saw House passage of the polltax repeal bill at the conclusion of two days of debate involving some of the most vicious Jew-baiting, Negro-baiting and red-baiting ever heard in the halls of Congress. This week also saw the reactionary Rules Committee reject President Truman's courageous plea for permanent fair employment practice legislation and refuse to allow the FEPC bill to come up for House consideration. Now the main struggle for both measures shifts to the Senate, where filibusters, further name-calling and trickery will be resorted to in an effort to prevent this passage. New York

These two bills propose nothing more "revolutionary" than to implement two elementary principles of democracy—(1) the right to vote, and (2) the right to employment without racial or religious discrimination. Why, then, are they so violently opposed? Who would gain by their defeat?

Wild and irresponsible charges of "states rights," "Communist plot," "Negro domination," "stab-in-the-back for white Gentiles," and the like, are, of course, pure hog-wash. These are poisonous smoke-screens behind congressional representatives of reaction proceed to do the work of their masters.

Real Stakes At Issue 6-15-45

But the real stakes at issue are not hard to discern. To keep 10,000,000 white and Negro southerners disfranchised and to relegate Negro workers to an inferior occupational caste is worth billions of dollars annually to certain powerful groups of exploiters in our country.

Just suppose the federal polltax repeal bill is finally passed and enforced, thereby giving the vote to millions of Southern citizens who never had a chance to vote before. Just suppose these millions of new voters begin to clamor for decent schools, health services, justice in the courts, unemployment insurance and other forms of social security, and especially for decent wages and the right to organize into unions. And suppose they voted for local, state and national representatives who pledge to work for these things, and against those who oppose them?

Is it not clear that any such democratic development would shatter the oligarchic controls and super-exploitation by which a handful of big planters and financiers (many of the latter on Wall Street) now rule and get rich off the labors of the southern masses? And is it not also clear that Rankin and Bilbo and their ilk would quickly lose their jobs as congressional supporters of Bourbon reaction? This is why the anti-polltax bill is so bitterly fought.

If FEPC Becomes Permanent Daily Worker

Just suppose the Fair Employment Practice Committee is made permanent, and becomes increasingly effective in breaking down racial and religious discriminations in employment. And suppose, with these artifical barriers gone, millions of white and Negro workers begin to work together on a basis of equality, to form many new personal friendships and closer bonds of unity and comradeship in their union organizations. 6-15-45

Is it not clear that the profits now made from Negro-white wage differentials would disappear? Is it not clear that the power of the labor movement to protect workers from exploitation would be greatly enhanced? Is it not clear that the big-money boys who now dominate our government in their own selfish interests would have to yield more and more to the demands of people's organizations in their growing struggles for democracy and security? This is why FEPC legislation is so bitterly fought.

The main power of the opposition comes from the main class forces of reaction—semi-feudalistic landlords who hold great plantations and control the lives of millions of white and Negro workers in the South, northern financiers who hold mortgages on the southern plantations, and powerful businessmen and industrialists in both the North and South who define their profit-seeking interests in anti-labor and anti-democratic terms. These are the main forces we are fighting.

Political Reaction

It is evident that the main opponents of FEPC and poll-tax repeal are also the most powerful enemies of Anglo-Soviet-American cooperation for enduring peace, of effective OPA measures to protect the wartime living standards of the people, of wage increases commensurate with living-cost increases, of decent standards of unemployment and health insurance, of federal planning for full employment—indeed of all major programs to strengthen democracy and security for the people of America.

The root sources of political reaction are much the same, whether the immediate issue be FEPC or Dumbarton Oaks. And the triumph of reaction on any one of these issues increases the peril of them all.

Thus, the struggle for polltax repeal and FEPC is a struggle to consolidate and strengthen precisely those democratic forces of national unity upon whom we all must depend for peace, security and enlarging freedom. Moreover, it is a struggle we can win. It is a struggle we have simply got to win. 6-15-45

We can break the threatened filibuster and pass the polltax repeal bill, restore the temporary FEPC appropriation, and pass the permanent FEPC bill in the Senate; and we can guarantee House approval of both FEPC measures. We can do these things—if the organization of the people get quickly into the fight and bring their overwhelming democratic pressure to bear upon Congress.

We really can win these FEPC and polltax fights—and we've simply got to do it!

Battle for Democracy

Daily Worker

ALL OF US had better begin thinking hard about the racial and religious discrimination which was a mainstay of Hitler fascism and which is still deeply rooted in the economic and political institutions of our country.

Democracy in the United States will not be secure as long as fascist demagogues are free to play on prejudice and bigotry. It will not be secure as long as 13,000,000 Negro Americans are treated as second class citizens.

This is the challenge which confronts Congress in the FEPC and anti-polltax bill. This is the challenge which Congress has so far failed to meet. 6-14-45

Polltax Congressmen rant that an anti-polltax bill and a permanent FEPC would "sovietize" America. But wasn't it the Declaration of Independence which proclaimed the truth that "all men are created equal"? And is there any more fundamental way in which democracy can be asserted than in giving Negroes and other minorities a chance to work without discrimination? Is there any democratic right more essential than the right to vote?

These bills are now in danger because the South is still misrepresented by Senators and Congressmen elected on the basis of the undemocratic polltax system and because the Republicans have consistently failed to make good on their campaign pledges to the Negro people.

It is true that the House by better than two to one has again voted for the anti-polltax bill. But this has happened twice before. And each time the Senate action has been stopped by parliamentary skulduggery and filibustering.

President Truman has repeatedly demanded action on FEPC, and he is on record against the polltax. But there is no evidence that either Republican or Democratic leaders in Congress take this legislation seriously.

And they will not take it seriously until there is a more determined and more vocal movement demanding the passage of these bills. This is the responsibility of every labor union and of every progressive organization.

Fight Looms

Call St. Louis FEPO 'Illegal'

Pa.

Pittsburgh Courier

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—Alderman Caston's Fair Employment Practice Ordinance Friday was held illegal by Associate City Counselor Charles J. Dolan. The latter claimed the bill conflicts with the City Charter, interferes with private business and would invade its rights by regulating terms of private contracts. The stand taken by Dolan is merely his own opinion.

Tom Gates, FEPO chairman, told The Courier "The St. Louis Committee for an FEPO denounces Dolan's opinion as a cheap trick to deny thousands the right to earn an honest living regardless of race, color, religion or national origin. We pledge ourselves to redouble our efforts; in behalf of this basic right we have just begun to fight." 12-29-45

Americans Out-Nazi Nazis in Germany, Writer Finds

The Afro American Baltimore, Maryland 9-1-45

BERLIN (ANP) — Tan Yanks feel the whip lash of racial prejudice more from bigoted members of their own Army than they do from the Germans.

That is the conclusion reached by Allan Morrison in a special article about colored soldiers in Germany, which appeared in the Aug. 12 issue of Stars and Stripes.

"Germans, who once were exhorted to think of themselves as the master race, now gladly wash the clothes of American colored soldiers, whom the Nazis had taught them to despise," Morrison writes.

Feeling Not Deep

Concerning the intense propaganda campaign Hitler and his Nazis had waged against colored people, Morrison writes:

"Nazi created anti-colored feeling is not a deep, living thing. The most serious source of racial propaganda against colored people originates with certain bigoted members of the American Army."

Detailing how Germans have reacted to the presence of thousands of colored troops in their midst, he reports:

Too Busy to Hate

"In Nuremburg, the seat of Nazi racism, American colored troops speak of friendly relations with civilians, who are far too busy reconstructing their shattered lives to revive the Hitlerian theories that brought their country to ruin.

"In Munich, Schweinfurt, Frankfort and Augsburg, colored soldiers say that civilians attach more importance to the problems of food and shelter than to hating and fearing dark-skinned Americans.

"In one town, the daughter of a colonel in the German Army, stoutly contended that she could not associate with colored men.

9-1-45

Forget Contention

"But personality proved stronger than propaganda, and by the time the non-fraternization policy was relaxed, she was holding nightly 'conversations' with a colored soldier."

Food is the big factor, Morrison reports he was told by S/Sgt. George Handy of Washington, D. C., who pointed out that the Germans are a hungry people and were glad to get it from any source.

"Colored soldiers point out that Germans who never saw colored people before the arrival of the Americans, have adjusted themselves to the sensitive feelings of Tan Yanks towards racial insult.

Avoid Use of "Neger"

"For example, the German word for a black man is 'Neger' which sounds like an offensive word, so many Germans studiously refrain from using the word, replacing it with such expressions as 'brown man.'"

Some Tan GI's, however, according to Morrison, report having heard Germans mutter "schwartzer teufel" which means "black devil," another Hitlerian carryover.

"'When we first arrived here 7 weeks ago, many of the people seemed afraid of us,' said Cpl. Sidney Dickerson of Beckley, W. Va., a member of a tank battalion. 'But we soon showed these people the falseness of Hitler's racial propaganda.'"

Doctor Tells Story

Capt. William Bruce of Winston-Salem, N.C., Army physician, told his attempts to assist a German woman in the throes of childbirth.

"She wouldn't let me touch her," Bruce said, "But things have changed in this community. Now there's a constant stream of Germans coming into my dispensary for medical treatment."

The real harm has come from certain prejudiced white Americans, who have carried their ideas into Germany, Morrison reports.

"The colored soldiers condemn this as 'fascism in another form.' It is no new experience for them. Similar campaigns were conducted in England, France, Belgium and Italy by the same minority of Americans."

9-1-45

Nazism Not Dead

"Remarking on the similarity between Nazi anti-colored propaganda and anti-colored stories circulated by American race baiters, one sergeant said bitterly:

"'You ask about relations between us and German civilians. Well ,as far as we can see, they are normally good. But there are a few members of our own Army who still are playing the Nazi game of hate-your-fellow-man-because he's black. Sometimes I wonder if we have really defeated Nazism."

White Soldiers Grow Weary Of Color Prejudice

The Memphis World

Write Article Protesting Our Evil Practice

Memphis, Tennessee 9-21-45

BERLIN, Germany (ANP) — Two white GIs, members of America's occupation force here, lodged a complaint against color barriers affecting Negro soldiers in a recent issue of Yank magazine.

T/Sgt. Willie Jones, a Mississippian, backed the right of Negroes to have the democracy they fought for. His letter to Yank, a service magazine, read:

"I received a copy of your magazine and read that the AMG (Allied Military Government) is letting the Germans go back to school. After that I read in Mail Call about the jim crow treatment of colored American soldiers.

FROM MISSISSIPPI

"Now I am from Mississippi. Until I came into the army I hated Negroes. It wasn't anything they did to me. I just didn't like them. Since I have been in the ETO I have fought from D-day to VE-day with Negro soldiers. I was wounded twice in one foxhole and a Negro saved my life by using his first-aid kit on me. Then he carried me to where a doctor could work on me. This was under heavy fire. Later he died. He was from New York and he knew I was from the south where he had no freedom.

"Many Negro soldiers have died on the front for American soldiers who thought jim crow was right. So if Germans can have freedom after they have caused so much suffering and destructions, why not let the Negro race have what they fought for? I feel that they should and a lot of southern GIs feel the same way.

PROTESTS ORDER

Pvt. David Icheson, whose background was not revealed, loudly protested a military order that forbade white troops from associating with Negro soldiers.

"The other night we had a jam session with some colored boys from a quartermaster trucking out fit quartered near us," he wrote. "This morning we were read an order which prohibits us to associate with the colored troops 'except on business.

"'A colored tank outfit fought side by side with this regiment clear to Steyr, Austria, and we were never ordered not to fight alongside of American troops of the colored race, so why should we be forbidden to associate with other American soldiers because of color?'

ILD to Push Defense of Negro Soldier

Daily Worker N. Y. N. Y. 10-30-45

Despite commutation of his death sentence to confinement at hard labor, the defense of Pvt. Robert H. Johnson, Negro soldier from Mississippi, convicted of "raping" a German woman, will go on unabated, the International Labor Defense announced here yesterday.

Pvt. Johnson, who has also been dishonorably discharged, is the victim of a frame-up by "white-supremacy-minded" Military Police, the ILD contends. Vito Marcantonio, president of the ILD, said yesterday that the organization will continue efforts to obtain further review of the case.

The evidence which the ILD is seeking to include in a new review by Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, apparently not on the official record, indicates that Pvt. Johnson was asleep in his army barrack at the time the alleged offense was committed.

Milton Becker, GI Rights Bureau director, has been asked to transmit the ILD appeal to Gen. Eisenhower.

"A thorough examination of the record, together with other evidence, will be made," Mr. Becker said. "The pattern of this case follows too closely that of so many others, in which Negro soldiers have been made victims of 'white supremacy' tactics by military police, not to invite suspicion that this is another example of the same thing.

"Gen. Eisenhower's commutation of the death sentence will be followed automatically by a legal examination of the record by the European Branch of the Judge Advocate General's Office, and a further decision by Gen. Eisenhower as to execution of the commuted sentence."

Say Court Martials Of Negro Soldiers In Liberia Highest

New York Amsterdam News 11-17-45

Roberts Field Said To Resemble Convict Camp In 1620 Georgia

MONROVIA, (ANP)—The court martial record of Negro soldiers stationed at Roberts Field is perhaps the highest in the army. Hardly a week passes without three or four general or special courts martial and the excuse of being caught "off limit" is used to give men six months or more.

Native villages are raided in spite of law, and their people beaten up by fierce MPs, GIs declare. This camp, the only Negro headquarters in the army, resembles a convict camp such as was Georgia during the days of Queen Elizabeth, soldiers say. 11-17-45

"The Negro public snould beam its interest on Liberia, whose sovereignty is now in the balance, while we have become ambushed into a scheme of criticism of Liberia, even though the enemies of her freedom are now closing in on her," said one soldier. The scheme apparently is to make the Afro-American here hateful (by repression) toward the country, thus cutting off our sympathy for this struggling nation in our desire to get away from one of the worst run army camps anywhere overseas. 11-17-45

It is expected that the situation in Liberia will be given a full investigation and publicity since men in the military have no way of receiving aid excepting through Negro organizations in the U. S. who are not adequately informed of the real truth of conditions prevailing here.

U. S. Army Installs Jim Crow In Manila

10-13-45

By ENOC P. WATERS JR.
(Defender War Correspondent)

MANILA—The men who helped liberate the Philippines will be completely segregated from the social and recreational life of the islands, it was revealed here this week.

Negro troops in Manila have been banned from any bi-racial activities in the city following the surrender of Japan.

Lt. Gen. W. D. Styer, commanding general of the American forces in the Western Pacific, approved the order which has caused racial tension to mount here to a dangerous peak.

This archaic policy, which makes a mockery of the high democratic principles which this war was fought to preserve, is reflected in Manila by the introduction of Jim Crow, which was unknown here before the war.

USO Jim-Crow

Most flaring manifestation of this fascistic policy is to be found at the USO club occupying the walled-city YMCA building which serves thousands of troops.

Here dances brazenly advertised as for "white" and for "colored" are held twice weekly. According to a notice posted on the second floor of the building, the swimming pool is reserved on Wednesdays and Thursdays for colored. On Fridays it is drained and cleaned before being turned over to whites for their exclusive use Saturdays, Sundays, Mondays and Tuesdays.

This same plan is also to be followed by another USO club scheduled to be opened soon at Rizal stadium.

According to Justin Morrell, white director of the club now operating, the Jim-Crow policy conforms to a directive drawn up by Maj. Gen. R. B. Reynoldes, assistant chief of staff, approved by General Styer and passed on to Maj. Gen. E. G. Plank, commanding general of the Philippines base section, for execution.

However, the USO is not blameless. Tom Hinton, white aide sent here to open the clubs, disclosed during a conversation that he is a firm believer in racial segregation and defended the army policy in effect here.

American Red Cross installations in the area are also required to conform to this pattern of racial segregation in their social programs.

The Red Cross, however, has been unable to avoid the use of Negroes on such regional staffs. Indeed, in many regions, former managers of Jim Crow veterans facilities are being stepped up to the job.

Another facet in the picture is the fact that present veterans administration personnel seem to know what the score is going to be. Spelled out, it is interpreted to mean that the new administrator does not expect to change basically the policy of former administrator Frank Hines. Although VA has advertised all over the country the availability of jobs in the agency, we are reliably informed that no Negroes above the grade of CAF-3 are considered for appointment.

During the past week rumors of the appointment of a Negro to a top position in the administration have grown. Col. Howard D. Queen, former commanding officer of the 366th Infantry division who was in Washington recently, is reported in line for the spot, although Col. Campbell C. Johnson, executive assistant to the director of selective service, whose record of sound administration has kept him head and shoulders above most of these mentioned for the post, still seems to have the inside track.

However, with the growing feeling that an "advisor" is about all that Gen. Bradley expects to approve. It is believed that Col. Johnson would not be interested in filling such a role. A hard-hitting worker, Col. Johnson made an enviable record for himself in seeing that the non-discrimination provisions of the Selective Service Act of 1940 was adhered to fully. Vested with full administrative authority, he was able to step in and reccommend a change in policy and procedure where he felt the role of the Negro inductee could be improved.

To the argument that the Negro assistant in VA should be one with combat experience comes back the ready answer—Gen. Patton had combat experience, but failed as an administrator. It is argued that what the position needs the light of other developments within the veterans administration and is being interpreted as a feeler. There are those who say that it is an attempt to find a respectable out for doing a thing which the administration wants to do—continue Jim Crow veterans facilities.

Negroes have adopted a wait-and-see attitude with regard to the future policy of the administration, and remember that Gen. Bradley is still an army officer attached to VA whom they had vaguely hoped would be removed from the pale of political intimidation. It remains to be proved.

is a man with administrative experience who is fundamentally interested in getting a job done. Should such a man be available who is also blessed with combat experience, it is believed that he would be ideally suited for the post.

Finally, Gen. Bradley's statement that some Negro physicians have requested Jim Crow hospital facilities be established, which statement was refuted by National Medical association president Dr. E. I. Robinson who said, "I cannot envision any member of our national organization making such a request," is now being viewed in

Army's Hard Workers Seek Transfer to Units Having Colored Officers

By OLLIE STEWART

[Copyright. Reproduction in whole or in part expressly forbidden.]

WITH U.S. TROOPS IN FRANCE—By Cable—Many port battalion soldiers I visited recently in the Rouen area were complaining about being under white officers and are constantly seeking transfers to units with colored officers which keeps the pot boiling at all times.

There are only a few outfits with colored officers, and these men are laboring desperately to keep the situation under control. All seemed to realize the situation is bad because the soldiers are forced to live abnormal lives.

White Officers Avoid Basic Issues

Although many white officers I talked to make an effort to be fair with their command, they invariably shy away from fundamental issues involved. Most obvious is the fact that they do not realize the deep-seated resentment of colored soldiers under a white command.

Although port battalions or work troops are not generally regarded on a par with front-line combat troops by casual newspaper readers at home, and even by many persons over here, it is a matter of record that no group of soldiers in this theatre has done more to make possible Allied victory.

It was part of the German strategy to deny us use of French ports by destroying harbor facilities, for without a constant stream of supplies our armies would wtiher on the vine. But despite this demolition and sunken ships blocking the harbors, the flow of materials continues even in the winter, thanks to men who work twelve-hour shifts to keep boats coming and going at Antwerp, Le Havre, Rouen and Cherbourg.

1-20-45

Life a Perpetual Grind

These men have a perpetual grind working and sleeping. They ride to work in trucks, get their meals served on the docks, then go back to Nissen huts to sleep. Except for the occasional glimpse of a Red Cross Club, they see nothing but their bunks and their warehouse.

They liberate no towns, see no flags, drink no champagne nor kiss happy girls. Yet, when things become critical, the first cry of the high command is, "Give us more supplies."

They set records only to break them when more speed is required. Everybody sneers at them for being stevedores, which does not help their peace of mind, yet when additional tons of vital supplies are needed, they pitch in and deliver without complaining.

Anti-Tank Unit Made Port Outfit

Capt. Penrose Goodall of Chicago, former anti-tank officer, commands one of few port companies with colored officers at Rouen. Jovial in manner and fair with men, but severe when necessary, Goodall has on his staff 1st Lt. Cleo Hancock, of Kansas City, Mo., a regular Army man; 1st Lt. Evie Fields of New Orleans, graduate of Southern University; 2nd Lt. William Davis of Philadelphia, 2nd Lt. Lilburn Williams of Kansas City, Mo., and 1st Lt. John Hopkins of Chicago.

Most of the men in the company were in the former tank destroyer outfit and are not yet pacified with being transferred to a port unit, though they work as hard as any.

Other Port Unit Officers

Among other port unit officers who deserve great credit are:

Lt. William Phinezy of Tacoma, Wash., Ordnance officer who landed D plus 8 after a time in the Pacific and now has a silver star and purple heart; Lt. C. A. Holliday of Marshall, Tex., chaplain from Bishop College; Lt. Leopold Hall of Boston, Mass.;

Lt. Ted Lawson of Chicago; Lt. Richard Cooper, Colorado Springs, Colo.; Lt. L. D. Polk, 144 N. Fifty-seventh Street, Philadelphia; W/O Foche Dooley, Kansas City, Kans.;

Near Cherbourg I met W/O M. Henry Pitts of Chicago, candidate for the doctorate at Chicago University and former teacher at Clark University. His wife, Mrs. Posie Pitts, dances in "Carmen Jones."

Marine Attack On Negroes At Pacific Isle Base Told

Louisville, Kentucky, Courier Journal 7-9-45

Cincinnati, July 7 (AP)—Walter White, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said today a group of Marines on an important Pacific island for weeks threw bricks, empty beer bottles and on occasion hand grenades and smoke bombs into camps occupied by Negro Navy men in a series of incidents.

White, who returned recently from a four-month tour of the Pacific theater, told a radio audience that he accepted an invitation from the island commander to serve as defense counsel before a Navy board of inquiry appointed to investigate the clash.

"When no attempt was made by the authorities to stop the attacks or punish the attackers," White said, "the colored men in despair determined to defend themselves when next attacked.

Negro Sailors Are Fired On.

"The next assault took place a few days later on Christmas Eve," White said. "A group of white servicemen fired upon colored sailors and ran them out of the main town on the island."

"On Christmas Day one Negro serviceman was shot and killed and another shot by white servicemen. These and other assaults infuriated the men who had been attacked to the point that twice they attempted to go into town to take vengeance. On one occasion they were turned back; on the second they were arrested, charged with rioting and unlawful assemblage."

Says Incidents Aid Japs.

White did not disclose the outcome of the investigation.

He said that in telling of the clash he was not emphasizing such happenings, declaring that the Japanese eagerly capitalize instances of friction between white and Negro personnel and give wide publicity among the Pacific's colored peoples to "the anti-Negro rantings of congressmen like Rankin and senators like Bilbo in filibustering a proposal to establish a Fair Employment Practices Committee."

Vet Writes Wife Saying Hospital In France Is Hellhole

Okla. City, Okla. Black Dispatch

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — (ANP) —Pvt. Marion Alexander, an overseas veteran, wrote his wife here recently that the army hospital where he is confined in France is a "hell hole."

Here is Pvt. Alexander's letter:

"Just a few more lines to give you some more of the details of this goddamn hospital.

"Since I have been here I haven't been asked once how I felt by the ward surgeon. He comes in and passes my bed, go to the white patients bed and ask them how you feel son? And when he get to me, he just look at me and walk out. Is that the way to treat a patient? Of course I don't give a damn. It is just the principle of the situation.

One day a colored fellow went to another doctor and told him his eye was giving him trouble. This is what he said, "It is suppose to hurt, it is out, what you expect? And he made a vow to do everything he could and in his power for humanity.

It hurts me, Lee, like hell. So if you don't see me anymore you will know I have up and did something. This damn place is a madhouse. I will try and take it just to come home some day. But I am not sure. The number of this mad house is 43rd General hospital near Marseelle.

I want you to write to every large colored newspaper or send a cablegram any way to let them know how the colored men are being treated here. I am not the only one. Thousands of us are catching hell and I mean hell.

"They have taken my Z-1 from me and I guess they will send me to the Pacific. But I will not work or do anything, because I am no good. I will just be in the damn army and no more.

"You can forget everything else and concentrate on what I am telling you about this Hell hole I am in with this staff of crakers —Georgia at that.

Whites Escape Punishment In Court-Martial

Walter White Claims Group Made Desperate

Atlanta Daily World 7-28-45

GUAM—(A NP)—Forty-three Negro sailors have been convicted by courtmartial in the Christmas night uprisings between them and white troops according to announcement here last week by Maj. General Henry Larsen, island commander.

Larsen did not involve white troops in his announcement although Walter White, NAACP executive secretary, reported in a radio address from the states that whites were involved. The commander confirmed the sentences against the Negro sailors, varying from four months to four years, as final. 7-15-45

CLAIMS TRUCK STOLEN

Between 25 and 30 Negro navy men, attached to the navy supply base compaines here, took two trucks without leave from the naval supply depot and drove toward Agana, court-martial testimony established. White said that they had previously been chased from there by white marines.

These men, court records show apprehended in the truck by white military police and Negro masters-at-arms assigned to the depot law enforcement detail. Maj. General Larsen did not reveal that any test mony had been introduced to involve the whites in the uprisings.

The NAACP secretary, who served as war correspondent for a New York newspaper, reported the reason the Negro sailors were in the trucks in serving as a defense counsel for the accused men. Testimony revealed that 14 .45 calibre pistols, a .38 calibre revolver and 18 loaded clips of .45 caliber bullets were found in the trucks.

REPORT HARASSMENT

White reported that the white marines harassed the Negro sailors into a state of desperation. A group of them threw hand grenades and smoke bombs into camps of Negro navy men in a series of incidents that resulted in a clash, he said. These attacks went on for weeks, he disclosed, and when no attempt was made by the authorities to stop them or punish the attackers, the colored men "in despair determined to defend themselves."

The slaying of one Negro sailor on Christmas day is said to be the final torch that infuriated the men to action. They attempted to go into town to seek vengeance. White disclosed Maj. General Larsen, however did not reveal whether the court-martial had admitted this evidence in sentencing the men or whether any efforts had been made to arest the white marines

ONE SAILOR KILLED

Beside the dead Negro sailor White reported that one was wounded by the marines in the fracas. A white MP was also wounded in the leg during an exchange of shots between them and the angry Negro sailors.

Further evidence submitted at court-martal hearings revealed that the men had hidden a store of weapons in anticipation of trouble with the white marines. The accused men were charged with rioting and unlawful assemblage. White said.

Maj. General Larsen reported that the sentences were final but did not say that any efforts will be made to bring the white marines to justice.

Georgians convicted in the court-martial included:

James Rufus Norris, Sr., S 1/c, 364 N. Mitchell St. Atlanta twenty-four months confinement with bad conduct discharge from Navy for rioting and applying his own use property of the U. S.

John Redding S 1/c, Griffin, Ga., same charge and sentence as Norris. 7-15-45

Jas. Stewart, Jr. S 1/c Brunswick, Ga., 24 months confinement with dishonorabel discharge from the Navy for stealing arms violation of a lawful regulation issued by the Secretary of the Navy and conduct to the prejudice of good order and discipline.

GI's in India Given Skilled Jobs But Denied Ratings

Afro-American Baltimore, Md

BURMA-INDIA (Delayed)—Although performing skilled duties of motor maintenance in open sheds along the Stilwell Road, colored soldiers are restricted to their general service classification which calls for the performing of unskilled labor only. 7-28-45

Under the Army's four-shop echelon maintenance system, colored troops handle first and second echelon maintenance—the routine work of auto mechanics—while whites in the other two do the heavy skilled work such as motor and transmission repair.

However, because of the manpower shortage, many colored mechanics are doing skilled work under the 20-hour operational basis which is designed to return a vehicle to its organization on the same day it enters the shop.

Can't Be Stumped

One of the ace mechanics working under the system is T/5 Perry Ballard of Newark, N.J., who worked in a Ford Motor plant there and of whom two transportation officers said that he had never been stumped by a motor maintenance problem.

Two others are T/4 Lloyd Cephas of 632 E. 28th St., Baltimore, a carburetor specialist, who owned a repair shop in Delaware, and Sgt. Wylie C. Lemonze of Brooklyn, N.Y. 7-28-45

3 Philadelphians in Unit

Among the members of their outfit are T/4 Preston Hill and Cpl. Maynard Duvall, both of Baltimore; T/5 William Penn, Pvt. Umphretus Rayford and Cpl. Samuel Chocrane, all of Philadelphia, and T/5 Lloyd Walker of New York City.

Before working with the motor maintenance section, they served in the early days of the Burma campaign as truck drivers, mechanics and engineers and also pulled guard duty in the jungle area.

Would Like to See Home

Courier Journal Louisville, Ky.

To the Editor of The Courier-Journal.

I would like to bring to your attention the unfairness concerning the point system that Negro soldiers are receiving in the E.T.O. Little consideration was given the Negro in regard to the point system. The critical score was set at 85 and most of us are way below par. The majority of the Negro soldiers in this company have from three to four years' time, mostly in the States as cadre men. When the Army felt the quota of combat troops was complete they broke up most training centers, and we wound up activating a battalion of quartermaster truck companies. 7-26-45

We were shipped overseas late in 1944 and immediately given an assignment of hauling supplies for the United States Seventh Army and remained with it until after V-E Day. The Army has decided that only combat troops will come home for a rest before going to the South Pacific. We don't mind going, but why not let us come home for a few days?

We are service troops but after all, you can't win a war without supplies and this company has been twice cited for efficient service.

Reporter Finds All-Negro, All-White Clubs In Marseilles, France

By GEORGE COLEMAN MOORE

MARSEILLES, France (ANP) — One of the two American Red Cross Clubs in Marseilles is all-white It means precisely that.

The latter is all-Negro, though no one, least of all this correspondent, seems to understand exactly what the designation means.

The "All-Negro" Unit"

Director of Club Canebiere the "all-Negro" staffed club is Mrs. Henrine Banks, nee Henrine Ward of Chicago. Her colored British husband from the West Indies, is assistant director and except for girl attaches from the states all other co-workers are likewise white, French civilians. (Mr. and Mrs. Ward are now on furlough.)

Clubs Canebiere, situated in the center of the famous promenade of the same name, is well appointed, with roof garden, dining hall, gymnasium, library and lounge, barber shop, tailor shop and photograph studio.

Democracy in Action

It is also a laboratory in democracy. Over 50 per cent of its visitors are white Americans, Negro, Mexican, Filipino, Chinese and other colored Americans make up the habitues.

There has never been even a hint of an "incident" or strained relations between whites and Negroes according to Miss Bert Jackson, hostess of Atlanta and New York. Provost Marshal and MP's give the estabishment a clean bill of health.

The "Jim Crow" Unit

At Times Square ARC Club on a a quiet afternoon off La Canebiere there is a dearth of anything but white GIs. We were curious and being around its parlors for three hours one day seeking answers. None was forthcoming from Negroes for not one tan Yank entered the premises, though innumerable passed its open doorway.

When we approached the doughnut counter for service, the French waitresses hesitated for a moment as if in a quandary over procedure. Finally after we refused to retreat with some confusion the allied girls waited upon us. Upon entrance to the dining room suddenlly all eyes were focused on us.

A Verbal Slur

On the second floor in the library our presence created a stir but in a chat with a pretty French girl operator of the record machine the protest was audible.

Still doubting what seemed fairly apparent we sought out Times Square Director Maurice J. Siegal of Los Angeles. Quite suavely but pointedly he referred us to the Club Canebiere "where I'm sure you will find some colored people."

Japanese Propaganda Seen as Effective in Stirring Asiatics Against White Rule

the Afro American Baltimore, MD.

By VINCENT TUBBS

TOKYO (Via Air Mail)—Japanese use of anti-white wartime propaganda laid a maze of "intellectual landmines" that are the basic cause for the Indonesian war for independence and will be causing trouble for nations seeking to establish the pre-war status quo in the Far East for many years, GHQ Counter Intelligence revealed recently.

In a solid admission that the Japanese even today are reaping some fruits of conquest, GHQ has declared that efforts of foreigners to gain the hold they had on Orientals before the war will be a long and hard process.

From other sources it has been learned that Japanese troops as yet not repatriated from Indonesia have been unresistingly allowing Java Nationalists to take their guns and war machines to press their fight against Dutch, British and mercenary Indian troops seeking to put down the independence revolution.

Significantly, Indonesia's war is drawing sympathy from India because of a religious affinity souls. In India some 80,000,000 Moslems are watching very closely the reported British indiscriminate shelling that must inadvertently slay some of the Batavia's 20,000,000 Moslems.

Britain's difficulties in India will almost certainly be aggravated by the participation of United Kingdom troops in the Indonesian conflict. 12-8-45

Also, in still another former Jap sphere of influence, the intellectual drive among Annamites in French Indo-China is traceable to Japanese anti-Occidental propaganda.

Except for the fact that the power of conqueror proved too great for the Japanese mentality and Nippon's troops indulged in rape, looting and torture in conquered countries of the Far East, the "Asia for the Asiatics" slogan they sold at the outset had won them the war.

Tired of Dutch

A Java youth told this correspondent in New Guinea in 1943 that Japanese conquest of the Netherlands East Indies was welcomed because the people were tired of Dutch colonialism.

It was the madmen's conduct of Japanese soldiers that turned Indonesia against Nippon.

However, current release of war weapons to Nationlists by Japanese is generally considered a last effront to Occidentals who will not only have to put down armed uprisings throughout the Far East but must deal with a new intellectual drive based on color nationalism. 12-8-45

White supremacy is undergoing a terrific trial throughout Asia and correspondents are being more philosophical than academic when referring to the Far East as the "white man's burden."

A point that should be of interest to colored Americans is the similarity between the basic facts involved in Indonesia's claim that America is responsible for the present state of affairs because she fails to take a firm stand on tenets of the Atlantic Charter which she alone is in a position to enforce on others of the United Nations. 12-8-45

A TRAGIC STORY

New York Age N.Y., N.Y.

FROM New Delhi, India, came a tragic story last week of an Anglo-Indian girl who wrote the newspaper Statesman that she was committing suicide because the U. S. Army refused to permit the American soldier who fathered her unborn child to marry her. 1-20-45

Signing her name as Marlyn Jones, she said she wondered if the authorities responsible for the ban on marriages between Amrican soldiers and Indian girls "ever looked at the other side of the question, at the evils and disasters which fall alongside forbidden love."

"I loved an American," she said. "He sailed as to bring it forth. Perhaps it is not his fault, but I shall see that I never commit such a sin back to the United States, his 'Shangri-La.' Within a few months I am to have a baby. He wanted to marry me, but his people made the order . . . We were going to be friends. We were going to wait till the end of the war. But when you're in love, many things can't wait, especially an American—he never waits."

The letter said that the soldier went to his superior officer with a request for permission to marry the girl, but was refused despite her condition. She protested that she was as white as the American and had blue eyes.

"Farewell, India and Calcutta," her letter to the paper concluded.

Our comment is entirely unnecessary. The tragic story speaks for itself.

State Department Confirms Courier Expose'

The Pittsburgh Courier Pittsburgh, Pa.

By SIDNEY WALKER, Special Correspondent

12-8-45

Negro soldiers were good enough to fight and die in the Pacific and Europe, but they were not good enough to serve in Panama and the British Islands in the Caribbean. Sunny, steaming Panama is like an orchidaceous flower, beautiful to look at but evil and smelly inside. The Panama Canal, built and supported by American funds, has poured millions of dollars into this tiny country that spreads out only a few miles on either side of the "Big Ditch." From this money the rulers of Panama live well. They have created fortunes and built beautiful homes. Soldiers and sailors passing through the Canal Zone have brought in additional money which they have thrown around in clubs and night spots with abandon. However, beneath all these evidences of good living and gaity is the ugly spectre of race prejudice. The Pittsburgh Courier has already presented a first-hand account of the plight of the citizens of Banana-land who happen to have been born with dark skins. You know from these articles that these citizens, called "silver," are kept away from those who happen to be white and who are called "gold." By whatever name, the flower of jim crow smells equally bad. The tragedy of what happened there transcends the boundaries of that little country. The evil effects of prejudice were not localized. From this little country, that cancerous growth has rapidly spread through the Caribbean. 12-8-45

RULERS DID NOT WANT ISLANDERS 'AROUSED'

For some time this newspaper has known that soldiers with colored complexions were not wanted in Panama during the war, nor were they wanted in the British colonies in the Caribbean. The rulers of millions of black folk didn't want the "simple islanders" aroused by seeing other black men who had been trained as soldiers and who carried guns. These overlords deluded themselves with the pleasant hope that things would be the same after the war if they sheltered their natives from too much contact with the world and particularly from black soldiers.

The American Army adopted a policy of not sending their colored troops to Panama and to British Islands early in the war. As for Panama, this action was requested by that government. The President and his minister in Washington vehemently deny that any such request originated in their country.

In answer to a cable from The Pittsburgh Courier, the president of the Republic of Panama through the Ministry of Foreign Affairs replied as follows:

"The president of the Republic has sent to this ministry the cablegram which you sent him the 24th of November.

"In reply, may I inform you that there does not exist any treaty which denies entrance to the country of Negro soldiers. In this ministry there is the knowledge that in the course of the year 1942, a Negro regiment from the United States was loaned for service in this country and used especially for the establishment of telegram communications in defense sites which the Republic of Panama placed at the disposition of the United States during the battle for the defense of democracy. 12-8-45

Signed:
Mario de Diego, Secretary of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs."

Also the Panamanian embassy in Washington, in reply to a telegram from The Courier, stated as follows:

"In reply to your telegram may I inform you that there does not exist in the Republic of Panama any treaty which excludes Negro soldiers from our country. Panama, sir, is a free country in which there is no racial nor religious discrimination. Colored individuals living in the Republic of Panama enjoy equally the same privileges as Panamanians and other inhabitants of this republic. Information contrary to this declaration from our ambassador are contrary to the existing reality in Panama."

Signed: Embassy of Panama.

The ambassador's denial of racial discrimination belies the facts as reported in the just concluded series of four articles in The Courier on the Republic of Panama and its "gold" and "silver" designations for whites and Negroes.

It was left to our State Department to prove the correctness of The Pittsburgh Courier information. In reply to a telegram, Secretary of State James F. Byrnes stated: 12-8-45

"At the request of the Panamanian government in 1942 and in consideration of its views regarding presence of Negro soldiers in its territory, this Government has endeavored to avoid the detail of Negro contingents to Panama for permanent station. Negro personnel has on occasions been sent there on specific mission. No treaty relating to this matter exists between the United States and Panama."

Signed:
JAMES F. BYRNES,
Secretary of State.

Here is the record, however—and it is not pretty. It has not been made public earlier because to have done so would have imperiled the safety and security of American soldiers and placed our own shores in jeopardy. It begins in Puerto Rica.

FORCED PUERTO RICAN TO ADOPT JIM CROW

In the Puerto Rican National Guard before the war there was little thought of race in the American sense. Certainly, there were few attempts at segregation in the National Guard. There was generally very little on the Island. When bars were drawn, socially, they usually emphasized class rather than racial lines. A man was considered "white" usually if he said he was. About thirty per cent of the population has been officially classified as Negro with the rest being considered white. The "white" group ranges in color from deep brown to white. Reversing our process, one drop of white blood permitted the official registration of blanco or white.

Then came our Army. All of this was changed—and fast. Puerto Rican units were needed to replace continental units in the Caribbean area for service overseas. In the midst of this need and in the rush to get ready to fight, a jarring note entered. Panama and our powerful British ally said "no blacks." 12-8-45

HASTIE EXPOSED LUDICROUS RESULTS

The effect of this ukase was partially indicated by Judge William H. Hastie in his speech accepting the Spingarn award two years ago at Detroit. Selective Service feverishly, though reluctantly, started in classifying inductees as "white" and "colored" at the request of the Army which had decided to accede to the requests that Negroes not be assigned in the Caribbean. There were separate Selective Service calls thereafter for "white" and "colored" registrants. The results were devastating on the little island where no serious thought had previously been given to the question of race. Often times the results were ludicrous, with one brother in a family being classified as "white" and another as "colored." Many families were driven apart by this highly artificial and hitherto foreign process.

The Army pressed on. Islanders remember the supposedly confidential and hush-hush transfer of around 700 men out of the Sixty-fifth Puerto Rican Infantry just before it sailed two years ago. They "wondered" at the time why all who were removed were brown to black in color. They didn't really wonder because most of them knew by then what was happening. Too much else was going on around them to let this knowledge escape them. The color bar was being drawn in public places for the first time and to such an extent that a civil rights law was passed by the legislature for the first time in history. The New York Times on Sunday, September 19, 1943, carried an account of the first unit under this law which had been filed by two "Negro" officers of a Puerto Rican unit after they had been refused service in a restaurant.

COLORED UNIT SENT TO FORT DIX 12-8-45

As always with jim-crow outfits, the problem immediately arose as to where the "Negro" Puerto Rican troops would be stationed. They could not go in the Caribbean because of their color. This was the only place where other Puerto Rican troops had been assigned at that time. A jurist from the Caribbean area caught the dilemma of the Army when he discussed the matter with War Department officials in 1943. This judge was shocked to learn that plans were under way to shift the "colored" Puerto Rican units to the Virgin Islands on the theory that there would be such an affinity of blood that everybody would be happy. Of course it didn't matter to the "brass hat" planners that this was about the worse move that could possibly be made.

The judge pointed out the difference in language, customs, and attitudes that made the two groups, if not openly hostile to each other, at least not over friendly. He shortly convinced the Army that it would be a mistake to station large numbers of Puerto Ricans in the Virgin Islands. He thereby averted what would undoubtedly have been a very embarrassing situation for the Government of the United States.

Eventually one of the "Negro" Puerto Rican units, a quartermaster battalion, wound up at Fort Dix with most of the men in it miserable and bewildered. They were not accepted by white soldiers because they were an obviously segregated organization. The Negro soldiers on the other hand could not jump the barrier of language and regarded the Puerto Ricans as stuck up foreigners. The shock of segregation was real and present to every man of this organization. 12-8-45

U. S. GETS HEADACHE

Despite the protestations of the Panamanian officials, it is an apparent fact that somebody asked that only white troops be sent to that country, and Secretary of State Byrnes has admitted as much. Further, it is equally a fact that only one small Negro unit, a Signal Construction Battalion was in Panama at any time and this unit went there early in the war and was withdrawn after its special assignment was completed. It is an additional fact, and one that certainly cannot be disputed, that what was started in Panama and by our British friends has given the United States a man-size headache in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. 12-8-45

The events that occurred in Panama during the war ominously forecast the shape of things to come.

The United States and Great Britain, in this sorry mess up to their necks, are anxiously awaiting the inevitable explosion in the "peaceful Caribbean." The hard realities of life have been driven home forcefully to natives who are dropping back to pre-war wages, inadequate diets and miserable hovels. The rub now is that these people are different. They made real money for the first time in their lives during the war period. They had enough food—and of a kind—that built muscles and strength. They have been hopelessly infected with the virus of freedom. They will not be satisfied to slip back where they were before the building of the great defense bases started. 12-8-45

It is little wonder that the President of Panama reassures The Pittsburgh Courier of his fine attitude towards Negroes. From all accounts our neighbors in the Caribbean are going to want more than the reassurances. Maybe eventually there won't be any "gold" in Panama.

Navy Overrules Army

123 Tan GIs Denied Passage on Carrier

Pittsburg Courier - Pa. 12-15-45

In answer to a wire from The Pittsburgh Courier, the Navy Secretary replied: "An effort has been made to secure by radio an authoritative account of the incident which occurred at Le Havre when the USS Croatan was loading troops for the return to the United States. We have found, however, that it is impossible to conduct an inquiry in this long range fashion. Accordingly, I am delaying a definite answer to your inquiry until the vessel has completed its present trip and until we have had an opportunity to talk direct to the officers involved. Sincerely yours, James Forrestal."

WASHINGTON, D. C.—One hundred and twenty-three homebound Negro soldiers last week were denied passage from LeHavre on the aircraft carrier SS. Croatan by Capt. Charles D. Griffin, the vessel's commanding officer and Comdr. Francis R. Jones, executive officer.

The Negro soldiers, members of a Quartermaster Truck Company, were listed to sail on the ship, but Captain Griffin refused to allow them to come aboard. He explained his action by insisting that there were no segregation facilities on the tiny flat-top. He further insisted that it was general Navy policy not to mix races. Captain Griffin is said to have been upheld in this action by Commander Jones. These two are said to have vigorously opposed the insistence of Army officers that the men be allowed to travel.

ARMY WINS ONE POINT

Prior to sailing, it was discovered that six Negro soldiers from another unit were on the ship. Captain Griffin is said to have demanded that these men be removed by the Army officers. The Army officers are reported to have refused and informed Captain Griffin that if he wanted the six men removed they would have to be removed by Navy force. These six men remained on the ship and are on their way home.

Negro soldiers denied passage were routed to a slow transport. Aboard this vessel they will arrive here several days later than the SS. Croatan.

NAVY DEPARTMENT SILENT

The Courier immediately called upon Secretary of the Navy James V. Forrestal to make his position clear in the case and advise on what action was to be taken. No answer to The Courier telegram has been received but a spokesman for the Navy said that an answer would be forthcoming as soon as possible.

The Navy Department has released a statement covering the incident as follows:

"Until full facts are ascertained the Navy Department cannot comment on this story. Navy policy, however, is one of no segregation. Ships of the 'Magic Carpet' including carriers have brought home Negro and white officers and Negro and white enlisted men, quartered together and messed together.

REFERS TO MIXED CREWS

"This is in line with the Navy's policy of non-discrimination under which Negroes are currently trained and assigned as other personnel without reference to race. Negro officers and enlisted men are serving aboard Navy ships in mixed crews.

"The story is being investigated and appropriate action will be taken."

Army officers who bowed after vigorous protests to the Navy said they refused to remove six high point colored casuals who were already on board the ship when the Navy raised its protest.

They added that difficulties over redeployment of colored veterans began as soon as naval vessels were pressed into service as troop transports.

Col. Conrad H. Pederson of Hoboken, N. J., director of movement for the port of LeHavre, was quoted as saying he would ask the headquarters of the United States forces in Europe for clarification on what to do if a similar case arose.

NOW IT CAN BE TOLD

Dixie Officers Take Tips From Ancient Egyptians to Work Tan Yanks in Desert

The afro american Baltimore, md.

[EDITOR'S NOTE—This is one of the stories that AFRO War Correspondent Francis Yancey, recently returned from the Far East, couldn't get U.S. Army censors to pass for publication.]

CAIRO, Egypt.—(Air Mail. Delayed by Censor)—"We don't mind being messed over and treated like slaves of convicts sometimes. Being colored, you kind of get used to that sort of thing in this Army when all your officers are white and from below that damned line." 11-17-45

"But it really gripes when you have to take the short end of the stick day after day for months on end.

Only Tan Yanks in Egypt

This familiar speech by a bitter Tan Yank introduced me to the 4247th Composite Service Company, formerly the 208th and 388th Port Companies, the only colored U.S. Army unit left in Egypt.

Practically all of these indentured GI's have been overseas here in the Middle East and North African desert for more than 38 months, working under near plantation conditions of pre-Civil War days. 11-17-45

Here, almost in the shadows of the Pyramids, these Tan Yanks with the 4247th have suffered just about every indignity ind injustice that any human being fighting for the cause of democracy could endure. Another member of the outfit said:

Learned From Ruins

"It seemed that whenever our officers went out to view the ruins of the ancient Egyptians and saw how they used their slaves, they came back to camp and tried the same methods out on us."

Now stationed at Camp Huckstep, these soldiers for the lack of any other work to do were put to work side by side with Italian prisoners of war, whom these Tan Yanks formerly supervised. With them they did camp labor—cleaning streets and camp areas, working garbage details, mess hall cleaning, making beds, cleaning and acting as general flunkies in the rooms of the unattached officers' quarters here. 11-17-45

No Better Than POW's

When one complained about this type of work (all of which was formerly done by Italian POW's) he was told by his commanding officer:

"What makes you n——rs think that you are any better than POW'S. Plenty of work will keep you out of trouble."

The Italian POW's ever alert to propagandize at the slightest offering continually laughed at our Tan Yanks doing the same work as they, making numerous jibes as to colored soldiers value to the U.S. Army.

You Lost the War

Their favorite rib was ,"Looks like you colored boys lost the war." While other white soldiers sit around camp idly passing away the time until they are to be shipped home, some sort of work, no matter how low, is always found for this forgotten colored unit to do.

One of the latest was to use them as relief for white soldiers who, although they had lower point score totals than the colored soldiers were being sent back to the states. 11-17-45

Overcame Propaganda

Overcoming white Southern GI's anti-colored propaganda in the nearby city of Cairo, these Tan Yanks by their behavior in town on leave promptly showed the native populace the truth and were welcomed to most of the amusement sectors.

However, the overwhelming white majority and a non-co-operative Red Cross setup tends to keep them segregated to the slum sectors of the city.

As a result of two near riots and numerous interracial brawls with white American soldiers who protested colored soldiers escorting Egyptian and native girls unit members were restricted to camp area twice, one for a two-month period.

Passes to Cairo and rest camp furloughs were few and far between.

White Wacs 'Protected'

Up until about a year ago, colored soldiers had full use of all of the camp recreational facilities. At that time a detachment of Wacs was attached to the base, and an order was issued barring colored soldiers from all activities where the Wacs would come in contact with them, virtually restricting them from all of the base recreational setups.

The outfit was even lined up and given a verbal briefing by one of its officers informing them that they were not to mingle with or speak to the white Wacs.

Originally Supervised

When these GI's landed at Suez in November of 1942, the unit immediately went to work supervising native laborers unloading Army cargoes for the big push that drove Rommel back from Cairo. 11-17-45

Following the "Big Push," units of the outfit were attached to the Ninth Bomber Command as supply units and took over the work of unloading supplies at the newly won but heavily bombed ports of Benghazi and Tripoli.

However, instead of supervising, the outfit did the unloading and has been doing this and other types of heavy labor since.

Promoted for Bigotry

A company officer, irked by seeing colored soldiers in supervisory roles, was promoted for suggesting that the Army could save money and time by using them as stevedores since they "understood the work better."

Some of the men I met from this outfit were:

Pvt Irvin Murray, Cambridge, Md.; Pvt. Johnny Jackson, Philadelphia, a former boxer; Pvt. Charles Armstead, Norfolk, Va.; Pfc. Edward Crawford, Pfc. Leon Harris, T/Sgt. Sulton Pierson and Pfc. James Rhymes, all of New York City;

Sgt. John Heard, Atlanta; Pfc. Edward MacCrae, Augusta, Ga.; Sgt. Fred Nelson, Danville, Ill.; Sgt. Robert Williams, Galesburg, Ill.; Sgt. Richard Adams, Chicago; Pvt. James Gordon, Columbus, Ohio; S/Sgt. Butler Washington, Chicago; Pfc. Earnest Hall, Dawson, Ga.; 11-17-45

Sgt. Ardell Stone, Fayetteville, Tenn.; Cpl. Frank Thomas, Monroe, La.; Sgt. Thomas Mayo, Houston, Texas; Sgt. Richard Gary, Auburn, Ala.; Pfc. Glover Harris, Birmingham; Cpl. John Eutsey, Louisville, Ala.; T/4 Oscar Harris, Miami.

American Soldiers Carry J.C. Into Geisha Houses

The afro american Baltimore, md.

By PEYTON GRAY
(AFRO Foreign Correspondent)

TOKYO—Close on the heels of the occupation by American troops has come the undemocratic policy of discrimination—and in the Red Light Districts, Japan's present-day geisha houses.

Although interviews with hundreds of troops and personal observations attest to the practice, high Army officials deny knowledge of any such practice and of issuance of any order barring soldiers because of their color.

It was admitted, however, that all such houses were temporarily placed off limits pending an investigation by health authorities, and the usual sterotyped promise was made that reports will be thoroughly investigated.

Whites Slip by MP's

In the Tokyo-Yokohama area, colored troops upon approaching geisha houses are told by white soldiers, assumed to be MP's, "This area is off limits," while white soldiers are seen slipping in side doors. 11-17-45

Seated in the cab of a truck, appearing as just another soldier, I heard a white MP tell my driver, in addition, "It will always be that way for you boys. Your place is across the field in that other area."

He said further that the orders had been passed down the line to him and he did not know who had originally issued them.

First Given Treatments

Continuing, he explained that the 54 women in the "white" houses and the 20 in the "colored" were being given shots and that as soon as these treatments had been completed the houses would be re-opened for business.

White Lieutenant Hits 92nd Officer, Near-Riot Results

The Call Kansas City, Mo

By MAX JOHNSON
War Correspondent in Italy

WITH THE 92ND DIVISION IN ITALY. — On the heels of the announcement Wednesday that the war had ended, racial cooperation which has never been worth a damn in the 92nd division, struck a new low here in its headquarters town of Viareggio when two near wholesale riots broke out on two separate occasions because some white American officers and some Italian men objected to the presence of colored officers and enlisted men at an entertainment spot.

The first of these "war is still on" activities occurred at a night club operated by the division for officers and involved 1st Lt. Ulysses B. Glover, of Baltimore, and Miss Nickie Q. Daniels, member of the cast of "Shuffle Along," Noble Sissle's USO show now playing in this area.

Looked Like White

Lt. Glover, Bronze Star winner for outstanding service with the division's 365th Infantry, entered the night club in Viarreggio with Miss Daniels, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who has red hair and might under some circumstances be mistaken for white. The two of them found themselves in the middle of the sore spot, which has been brewing for some time.

This particular club is the most fashionable of the two that the division operates for officers and for various reasons has had little patronage from colored, while the other, three blocks away receives little patronage from white officers.

Glover, who is brown-skinned, had hardly seated himself and his guest, Miss Daniels, in the former club Wednesday evening when the white first lieutenant in the division believed to be from either Mississippi or Texas accosted Miss Daniels, apparently believing her a white American because of her USO uniform. He asked if she wanted to be "with this N—r officer."

Real Fight Ensues

Following a discouraging remark from Miss Daniels and a demand from Lt. Glover that he apologize, the white lieutenant struck Lt. Glover and suddenly found he had struck the wrong man, for Glover thrashed him soundly until stopped by Col. Robert Ross, white division artillery commander, the ranking officer among those assembled.

After Col. Ross had ordered the fracas ended for the time being and had Lt. Glover by the arm talking to him, the white lieutenant broke away from the restraining officer and friends and struck Glover across the right eyebrow, opening a gash which later required four stitches.

Somebody passed the word outside in the meantime that there were just about half a dozen colored officers in the club and some 300 or more whites. So they had no more than restored some sort of order inside than trucks full of the 92nd enlisted men culled from everywhere drove up and surrounded the place.

Everything On Edge

Just one wrong remark then would have set off fireworks. Just an idea of how well prepared the enlisted men were, though this was an affair involving officers and one that would bring them the severest penalties if court-martialed, might be gathered from the fact that one moving about then on the side streets away from the club could find many parked trucks loaded with grim-looking GIs. 8-24-45

Asking why, would invariably bring the reply "we are reserves just in case our advance details can't handle things."

While the white lieutenant took physical action opposing the presence of colored officers at this division club, several others that evening passed discouraging remarks as has been the practice on former occasions when the divisions colored officers entered the club whether with feminine guests or not. 8-24-45

'We Want Bilbo'

On the previous occasion, a group of such whites improvised a song chant "we want Bilbo." On another occasion a similar bunch of idiots demanded that some used glasses be washed in a special solution, after being emptied by a colored officer.

Lt. Glover has preferred charges of conduct unbecoming an officer and of assault and battery against the white officer in question, while Col. Ross has brought charges of disobedience to a superior officer. If convicted, the officer will face a maximum penalty of a dishonorable discharge plus a jail sentence.

Observers point out that the ironical point in the affair was that this southern white officer suddenly found objecting to the presence of a colored woman with a colored officer and was encouraged by fellow whites who displayed equally bad judgment.

A Second Near-Riot

A second near-riot occurred on the heels of this affair when some Italian men and white soldiers grew offensive at the presence of colored GIs at nearby pleasure spots operated by Italians and patronized mostly by them and enlisted men of the colored and white units in this area.

This brought on an old-fashioned free for all which brought additional trucks of the division enlisted men reserves from everywhere and resulted in wholesale arrests and numerous persons suffering various minor injuries, but none serious, according to what I have been able to gather.

Topping all of this off, was an article appearing in a small newspaper printed in Viareggio, which cast slurs against colored soldiers and sought to discourage Italian young women from associating with them. 8-24-45

Wreck Newspaper Plant

The 92nd GIs had papers circulated around the division less than an hour after they hit the stands and three hours afterwards had completely wrecked the responsible newspaper plant.

At this writing, the situation here is still exceedingly tense and one spark is all that is needed to set afire this race hate situation which has smoldered among many colored and white American units since their entry in service.

Colored officers and men of the 92nd division, however, are well prepared and willing to meet whatever arises—this I assure you I know.

Probe of GI Hangings Is Urged

Journal + Guide 9-1-45

Says News Of Army Executions Was Suppressed

Norfolk, Va.

By Associated Negro Press

LOS ANGELES, Calif.— Demands for a thorough investigation into the hanging of two Negro soldiers at Camp Beale, Marysville, Calif., August 14, were made last week. The soldiers involved were Pvt. Clinton Stevenson, 30, who was found guilty of fatally stabbing a fellow soldier, and Pvt. Herbert W. Reid, 21, who had been convicted of raping a Marysville white girl, according to the report of Brig. Gen. Oscar B. Abbott, post commander.

No details of the executions were disclosed in a release issued by the Beale commander except that the hangings were witnessed only by a group of officers. In reply to a telegram from Leon H. Washington to Gen. Abbott, the following was received:

OFFICER'S REPLY

"In compliance with your telegraphic request of August 19. Follows herewith official release from Camp Beale, concerning execution of Privates Herbert W. Reid and Clinton Stevenson on August 14.

"The execution of two soldiers who had been convicted on capital crimes was announced here by Brigadier General Oscar B. Abbott, post commander. Those executed were Private Clinton Stevenson, who was found guilty of stabbing to death a fellow soldier and Private Herbert W. Reid, 21, convicted of a charge of rape. 9-1-45

General Abbott said both were hanged shortly after 9 a. m. Both had been convicted by Camp Beale court martial several months ago and the executions followed recent confirmation of the death penalties by the war department.

"Both executions were carried out on the Camp Beale reservation in accordance with Army directives. Only official witnesses attended the execution. Chaplains attended the condemned men. Nearest of kin were notified prior to the execution and informed they could claim the bodies. If they are unclaimed they will be interred in a military cemetery set aside for such burials here.

"Carl F. Beuoy, public relations officer, Camp Beale, Calif."

WIFE NOT REACHED

Efforts to contact Pvt. Reid's wife in Philadelphia by telegram, resulted in disclosure that she no longer lived at that address.

"While we are not familiar with all of the facts in the case," said Publisher Leon H. Washington Jr., "we believe that an investigation should be launched immediately, in view of the fact that the matter was kept from public disclosure until after the execution. 9-1-45

"In a similar case August 20, a reprieve through a writ of habeas corpus stayed the execution at U. S. Disciplinary Barracks at Ft. Missoula, Mont., of two military prisoners convicted of criminal attack by general court martial in California last year."

REPRIEVE GRANTED WHITES

U. S. Judge Charles M. Prey issued the writ and ordered Col. A. M. Weyand, commander, to stay the execution which had been scheduled for August 17. Both prisoners were white and were convicted of criminal assault of a woman near McFarlin, Calif., March 20, 1944. 9-1-45

They were given the death penalty April 18. The prisoners were then transferred from Camp Hahn, Calif., to Fort Missoula, and are scheduled to appear before Judge Prey on September 25.

A long distance telephone conversation with Miss Colbert, president of the Sacramento branch NAACP, stated that the matter would be taken up at the board meeting of the association next Tuesday night. Camp Beale is located 70 miles from Sacramento, the closest branch to the camp.

Jim Crow on Okinawa

PM New York, N.Y. 9-25-45

Dear Editor:

I celebrated V-J Day along with the rest of the millions of the U. S. A., because democracy had won in this war. Following is a quotation which might interest your readers, from a letter from a personal friend (Marine), who has fought on Okinawa, Iwo Jima, and other major battles in the Pacific area for the last 18 months. Are we to find out now that we celebrated in vain? 9-25-45

". . . Most of the fellows are to the movies. I would be at the movies, too, but I don't like the setup. One section is for the lily whites and the other is for colored. In others words Jim-Crowed. This is the only theater on the rock that is like this. When I go to a movie I walk two miles to another, rather than go to this discriminated one which is in our camp. I'm sorry to say so, but I hate these people. In spite of all the hell we have gone through in this war, they still make life miserable for us over here—we, who have been right up front with them when the Japs were throwing everything at us except the kitchen stove. There was no segregation then. They would come in our foxholes with a smile. In fact, they would rather be in a foxhole with one of us than with one of their own color. They claim we can see the Japs better at night (smile). We don't even have opportunity to make any ratings. The highest rated colored Marine in my outfit is a buck sergeant, three stripes. All of our staff NCOS and up are white."

White Soldiers Protest Racism Against Tan GIs

The Informer Huston Texas 9-22-45

BERLIN, Germany — (ANP) — Two white GIs, members of America's occupation force here, lodged a complaint against color barriers affecting Negro soldiers in a recent issue of Yank magazine.

T-Sgt. Willie Jones, a Mississippian, backed the right of Negroes to have the democracy they fought for. His letter to Yank, a service magazine read:

"I received a copy of your magazine and read the AMG (Allied Military government) is letting the Germans go back to school. After that I read in Mail Call about the jim crow treatment of colored American soldiers.

"Now I am from Mississippi. Until I came into the army I hated Negroes. It wasn't anything they did to me; I just didn't like them. Since I have been in the ETO I have fought from D-day to VE-day with Negro soldiers. I was wounded twice in one foxhole and a Negro saved my life by using his first-aid kit on me. Then he carried me to where a doctor could work on me. This was under heavy fire. Later he died. He was from New York and he knew I was from the south where he had no freedom.

"Many Negro soldiers have died on the front for American soldiers who thought jim crow was right. So if Germans can have freedom after they have caused so much suffering and destructions, why not let the Negro race have what they fought for? I feel that they should and a lot of southern GIs feel the same way."

Pvt. David Icheson, whose background was not revealed, loudly protested a military order that forbade white troops from associating with Negro soldiers.

"The other night we had a jam session with some colored boys from a quartermaster outfit quartered near us," he wrote. "This morning we were read an order which prohibits us to associate with the colored troops 'except on business.'

9-22-45

"A colored tank outfit fought side by side with this regiment clear to Steyr, Austria, and we were never ordered not to fight alongside of American troops of the colored race, so why should we be forbidden to associate with other American soldiers because of color?"

Bias Keeping Soldier French Bride Stranded

The Afro American 9-22-45

Baltimore, Maryland

MARSEILLE, France (ANP) — Race bias has stranded Pvt. Robert E. Lee and his French bride, the former Marie Rose Jaume of this city, here indefinitely unless American authorities grant them passports to the United States.

Pvt. Lee, a native of Los Angeles, revealed in his appeal to civic organizations how American Army officials tried to prevent him from marrying the French girl. His wife is a college graduate and has served as chief clerk and stenographer in the office of a local medical clinic for six years.

Army Officers Against It

Mrs. Lee disclosed how white American Army officers have tried to discourage French women from marrying colored American soldiers through newspaper stories. She encountered similar propaganda before she married Pvt. Lee she said. She cited one of her experiences under a signed affidavit.

"I was directed to this place by an employee of the Hotel de Ville, of this city," she stated. "We were met by a Mme. Darbon and she explained to me in French just what papers were necessary for us to be married and then she suddenly said to me:

"'The process of getting married is very difficult, especially your case, for any marriages between American blacks and whites are not recognized by the white Americans and if you should marry one, and go to America, you would be very unhappy and your life would be very miserable.' It is for this reason that we went ahead and completed the marriage ourselves."

Pvt. Lee revealed that he was fined $25 for six months and reduced to the grade of private because he married his French sweetheart against the will of white Army officials. The couple will be stranded in France until proper authorities in the United States help them. The American consul granted Mrs. Lee a passport but explained that her application might be delayed for some time.

Negroes Protest 'White Only' Order

Public Opinion, The National Daily Kingston, Jamaica 8-13-45

SOMEWHERE IN GERMANY—The sting of prejudice has been felt again by Negro soldiers in this theatre of operations. Old Man Jim Crow reared his ugly head shortly after the total surrender of the Germans to Allied Forces. Members of the 183rd Engineer Combat Battalion Tan Yanks who played an important part in forcing the Nazis to their knees . . . are on the outside—and not even looking in.

The Tan Engineers felt the sting of prejudice early this month when a recreation centre was set up for white troops in Eupen, Belgium, and head quarters of the 133rd Engineer Combat Group announced that a "recreation centre for coloured personnel is to be opened in the very near future." 9-13-45

TAN YANKS PROTEST

A petition protesting the action was signed by each man in the 183rd Engineer Combat Battalion and addressed to the commanding general of the European Theatre of Operations. It reads in this wise:

The following memorandum from Headquarters 133rd Eng. Combat Group ... U.S. Army is quoted for your information:

11. Recreation:

1. Tricolour Recreation Centre will be opened in Eupen, Belgium. Attendance at the recreation centre is for three (3) days. When allotments are received from the Corps Commander they will be sub-allotted to units by this headquarters.

2. A Tricolour Recreation Centre for coloured personnel is to be opened in the very near future.

3. It is anticipated that sometime this month there will be allocated to this unit a quota of three (3) day passes to Paris and Brussels.

Lieutenant Colonel Broad:

GI's Segregated in French Parade

The Afro American Baltimore, Md. 9-22-45

MARSEILLES, France (ANP) — A contingent of colored soldiers, led by a white officer, was placed "at the very end of an elaborate Armistice Day parade" here, Nov. 12, Jesse O. Thomas, Red Cross official, reported, while colored French soldiers marched integrated "up front" with their white comrades. 12-1-45

Thomas commented: "How often have I watched a parade in the South at home, with whatever colored participants were allowed, tagging along at the end of the parade . . . I wonder what State that American officer was from."

The Red Cross official observed that, "Many things happen at home which we don't like and protest quietly about," but "when those same things happen abroad, the inconsistency, unfairness and the brutality of certain American customs, strike home."

American Race Prejudice Hampers War For Freedom

Norfolk, Va.
Journal and Guide

PARIS—(ANP)—"Unless conditions are changed in the United States, we have lost the war for world-wide freedom." 8-11-45

That opinion was expressed here by Lt. George W. Woody, Danville, Va., in contrasting the friendly French attitude toward Negroes and the ante bellum race prejudice in America.

Lt. Woody, attached to the 490th Port Battalion, said, "I know from personal experience as well as from observation that the French family makes no distinction between colors in inviting United States soldiers into their homes. It is a contrast to the general custom in America which has a different cultural background."

FRATERNIZE IN HARMONY

He, along with other Negro soldiers, reported that throughout France Negro GIs and French girls fraternize in perfect harmony. It is no unusual scene to see a Negro soldier with a petite French girl, or see the pair going through intricate jitterbug steps at village dances.

Maj. Charity Adams, commander of 855 Negro WACs here, said, "I have not osberved any resentment among the WACs and have had no occasion to inquire," she commented, "but I believe the WACs grant that the Negro soldiers have the privilege of doing as they please." 8-11-45

SCORES ATTITUDE

She scored American's attitude on the race issue.

"It is regrettable," she said "that Americans are so race prejudiced that anything you write wil offend many, each in the light o his own prejudices. Yet the stor should be written, as part of th history of the European war, a part of the current news o America's Army still in Europe.

"It is regrettable that American socially accept foreign Negroes but not American Negroes.

"In the Army post office my WACs work with German prisoners of war, men of the people whose Nazi leaders preached their racial excellence. The office relationship is without racial consciousness."

Negro Soldiers, Victims Of Unabated Racial Intolerance At Home, Among U. S. Troops Who Will Back Up Potsdam Decrees In Europe

Journal and Guide

By Harry McAlpin

WASHINGTON, D. C.—President Harry S. Truman has affixed his signature to a document abolishing all racial discrimination. However, the document has no deference to America, but instead refers to Germany during the initial Allied control period. The document is also signed by Marshal Joseph Stalin of Soviet Russia and Prime Minister Clement Attlee of Great Britain.

The document against racial discrimination is part of the report released simultaneously last week in Washington, London and Moscow on the Big Three meeting in Potsdam.

In the political and economic section of the report on the conference, which began on July 17 and ended August 2, a list of ten political principles to govern the treatment of Germany includes one which reads:

"All Nazi laws which provided the basis of the Hitler regime or established discrimination on grounds of race, creed, or political opinion shall be abolished. No such discriminations, whether legal, administrative or otherwise, shall be tolerated." 8-11-45

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Another in the same group of principles declares: "The judicial system will be reorganized in accordance with principles of democracy, of justice under law, and of equal rights for all citizens without distinction of race, nationality or religion."

Meantime, Negro troops who are part of the American Army of occupation still face, daily, humiliating experiences with U. S. Army racial discrimination and intolerance even while in Germany.

Victims of increasing racial bias and discrimination at home, they must continue to constitute the forces which back up the non-discriminatory Potsdam decrees in Germany while getting daily reminders in letters from home that their own President, who signed the decrees, is doing nothing to outlaw segregation and jim crow in America.

Russia seemingly stumped the conference for a time with a proposal concerning territorial trusteeships. (Ed. Note: It is known that Ethiopia has been soliciting the aid and championship of Russia in its claims to certain Italian colonies in Africa.)

On the trusteeship question, the report states: "After exchange of views on this question, it was decided that disposition of any former Italian territories was one to be decided in connection with the preparation of a peace treaty for Italy and that the question of Italian territory would be considered by the September Council of Ministers of Foreign Affairs."

COUNCIL SET UP

The council was set up by the Big Three accord. It will have headquarters in London, and will have representatives of the five principal powers — the United States, the United Kingdom, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republic, China, and France. Its primary purpose is to continue the necessary preparatory work for the peace settlements. Its first task will be the preparation of a peace treaty for Italy.

In the opinion of political observers, this method of handling the peace settlements for Europe eliminates the type of "peace conference" which occurred after the First World War, and shuts the door to any possibility that a Negro will sit at the peace table.

Truman Signs Anti-Discrimination Order, But Wait-It's in Germany

Seaman complains of subtle snubbing in Honolulu

Los Angeles Tribune - Calif.

An article, published in the letters-to-the-editor column of the Honolulu Star-Bulletin and written by S1/c Russell C. Goeins, reached the desk of the TRIBUNE this week by way of a friend of Goeins, 15-year-old Elizabeth Simpkins, student at Dorsey High school here.

8-20-45

Under the title, "A Plea for Fair Race Treatment," Goeins' letter charged that Negro G.I.s in Honolulu are subtly discriminated against.

On their rare liberties in town, Negro seamen are snubbed on trolley cars or in the theatres, Goeins said. "When we sit in a theatre or trolley, the next seat, no matter how crowded the place, is always vacant."

Describing the Negro soldiers as the Unwanted Soldiers, the young seaman said, "Everyone knows who we are and makes it his business to avoid us." He went on:

"We are the ones that sweep the docks, drive the trucks, roll the oil drums, handle the ammunition and all of the other nasty chores. We are the ones who left our homes, our jobs (which were not at all like these) and our families.

"Some of us were tradesmen, professionals and business men, but these are the only jobs for us here. Althrough many qualify as officers there are but few given the opportunity.

"Our officers and rated men are but few, but the second class seamen are like raindrops in a storm. We are the ones you see in town only occasionally because our liberties rate few.

"Then too we have such a miserable time in Honolulu that we don't care to come back again.

"Our recreation is limited and affairs that invite "all hands," mean "all but ours," which happen to be a little sunburned. Our friends are few and they are criticized and ostracized so much that they are afraid of our association. Occasionally one of us gets a break here and there, but for the group, nobody gives a good darn.

"An exception to this story of discrimination is the fine and square treatment we received from Cmdr. Armstrong, of the U. S. Naval Reserve, who always went to bat for fair treatment for Negroes.

"The people on this island have been misinformed and I myself really pity them. Remember that we are Americans and that we too promised 'to pool our blood in a common stream' because our fate and her destiny are one. Somebody please rescue us."

Two Outbreaks in Italy Traced to Dixie Officers

VIAREGGIO, Italy — On the heels of the announcement on Wednesday that the war had ended, racial co-operation, which never has been worth a damn in the 92nd Division, struck a new low here in its headquarters town of Viareggio.

Two near wholesale riots broke out on two separate occasions because some white American officers and some Italian men objected to the presence at entertainment spots of colored officers and enlisted men.

8-25-45

Baltimorean Involved

The first of these "war is still on" activities occurred at a night club operated by the division for officers and involved a Baltimorean, First Lt. Ulysses B. Glover of 620 N. Arlington Ave., and Miss Nickie O. Daniels, a member of the cast of "Shuffle Along," Noble Sissle's USO Show now playing in this area.

Lieutenant Glover, Bronze Star winner for outstanding service with the Division's 366th Infantry Regiment, entered the night club with Miss Daniels, who hails from Brooklyn, N.Y., has red hair and might under some circumstances be mistaken for white.

The two found themselves in the middle of a sore point which has been brewing for some time. This particular club is the more fashionable of two that the division operates for officers, and for various reasons has had little patronage from colored, while the other, three blocks away receives little patronage from white officers.

Mistaken for Mixed Couple

Glover, who is brown skin, had hardly seated himself and his guest, Miss Daniels, in the former club, Wednesday evening, when a white first lieutenant in the division, believed to be from either Mississippi or Texas, accosted Miss Daniels, apparently believing her a white American because of her USO uniform, and asked whether she wanted to be "with this 'n——r' officer."

1ST LT. ULYSSES GLOVER

Following a discouraging remark from Miss Daniels and a demand from Glover that he apologize, this lieutenant struck Glover and suddenly found that he had struck the wrong man, for Glover thrashed him soundly until stopped by Col. Robert Ross, a white division artillery commander and the ranking officer among those assembled.

Persists in Assault

After Colonel Ross had ordered the fracas ended and had Glover by the arm talking to him, the white lieutenant broke away from restraining officer friends and struck Glover across the right eyebrow, opening a gash which later required four stitches.

Somebody passed the word outside, in the mean time, that there were just about a half dozen colored officers in the club and some 300 or more whites, and order barely had been restored when trucks of 92nd Division enlisted men, culled from every where surrounded the place.

GI Reserves Ready

Just one wrong remark ther would have set off the fireworks. An idea of how well prepared the enlisted men were, though this was an affair involving officers and one that would bring them the severest penalities if court-martialed, might be gathered from the fact that one moving about on the side streets away from the club, could find many parked trucks loaded with grim looking GI's.

Asking why would invariably bring the reply, "We are reserves, just in case our advance details can't handle things."

Insults Numerous

While the white lieutenant took physical action opposing the presence of colored officers at this division club, several others that evening passed disparaging remarks, as has been the practice on former occasions when the division's colored officers entered the club, whether with feminine guests or not.

On one previous occasion a group of such jackasses improvised a song chant, "We want Bilbo." On another occasion a similar bunch of idiots demanded that glasses be washed in a special solution after emptied by colored officers.

Charges Filed

Lieutenant Glover has preferred charges of conduct unbecoming an officer and of assault and battery against the white officer in question, while Colonel Ross has brought charges of disobedience of a superior officer.

If convicted, the white officer will face the maximum penalty of dishonorable discharge plus a jail sentence.

Observers point out that the ironical point in the affair was that this Southern white officer suddenly found himself objecting to the presence of a colored woman with a colored officer, and was encouraged by fellow whites who displayed equally bad judgment.

Natives Indoctrinated

The second near riot occurred on the heels of this affair when some Italian men and white soldier grew offensive at the presence of colored GI's at nearby pleasure spots operated by Italians and patronized mostly by them and enlisted men of colored and white units in this area.

This brought on an old-fashioned free-for-all which brought additional trucks of the division's enlisted men as reserves from everywhere, and resulted in wholesale arrests and numerous minor injuries, but none serious, according to what I have been able to gather.

Topping all of this off was an article appearing in a small newspaper printed in Viareggio which cast slurs againt colored soldiers and sought to discourage Italian young women from associating with them.

Whites Show Off Lynch Technique to Londoners

Afro-Baltimore, Md.

LONDON—(By Cable) — Manifesting the same lynching techniques employed in this country white soldiers attacked several colored soldiers near Piccadilly Circus early Saturday morning Aug. 18).

Although the reason for the outbreak was not made known, one report was that the whites were enraged by the sight of two colored soldiers with two white girls; another was that the whites were drunk and indifferent to where they were.

One reliable authority, however, reported that 30 white soldiers, told that two colored soldiers had beaten two white marines and another soldier, decided to take the matter of punishment into their own hands and attack the Tan Yanks.

8-25-45

White Girl Joins Tan Yanks

During the street fighting, several colored GI's who had taken refuge in a service club reportedly were dragged out and beaten. One was nearly "lynched" as the attackers beat him about the head.

A white English girl, it is also said, fought with the colored troops until she realized that they were outnumbered and then she ran to a telephone booth to summon the police.

Although no names or reasons have been given, it is said that over 20 colored soldiers, only two white soldiers and a white woman were arrested after the incident.

Londoners generally have expressed shock upon learning that the white soldiers who helped defeat Hitler, expressing opposition to his theories and practices, are using the same techniques against the colored men who fought with them.

The Truth About the Rankin Smear On Soldiers Working at Northport

Demagogue Finds Chance for Some of His Race-Baiting

Rep. John E. Rankin, who, as head of the House Veterans Committee, has been running interference for the agile buckpassers who head up the Veterans Administration, was guilty of particularly foul play during the recent hearings before his committee on conditions at the Northport, Long Island, hospital for mentally sick vets. The rambunctious demagogue saw an opening for some juicy race-baiting following testimony that 15 soldiers, assigned by the Army to relieve the attendant shortage at Northport, had been court-martialed on charges of alleged brutality toward mental patients there. (Maj. Gen. Thomas A. Terry, head of the Second Service Command, says that only 10 soldiers were court-martialed and only six found guilty.)

Rankin repeatedly stressed the fact that the soldiers involved were Negroes, or "niggers" as he called them. He wound up with a frothy demand that all Negro soldiers now assigned to Veterans Administration hospitals be summarily removed.

Buck Passing

VA officials, with their backs to the wall, defending themselves against the brutality charges, characteristically passed the buck to the Army for "dumping" alleged incompetents and misfits on them. Col. Louis F. Verdel, Southern-born manager of the Northport hospital, disparaged the Negro unit there in testimony before the Rankin Committee. He said he didn't want Negroes manning his wards, and demanded that they be replaced by white soldiers.

Nobody thought of inviting the Rankin-smeared Negro soldiers at Northport to give their version to the Committee as a matter of fair play. The picture the American public got was an ugly one: Negro soldiers were brutally beating up defenseless white veterans who were mentally sick.

During the past week, I've talked to several of the Negro soldiers stationed at the Northport hospital. Their story, together with official evidence and the testimony of Northport psychiatrists who know them, gives the lie to Rankin.

Blame on Accusers

It shows that the real blame for conditions at Northport rests not on the accused but on the accusers—the buckpassing executives of the VA who, to save their own skins, made scapegoats of a group of enlisted men without giving them a chance to defend themselves.

Why was nothing said about the Negro soldier-attendant who was found unconscious on the floor of Ward 6 at Northport, beaten up by disturbed patients with whom he was left alone?

Why was nothing said about another attendant, likewise alone in a ward, who is now in a hospital with three broken ribs after having been beaten up and trampled upon by a homicidal patient?

Why was nothing said about the heroic action of two Negro soldier-attendants in subduing a homicidal patient in Ward 61 who was running amok in a ward brandishing a knife stolen from the dining room and threatening to kill his fellow-patients?

Why was nothing said of the many injuries—including broken ribs and fractured limbs—sustained by Negro soldier-attendants at Northport at the hands of acutely disturbed patients while they were supervising crowded wards alone, with no training in methods of handling violent patients without hurting them?

Why was nothing said about the fact that none of the court-martialed soldiers was charged with malicious unprovoked brutality, and that in each instance, according to Gen. Terry, the brutality charge arose from an emergency situation in which the accused man was trying to subdue a patient attacking either a fellow-patient or the attendant himself?

The True Facts

Striking or kicking a mental patient is indefensible under any circumstances—provided that the attendant is trained. But I insist that you can't throw an untrained person—soldier or civilian—on the ward of a mental hospital, leave him alone with a large group of patients in all stages of emotional disturbance, and expect him to handle critical situations without injury to himself or his wards. And that's what happened at Northport. The skincolor of the attendants involved had nothing to do with the case.

Two years ago, Veterans Administrator Frank T. Hines, faced with a disastrous depletion of doctors and attendants in his hospital system, desperately appealed to the U. S. Army to assign soldiers to man the hospital wards. The Army agreed to assign a maximum of 8,000 enlisted men for duty in VA hospitals, in addition to several hundred medical officers. That agreement has been carried out.

Understaffed

The Army's first directive on this matter specified that only Negro soldiers be assigned to VA hospitals. The first batch of soldiers assigned to the Northport hospital came from Madison Barracks and Pine Camp in upstate New York. A member of this first contingent, still at Northport, told me:

"We weren't told where we were being sent. We weren't asked. We didn't volunteer. We were dismayed when we learned we were assigned to an 'insane asylum.' We naturally resented the fact that only Negro soldiers were told to take this work, which was considered too menial for whites. We didn't know how to handle 'crazy' people. We weren't told how. We got one lecture the first day, that's all. Then we were put on the wards and left on our own."

Eventually, the Negro soldier personnel at Northport was increased to 300, as against only 150 civilian attendants. (Northport, overcrowded with 2800 patients, needed a minimum of 500 attendants before the soldiers arrived to relieve the shortage.)

The Army made no effort to select suitable personnel for hospital assignments. The Veterans Administration never requested proper selection. Men were assigned to the VA mental hospitals willy-nilly, regardless of suitability. At first, the men were simply re-assigned to VA duty regardless of their wishes; in recent months they were asked to volunteer.

One non-commissioned officer, a Negro, sent to Northport from Fort Dix, said:

"The day we arrived, we got an hour's lecture from the chief attendant. It was very dull and most of us fell asleep. We were put on the wards the next day. Nobody told us what to do, except that we were supposed to keep the patients in order and not to mistreat or manhandle them.

Felt Unwelcome

"Nothing was done to try to make us feel welcome. We weren't given any recreational facilities. When we tried to get into the Northport USO, we were politely told that it was for white soldiers only. There was no USO for us Negroes.

"We went into the Army to fight. We never thought we'd be assigned to take care of 'insane' patients. Many of us who wouldn't have feared facing the enemy's bullets were scared to death of having to deal with men off their nut.

"We are supposed to holler for help if a fight breaks out among the patients. But a decent guy doesn't like to hang around waiting for help while two patients are committing mayhem on each other."

Gripes

Here are some of the main gripes of the soldiers assigned to attendant duty at Northport:

¶ They were doing civilian work at Army pay ($50 a month).

¶ They were replacing civilian attendants who had quit to go into well-paying war work at the nearby Grumman aircraft plant and other war-industry jobs. Their jobs as attendants hadn't been regarded as essential; now these same jobs were considered so essential that soldiers had to be assigned to them.

¶ The Negro soldiers felt they were in a hostile atmosphere, unwanted and even resented. Nothing was done to build up their morale.

¶ They feel that they have been pushed around by VA officials.

Despite the general resentment, a number of Negro soldiers became so interested in their jobs that they have decided to follow mental hospital work as a career after their discharge from the Army. Among these is Sgt. Reginald Armstrong, of New York City. Sgt. Armstrong, a man with forethought, obtained recommendations from Lt. Col. H. E. Foster, formerly clinical director of the Northport hospital who recently was named head of the veterans' hospital at Lyons, New Jersey, and Anthony De Groot, chief of the physical therapy department at Northport.

Army's Policy Better

The local Rheims Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars, disapproves the establishment of hospitals for the exclusive use of Negro war veterans staffed by Negro doctors and nurses only.

That stand will strike many as both courageous and sound.

When "Jim Crow" is applied to any situation it only accentuates racial differences.

Segregation is an appeasement, not a frank facing of the prejudice devil as an evil that must be eradicated if human beings are ever to get along amicably.

The world cannot expect to move fast in solving the race problem. Wise men of all colors realize this and are patient.

But there is no good purpose served by compromising with makeshifts and opiates that only agitate and prolong the evil.

General Bradley Rejects Demand Segregation End

12-10-45
Courier-Journal

Washington, Dec. 9 (U.P.)—Negro leaders are demanding that General Omar N. Bradley end segregation in Southern veterans' hospitals but he has refused, it was revealed tonight.

Maj. Gen. Paul R. Hawley, Bradley's acting surgeon general, has cautioned him that the Veterans Administration cannot be made an agency for social change and that it must follow local custom.

Louisville, Ky.

Fanned by the Negro press, the issue has become one of Bradley's big headaches. His position has been that segregation will be eliminated as local custom changes.

Scene at Halloran General Hospital

Staten Island

Editor, Daily Worker:

I am a patient here at Halloran General Hospital sympathetic with the work your paper is carrying out, and I saw something here tonight which should be of interest to anyone working toward better relationships between the Negroes and whites of our country.

About eight o'clock tonight, I came out of the main building here onto the street where I saw a bunch of veterans, some in wheel chairs — some on crutches — grouped informally around a pleasant colored boy who was entertaining them with songs. He had a pretty crumby guitar but nevertheless was giving out with some sweet strains. The fellows loved it and called out more and more requests after he'd finish. For nearly half an hour we heard the old melodies: He was calm and almost professional in his manner and had the ability to make patter out of the small talk that would go between each number. It started getting pretty dark so we decided to go inside and try to scrape up an audience in the wards somewhere. By now there were four or five WACs and about fifteen patients listening. 7-14

One of the Ambulances going down the street even stopped to let the guy inside hear the boy sing. It was really a helluva swell thing to witness, I assure you. Well, we went back into Bldg. 2 and found out from a nurse that there was an officer in the officer's ward that had yellow jaundice and was in isolation; so we decided that wouldn't make a bad place to entertain. So John (the singer) went in and sang some more to this officer and then we broke up and went to our various wards. Daily Worker

But the big thing is that this boy and his songs and pleasant, cheerful manner really had a terrific effect on these fellas. I talked with one on the way back to my ward and he told me that all his life he had hated Negroes until he had gone overseas, at which time he fought in one of the few mixed race divisions. Here he saw heroism from men regardless of their color and it sunk in and he hasn't lost that feeling of guilt he had had for hating them so all his life. 7-14-45

He told me that hearing this colored lad here tonight brought back that feeling to him again and he wanted to know what the hell caused it. I told him to spread his experiences with the other men and not to tolerate the hate talk that you hear occasionally around here—to combat it with facts of his own personal experience. So we went our ways but I was so moved by the effect of it all that I decided it would make good reading for the public, so here it is.

Oppose Hospital For Negro Vets

Opposition to the creation of special Negro hospitals for veterans staffed by Negro doctors and nurses was expressed by the Rheims Post No. 554, Veterans of Foreign Wars at its meeting Thursday night.

The action followed a movement launched here on the day previous by the executive committee, National Medical Association, which calls for Negro hospitals to be established by the Veterans' Administration. The National Medical Association is made up of the country's leading Negro physicians.

In adopting a resolution opposing the Negro hospitals, the Rheims Post promised to support any move to have colored doctors and nurses included in all veterans' hospitals.

Medical Men Urge Plans

The National Medical Association executive board in their Wednesday afternoon session held at the Arctic Avenue Branch YMCA appointed a committee to contact the head of the Veterans' Administration for the purpose of suggesting plans that will help to improve the veterans' facilities. The board recommended the establishing of facilities wherever it is necessary with a larger participation of Negro doctors and nurses in care of Negro veterans.

Dr. A. C. Terrence, chairman of the public relations, stated that the executive board had completed plans for a nationwide program through the press and radio to aid in the improvement of health.

The board recommended that Dr. Charles R. Drew, eminent physician and surgeon of the Freedman Hospital in Washington, D. C., be given the Distinguished Service Award of the National Medical Association because of his outstanding work in blood plasma.

Those present were Drs. E. I. Robinson, president of the National Medical Association of Los Angeles, California; A. C. Terrence, Public Relations chairman, of Opolusa, La.; J. D. Wilson, Detroit, Mich.; Leo S. Butler, Baton Rouge, La.; W. C. Atkinson, Coatesville, Pa.; W. G. Alexander, past president of National Medical Association, Orange, N. J.; L. H. B. Negro Veterans' Hospital Opposed

Rheims Post Against Proposal

Opposition to the creation of special Negro hospitals for veterans staffed by Negro doctors and nurses was expressed by the Rheims Post No. 554, Veterans of Foreign Wars at its meeting Thursday night.

The action followed a movement launched here on the day previous by the executive committee, National Medical Association, which calls for Negro hospitals to be established by the Veterans' Administration. The National Medical Association is made up of the country's leading Negro physicians.

In adopting a resolution opposing the Negro hospitals, the Rheims Post promised to support any move to have colored doctors and nurses included in all veterans' hospitals.

A copy of the resolution will be sent to the Veterans' Administration and to members of Congress. Other posts of the VFW and the American Legion will be asked to take similar action. The matter will be discussed at the Tri-County Council, VFW, at a meeting in the All Wars Memorial Home on Sept. 4.

"I have been in the veterans' hospitals several times and I have always received 100 per cent treatment," said Harold C. Parsons, commander of Rheims Post. "We do not want segregated hospitals. We all fought together in two wars and we want to be hospitalized the same way."

Parsons said the post would work with other veterans' organizations in seeking the creation of a veterans' hospital in or near Somers Point.

A Soldier on Senator Bilbo

SIR: I have just read of Senator Bilbo's call for segregation in his mealy-mouthed warning of racial strife in Detroit.

I wish the Senator could see this ward. Here are five Negroes, two Filipinos, a Japanese Filipino, a Nisei Japanese, a full-blooded Hawaiian, and about 17 native Americans, some of various foreign parentages and some of them from the Deep South. I should like the Senator to see how all of those more able help their less able buddies—those who can walk pushing those in wheel chairs, those on crutches hobbling to the PX on errands for their at present bed-ridden buddies, and everyone helping everyone else to dress, to light cigarettes, to write letters—in complete harmony, with no regard for color or nationality. I should like the Senator to come to this ward, so that we could all get out of bed and throw him out—together.

Hospital For Negro Veterans Assured In Jefferson County

Birmingham Reporter
Birmingham, Ala.

A veterans hospital for Negroes, equipped with 300 beds, is to be erected in Jefferson County near Birmingham. 8-25-45

Carl Wiegand, chairman of a local veterans hospital committee, who announced this yesterday, said his committee had been informed that a 664-bed veterans hospital for white veterans, which is also to be erected in Jefferson County, had been confused with the Negro hospital. This accounted for an earlier report from Washington this week that an approved hospital was to be equipped with 300 beds. It was thought here that this referred to the white hospital.

The Negro hospital will be an annex to one at Tuskegee and will probably be of a specialized type rather than a general medical hospital, Wiegand said he understood. The local unit would serve Negro veterans from the northern part of the state. Wiegand said that 15,000 Negro veterans alone come from Jefferson County.

Site for the Negro hospital will be selected by Mr. Wiegand's committee, other members of which are Roy Johnson and Hugh Starnes. This committee will also select the site for the white hospital. Shades Mountain has been favored as the site for this latter hospital.

All Negro Hospital Meets Opposition

The Black Dispatch
Oklahoma City, Okla.

WASHINGTON. — (A N P) — The proposed establishment of an all-Negro veterans' hospital in Mississippi, was opposed this week by representatives of 22 national labor, church, fraternal and professional organizations who attacked the proposal as "a direct insult to the Negroes of America."

Meeting at the offices of the National Non-Partisan Council on Public Affairs of the Alpha Kappa Alpha soroity, Thursday night, members of the group voiced their objection to the establishment of any veterans' hospital on a jim-crow basis. 8-24-45

They were considerably more bitter, however, in their denunciation of the proposal for the establishment of a veterans' hospital in a state which has race hatred and intolerance the law of the land.

Lashing out at "previous commitments," which, according to Veterans' Administration officials, "virtually assure construction of the hospital at Mound Bayou or Greenwood, Miss.," members of the delegation sent wires to President Truman; Gen. Bradley, Veterans administration head; to members of the federal board of hospitalization; to Congressman L. Dawson; Robert L. Hannegan, and to Harold D. South, director of the bureau of the budget. 8-24-45

VA Moves Worker to Quiet Protest

WASHINGTON — (AFRO Bureau)—How many veterans are needed in any hospital before a recreation program is necessary?

That is the question which revolves around the transfer of Miss Ann Hartwell from the Veterans' Hospital at Murfreesboro, Tenn., to Tuskegee by the Administration this week.

In answer to the query as to why Miss Hartwell was transferred after the AFRO had learned that whites had objected to her presence, it was reported that there were not enough colored patients at Murfreesboro to justify her employment.

Records show that there are 212 colored patients occupying one ward at the hospital. The present enrollment at Tuskegee is nearly 2,000. 12-13-45

Vets' Administration Head Deaf To Appeal for Negro Assistants

Washington Tribune — D.C.

2-10-45

By HARRY McALPIN

Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, head of the Veterans' Administration, does not see the need of a Negro assistant administrator, he told this correspondent in an exclusive interview here last week.

He is aware of the desire and the demand for such a position coming from Negro groups.

He has been visited by several delegations and representatives of various organizations, one of which sent him a lengthy memorandum on December 16, signed by Mrs. Norma E. Boyd, national chairman of the National Non-Partisan Council on Public Affairs of the AKA; James C. Arnold of the YMCA; E. Franlin Frazier, professor of sociology at Howard University; Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, president of the National Council of Negro Women; Rev. William H. Jernagin, director of the Fraternal Council of Negro Churches, and Mrs. Thomasinao Johnson, legislative representative of the Non-Partisan Council.

But the General believes the Veterans' Administration is administered fairly and squarely for all Americans, including Negroes.

2-10-45

Wants no Outsiders

He was particularly opposed to taking someone from the outside for such a job even if he did create an assistant administrator's job for a Negro. Such an outside person would not know the Veterans' Administration's workings and policies, he said.

If he made such a move, he would be inclined to consider persons already in the organization—such as Dr. Eugene Dibble, head of the Tuskegee Veterans' Facility, on whom he relies now for certain advice concerning Negroes, or Ernest J. Davis, a reviewer in the adjudication division of the Administration in Washington, who recently has been detailed to other duties of a confidential nature, according to the Public Relations office.

In the same interview, however, the General said he used to get some "very excellent" advice from the late Dr. Robert Russell Moton, former president of Tuskegee Institute, who he recognized as a close follower of Booker T. Washington.

None Above Clerk

Despite the General's apparent pride in the fact that there are several thousand Negro employees connected with the Veterans' Administration throughout the country, the representatives of several national organizations listed above who wrote him on December 16, point out in the memorandum that some of 5,000 employees of the agency in Washington, with the exception of a half dozen or so, no Negroes are above the position of clerk, and that not more than six or seven Negro employees receive salaries of more than $2,000 a year.

References to the Tuskegee Veterans' Facility as a Jim Crow hospital irk General Hines. He looks on the Tuskegee hospital as a great achievement. He had planned, and so told a Congressional Committee, to set up one or two more all-Negro facilities, perhaps in Mississippi or Alabama.

Wants No Outsider

But he showed, during our interview that he is reconsidering this proposal. So much criticism of the separate facility has been received by him, resenting the Government-sponsored segregation, that he thinks plans may be worked out for including the expected increase in the number of Negro hospital cases in the general expansion program.

He says there is a great deal of misunderstanding of the Administration's policies and practices in the handling of Negro patients outside of Tuskegee. There are Negro patients in other veteran hospitals, where the institutions are divided into wards according to the maladies or surgical needs of the patients.

When there are a sufficient number of Negroes with the same malady to make up a separate ward, they find, the general states, that the Negroes prefer to be together. That is why Negro wards are maintained in some of the institutions, he says.

2-10-45

Millions Affected

The Veterans' Administration is spread out to touch the lives of about 15,000,000 veterans, and through General Hines as Administrator of Rehabilitation and Re-employment, the lives also of about 25,000,000 war workers who will have to be relocated during the reconversion period. These figures will include about 1,000,000 Negro veterans and 1½ to 2 million Negro war workers.

Despite these facts, however, and despite a resolution sent him by several national organizations—declaring that due to the present war, approximately one-third of the total population of the United States, including approximately 4 million colored citizens are or will become potential beneficiaries of the laws administred by the Veterans' Administration, which will result in a tremendous expansion of that agency and its activities—General Hines prefers to operate without benefit of counsel on the many peculiar problems affecting Negroes arising from the discriminatory practices prevalent in America.

Hines Ignores Negro Protests

P.M. N.Y. 2-6-45

2-6-45

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—Veterans Administrator Frank T. Hines has served notice that he plans to continue action on proposals to build a second all-Negro hospital in the South despite protests from Negro leaders.

In a letter to the Washington Office of the NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People) Hines made clear that the decision would not be altered.

2-6-45

Leslie S. Perry, Administrative Assistant of the NAACP, had protested "the extension of Jim Crowism" by the establishment of another "solid colored hospital." Perry and other Negro leaders feel the present all-Negro veterans hospital at Tuskegee, Ala., was a mistake and they regard the proposal to build another Jim Crow hospital as a fresh slap at Negroes.

"I cannot admit," Hines wrote Perry "that the establishment and administration of our hospital at Tuskegee for the treatment of Negro patients and fully staffed by Negro personnel, has in any way been a reflection upon the Negro race, or that it does not successfully meet a definite need for Negro facilities in the southeastern area."

2-6-45

Then plainly indicating that the Negro protests will go unheeded, Hines said:

"This same need obtains elsewhere in the South.

"In my opinion these institutions manned by Negro personnel represent a splendid contribution by your race in our program of service to veterans.

"Naturally, these colored institutions serve only the veterans in the general areas of their location, and in other areas the hospitalization needs of the Negro veterans are met by the hospital facilities of the Veterans Administration in these areas."

Hines pointed out that the 6,690 Negro veterans now undergoing hospitalization by the VA (Veterans Administration) are being cared for in 73 different facilities of the VA (out of 94 in the U. S. A.), and in 31 of these . . . the Negro patient population exceeds 50."

Perry had also complained to Hines of the refusal of the VA to upgrade Negro employes to appoint Negroes from outside the VA to policy-making positions. He charged that of 57 policy-making jobs in the VA, not one is held by a Negro, despite the fact that 10 per cent of the men in the armed forces are Negroes.

2-6-45

Hines replied that promotions within the VA are solely on the basis of "efficiency, qualifications, experience and training" and for that reason "there does not appear to be any justification for identifying Negroes on our rolls as a group separate and apart from other employes." He added that the VA's promotion policy considers all employes "in terms of their contribution to the organization."

The VA administrator said that of the organization's 55,343 employes, some 5900 are Negroes, "which is slightly more than 10 per cent of our strength."

"Increasingly," Hines added, "I am confident you will find our employment of Negroes in the higher grades, and more recently there have been appointed three Negro junior investigators in grade CAF-9 to carry out certain assignments for our investigation division." One of the three represented a promotion of a Negro employe within the VA ranks.

2-6-45

A CAF-9 job in the Government pays $3200 a year.

Hines Ignores Protests Against

Washington Tribune — D.C. 2-10-45

Despite protests from the NAACP and Negro leaders against the plan to construct separate hospital facilities for Negroes, Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, Veterans' Administrator, this week, made it clear that he still plans to build a second all-Negro hospital in Dixie and that his decision will not be altered.

The administrator clarified his position in a letter to Leslie Perry, administrative assistant of the Washington NAACP, who had previously, in a letter, expressed "irrevocable opposition to the extension of jim crowism by the Veterans' Administration, whether under the guise of so-called 'solid colored hospital' or otherwise."

"We again must urge," said

Mr. Perry, "that Negro employees be integrated in the Veterans' Administration at their proper skills and levels, and that Negro patients be hospitalized in your facilities on the basis of medical need and not of color."

New Slap in Face

2-10-45

He said further that Negro leaders regard the all-Negro veterans' hospital at Tuskegee is a mistake and plans to build another is a new slap in the face of the Negro.

"I cannot admit," General Hines answered, "that the establishment and administration of our hospital at Tuskegee for the treatment of Negro patients and fully staffed by Negro personnel, has in any way been a reflection upon the Negro race, or that it does not successfully meet a definite need for Negro facilities in the southeastern area."

Indications that the protests will be ignored are in the following language:

"This same need obtains elsewhere in the South. In my opinion these institutions manned by Negro personnel represent a splendid contribution by your race in our program of service to veterans," continued the administrator.

"Naturally, these colored institutions serve only the veterans in the general areas of their location, and in other areas the hospitalization needs of the Negro veterans are met by the hospital facilities of the Veterans' Administration in these areas."

None Help Make Policies

Mr Perry also had complained that the refusal of the Administration to upgrade Negro employees or to appoint Negroes from outside the Administration to policy-making positions. He charged that of 57 policy-making jobs in the VA, not one is held by a Negro, despite the fact that 10 per cent of the men in the armed forces are Negroes.

General Hines countered that promotions within the VA are solely on the basis of efficiency, qualifications, experience, and training and for that reason there does not appear to be any justification for identifying Negroes on our rolls as a group separate and apart from other employees.

3-10-45

5,900 Negroes Hired

The administrator said that of the VA's 55,343 employees, some 5,900 are Negroes, "which is slightly more than 10 per cent of our strength."

"Increasingly," continued the general, "I am confident you will find our employment of Negroes in the higher grades, and more recently there have been appointed three Negro junior investigators in grade CAF-9 (a Government job paying $3,200 a year) to carry out certain assignments for our investigation division."

HEADS HOSPITAL UNIT!

New York Age N.Y., N.Y.

Word from the War Department states that Capt. Robert S. Wilkinson, has been selected to head a new hospital unit in the Burma-India Theatre of Operations. Capt. Wilkinson, a prominent Harlem physician, contributed many outstanding articles to the surgical journals which are now quoted in Military Surgical Manuals.

He was formerly associated with Harlem Valley State Hospital as visiting surgeon, and consulting surgeon for Harlem Hospital. Capt. Wilkinson is a member of Phi Beta Kappa fraternity at Dartmouth College before entering Harvard Medical College.

Freedmen's Psychiatrist Lashes Vet. Administration's Policies

Washington Tribune 2-3-45

Washington, D.C.

Dr. Charles Prudhomme, head of neuro-physiology, acknowledged in many quarters as one of America's leading Negro psychiatrists, told the Capital Press Club, Wednesday, that the Veterans' Administration "needed a house cleaning from Hines and Griffith on down."

Dr. Prudhomme told newsgatherers of his experiences as a member of the Veterans' Hospital staff at Tuskegee Institute. He related a series of experiences that led him to resign in disgust.

He was especially bitter at the way Negroes were shuttled out of the Army on psycho-neurosis counts, in spite of the findings of he, and other Negro psychiatrists.

2-3-45

According to the doctor, Negro soldiers who become disgruntled at Army treatment are called "psycho-neurotics" by Army doctors and are sent to a Veterans' Hospital for further observation.

There, many are not found to have anything mentally wrong by Negro doctors, but a Veterans' board of review made up of whites, refuses to change the Army diagnosis.

Usually the Army diagnosis contains a report that the person under observation was suffering from a mental illness before induction in the Army, hence are not qualified to receive the benefits of an honorably discharged soldier.

Dr. Prudhomme told the press club that he was among 16 of the staff of 37 doctors on the Tuskegee Veterans' Hospital staff that left the institution during 1943. Thirteen of the 16 resigned their commissions, while three others were inducted into the Army as non-coms.

In his startling address he lashed out at the inept leadership of several persons connected with the Veterans' set up at Tuskegee.

Calif. Hospital Staffed By 25 Negro Nurses

Philadelphia Pa. Tribune 3-17-45

CAMP BEALE, Cal.—(ANP)—Headed by Capt. Della H. Raney, one of only three colored nurses holding this rank, 25 colored nurses now compose the entire nursing staff of the station hospital at Camp Beale.

Capt. Raney's staff of one 1st lieutenant and 23 second lieutenants from army states of the south and east was transferred here from Ft. Huachuca, Ariz. 3-17-45

Although colored are stationed at Camp Beale with the army service forces personnel replacement depot, work at the station hospital is with all races. Only a small percentage of the hospital patients are colored.

Capt. Raney has the distinction of being the first colored nurse to report for duty in World War II. When she joined the service she was serving as operating room superviser at the Lincoln hospital, Durham, N. C., from which she had graduated.

Among the nurses here are: 2nd Lts. Gladys S .Brown, Camden, N J.; Laverne F. Martin, Princess Anne, Md.; Louise K. Jenkins, York, Pa.; MARY J. MONDERE, Philadelphia; Thelma N. Reynolds, Atlantic City.

Save Bousfield's Job In Huachuca Shakeup

Chicago Defender Chicago, Ill.

4-7-45

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON — Despite the coming shakeup at Fort Huachuca that will involve the shutdown of the all-Negro Station Hospital No. 1, Col. Midian O. Bousfield of Chicago, medical officer in charge, is assured of a high place in the army in the future.

The Defender learned this week that Bousfield will be retained in the army medical corps with the privilege of practically writing his own ticket although a number of other leading Negro doctors are being pressured out of the corps. 4-7-45

Army Surgeon General Norman Kirk, it is understood, wants Colonel Bousfield to develop further the army's program with respect to Negro medical personnel within the service. In this connection, it is considered likely that the new Bousfield assignment will be at the national level with over-all supervision of young Negro medical officers.

The War Department is taking extraordinary precautions in expediting the separation forms of those medics leaving the corps in order to avoid charges that the men are being involuntarily ousted. There are rumblings, however, that some extraneous factor not presently descernable may have helped the men who have decided to quit to make up their minds on the double quick.

Col. E. B. Maynard, white, will remain at Huachuca as post surgeon taking over the remnants of the station one hospital person el who stay, utilizing them on an integrated basis. 4-7-45

Embryoic steps have already been taken at the post with respect to integration and with satisfactory results, it is learned. According to information, integration has not met too much opposition from the office of the surgeon general.

The station hospital, scheduled for abolition following the removal of the 372nd Division which is due any day now, was formerly staffed with approximately 65 of the best Negro medics in the country.

PROVIDES SEPARATE, EQUAL HOSPITALS

The Atlanta Daily World Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—The Senate last Thursday passed the Hill-Burton hospital survey and construction bill carrying an amendment sponsored by the Alpha Kappa Alpha Non-Partisan Council and providing for separate-but-equal facilities for colored people in Jim Crow States. 12-16-45

Under the terms of the bill, six months after the legislation becomes effective, the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service with the approval of the Federal Hospital Council and the Federal Security Administration shall prescribe regulations on certain specified matters.

WITHOUT BIAS

One of these regulations would require that the state construction plan provide for adequate hospital facilities for the people of the state, without discrimination on account or race, creed or color.

Regulations also may require that an applicant for an individual hospital construction project give assurance to the State that it will serve all persons residing in the territorial area of the applicant.

But the joker in the three AKA Non-Partisan Council sponsored amendments is the proviso that it require the regulations do require a policy and the House plan provide for adequate hospital of no discrimination, they must, facilities for the people of the make an exception where separate hospital facilities are provided for separate population groups, if the construction plan makes provision on the basis of equitable facilities and services of the medical profession said the Hill-Barton bill will help perpetuate race segregation, with colored people standing to lose.

The bill would provide an outlay of an estimated $700,000,000 for the construction of hospitals and health centers.

In plain language, this provision, if finally approved by the President, will authorize by Federal law race segregation in States where Jim Crow practices prevail.

Colored leaders of the medical profession said the Hill-Barton bill will help perpetuate race segregation, with colored people standing to lose.

Stabbing Exposes Jim Crow Practices Against Negro Vets

The Informer Houston Texas 2-17-45

CHICAGO — (ANP) — Jimcrow hangs over the heads of American Negro war veterans at Hines hospital here.

That discovery was made last week when Robert Triplett, 23-year-old World War II veteran, stabbed and seriously wounded William T. Strader, a white patient from Danville, Va., during an argument over the use of Jimcrow toilet facilities. Federal authorities are holding Triplett pending the outcome of Strader's condition.

According to investigation from the manager down, Negro veterans have been compelled to live under a Jimcrow policy at Hines hospital that differentiated on such hospital facilities as toilets and dressing rooms and is reported to have demanded of them Dixie deference for doctors, nurses and other white hospital help.

Beside asking Negro veterans, men who have served in the Spanish-American war, the Mexican border conflict, World War I and II, to say "yes, sir" and "no, sir," racial identity signs are posted around in wash rooms and dressing rooms "in the best Dixie fashion," veteran commented.

"I have seen with my own eyes white patients use the colored toilet," remarked another disabled here. The Negro patients aren't trying to start trouble. All they want is fair treatment."

Young veterans are especially resentful of Jimcrowism. One explained he had "spent six months in army hospitals and hospital beats from Italy to Africa, back to the United States where white and colored patients were together and shared everything alike. 2-17-45

"I am not alone when I say it can be done," he said.

Admits Discrimination

Charles G. Beck, hospital manager, admits racial discrimination and segregation but argues that "it is just a custom that seems to be followed in all the veterans' hospitals."

Beck said that Negro and white patients do eat in the same dining rooms and use the same recreational facilities. Negro patients are separated into rooms and wards according to their illness, he revealed.

Triplett's trouble started when he and a fellow patient, Fred D. Mitchell, broke the "unwritten anti-Negro law" Sunday by using a "white" toilet when the one labeled "colored" was in use. Mitchell explained that it was a case of necessity.

"Ours was crowded and there was nothing else to do," Mitchell said. "We were ordered out by an attendant who became very nasty about it." 2-17-45

Hasty preparations are being made by indignant civic leaders to probe deeper into the race virus that has been exposed by Triplett's stabbing. An investigation into the altercation is being launched by the Cook County Bar Association and the NAACP has already announced its intention of defending the young soldier when he comes to trial.

Negroes Moved From Mess Hall On Nazi 'Order'

By L. J. PERRY

TAMPA, Fla. — The German prisoners of war have started a system of working hand in glove with the Bourbon South in giving the Negro soldiers another type of slap in the face.

On Monday, Jan. 22, a group of German prisoners who are working as kitchen police and cooks' assistants at the base hospital of MacDill Field, near Tampa, Fla., refused to work if Negro military patients were continued permission to eat in the same hospital mess hall with the white patients, even though these Negro patients ate on separate sides of the mess hall. 2-9-45

Into Separate Halls

Strange enough, the hospital officials, who stated they were acting on orders from Washington, immediately began a system of feeding the colored military and civilian personnel in a separate mess hall entirely. As if by compromise, however, the colored personnel were then given white cooks in their segregated mess hall. 2-9-45

As this goes to press, both colored military patients and civilian employes state that the practice is still in effect. It has long been a policy here at this post where the Negro strength now approximates that of the white section, to hospitalize white and colored military personnel in the same wards even though they are filled with the white patients from one end toward the middle and the colored from the other end toward the middle. This same general policy was practiced in the hospital mess hall with colored military and civilian personnel eating on one side with the whites on the other. 2-9-45

Humiliation and Disgust

Feeling among the colored soldiers, who come largely under the command of the Engineer Aviation Unit Training Center, runs from humiliation to utter disgust, with a consequent lowering of morale. Yet, these soldiers are fearful of making any representations of an official nature for fear of courting round-about retaliation. Protests to minor officials of the Engineer Aviation Unit Training Center have met with the usual sympathetic response but with no action to implement it.

No official announcement has been forthcoming from either Col. Harold W. Kohl, who commands the base hospital, or from Capt. George R. Gresham who commands the German prisoner-of-war camp at this post. It appears that this latest form of Nazi-South segregation ties in with recent clamorings on the part of white Tampans against the excellent food given German prisoners in contrast to the rations Tampans are getting.

'We Play Your Game'

Just as this controversy over differences in weekly menus between Tampans and German prisoners was at its height, along came the German prisoner protest against the mess hall arrangements in the base hospital, which seemingly could have been an overture to white Tampans to "Lay off. Go easy on us. We play your game."

Just what action, if any, Col. Reynolds J. Burt intends to take is not known. Col. Burt commands the Engineer Aviation Training Center, but allows his administrative director, Lt. Col. Robert F. Hoffman, to handle such ticklish matters. It long has been known that Hoffman's attitude toward Negro troops under his command has been a little short of tolerant. His chief stock in trade has usually been the appeasment of entrenched southern interests, even though it meant the further inconvenience to his Negro personnel.

Vets Jim-Crowed At Hines Hospital; Man Stabbed In Row Over Rules

Chicago Defender Ill. 2-17-45

BY ROBERT LUCAS

Like a festering sore the Jim Crow hospital burst open this week, Crow situation at Hines Veteran's spewing out the rotten pus of race hate and discrimination.

A fight between a Negro patient and a white patient Sunday morning brought into the open the rank discrimination practiced against not only Negro veterans but Negro staff members as well.

Robert Triplett, 23-year-old World War II veteran, stabbed and seriously wounded William T. Strader, a white patient from Danville, Virginia, during an argument over the use of Jim Crow toliet facilities.

Jim Crow Policy Exposed

Behind Sunday's outbreak and another less serious one since then, lies the whole Veterans' Administration's policy of Jim Crow for colored patients. 2-17-45

Investigation by the Chicago Defender, prompted by inquiries of scores of individuals, brought to light evidence of the special treatment for Negroes who have seen action in the Spanish-American war, the Mexican border conflict, and World Wars I and II.

Negro patients must use the Jim Crow toilets assigned to them. In many cases a bathroom with accommodations for two men must serve 18 men in a ward.

Separate Dressing Rooms

Negro employees of the hospital must use separate dressing rooms and toilets, often going down three floors to reach the "colored" washrooms on the first floor.

In at least one instance, Negro patients have been ordered to say "Yes, sir" and "No, sir" to doctors, although they are no longer in the army and not required to address officers in this manner.

Negro patients at one time recently were directed to their Jim Crow toilets by painted signs. One patient admitted that he had torn one of them down.

The Negro patients, especially the younger ones, veterans of World War II, are becoming more and more resentful. While they deplore such violent outbreaks as occurred Sunday, they expressed the fear that similar incidents are likely to occur.

"I have seen with my own eyes the white patients use the colored toilet," said a former patient. "The Negro patients aren't trying to start trouble. All they want is fair treatment." 2-17-45

Triplett and a fellow patient, Fred D. Mitchell, World War I vet, broke this "unwritten law" Sunday when they used a "white" toilet.

"It was a case of necessity," said Mitchell. "Ours was crowded and there was nothing else to do. We were ordered out by an attendant who became very nasty about it."

Later in the day Triplett became involved in an argument with another attendant when he overheard him make slurring remarks about Negroes, eye witnesses reported. Strader came charging out of his room and attacked Triplett without warning, they said. During the fight that ensued Strader was stabbed. 2-17-45

Coleman Moore said that when he was recently assigned to a bed in Ward B-360 he was given explicit directions to use the toilet assigned to colored men. He asked why this was necessary, and after some evasiveness was told that orders had come from "Washington."

Triplett, who was to have been arraigned Tuesday, is being held by Federal authorities.

Tuskegee Hospital To Teach Blind Vets

Birmingham Ala. News

WASHINGTON, Dec. 15 — The Tuskegee Veterans Hospital is one of nine centers in the country where blind instructors will teach blinded soldiers to live the sightless life. 12-16-45

In World War II, 1,200 soldiers were blinded. Of these, 680 have been discharged and returned to civilian life, and 520 are still in veteran's centers.

The Veterans Administration plans instruction which will make the men self-reliant. They will learn Braille, use of Braille typewriters and watches, use of talking books. 12-16-45

They will learn perception of objects and sounds, recognition of people, how to get about without aid, personal hygiene, pencil writing, use of hand tools, use of hands and games.

First instructor appointed to begin introducing the plan is George Hackenburg, for 17 years a field representative of the Pennsylvania State Council for the Blind, and more recently a dictaphone operator for the Veterans Administration.

The special instruction centers will be opened at the hospitals in the Bronx and Tuskegee, and in seven VA homes.

Asks Probe Of Veterans' Administration

Informer Houston, Tex 2-24-45

By HARRY McALPIN

WASHINGTON, D. C. —(NNPA)—An investigation of the Veterans' Administration because of its flagrant discrimination against Negro citizens was urged upon the House Military Affairs committee during hearings last week on the Nurse Draft bill by Mrs. Thomasina Johnson, executive secretary of the National Non-Partisan Council of the Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority. 2-24-45

Mrs. Jonhson pointed out that Negro doctors are not allowed to serve in any of the 93 hospitals under the jurisdiction of the VA except at Tuskegee. Negro nurses, she said, are allowed to nurse in only 4 — Tuskegee, Otean, N. C., Waco, Tex., and Kecougtan, Va.

"We have been unalterably opposed to the erection of any other all-Negro hospitals for Negroes for many reasons," she declared. "Yet, General Hines (administrator of the Veterans' Administration) in recent testimony says that he plans to build other all-Negro hospitals.

"We were interested to note from Col. Ijam's testimony (assistant administrator of (VA) that Gen. Hines had had some conferences on this matter with some groups. We are one of the groups and the conference was most unsatisfactory," she told the committee. 2-24-45

"General Hines speaks in glowing terms of Tuskegee and its excellence, but fails to say that this is the one hospital in 93 where Negro physicians may serve, to say nothing of segregating persons who have offered their very lives for the four freedoms, equality and for their country."

She told the Military Affairs committee that it was interesting to note, too that Col. Ijams stated that very few of the Cadet Nurses who finish their training in the Veterans' hospitals remain there to work. She pointed out that Tuskegee is the only Veterans' Administration hospital where Negro cadet nurses are allowed to finish training.

"In spite of a shortage of 1,000 nurses in the Veterans' Administration hospitals," she said, "no Negro nurse need apply except for Tuskegee, Oteen, Waco and Kecoughtan." 2-24-45

2,000 Negro Nurses Available

She criticized the testimony of Col. Ijams that the Veterans had tried every possible source to get nurses. "There are 2,000 Negro nurses available— but he has not tried them," she stated.

"Until such time as the Veterans' Administration is investigated, as would certainly seem to be needed on many scores if recent investigations by one of the leading dailies are to any degree true, and until necessary corrections are made—it will prove futile and serve no worthwhile purpose to add compulsion to the already existing conditions."

Veterans Hospitals To Benefit By Funds

Birmingham News 2-6-45 Ala.

Veterans Hospitals at Tuscaloosa and Tuskegee would benefit from a $179,339,886 program for the nation recommended to Congress Monday by the House appropriations committee.

The Associated Press reported that the program includes addition of 300 beds to veteran hospital facilities in Alabama and Mississippi for treatment of general medical and surgical Negro patients and 200 beds for treatment of Negro tuberculosis patients. Cost of the proposal was estimated at $3,049,830.

An expenditure of $25,000 was recommended to supplement veterans hospital facilities at Tuscaloosa and a recommendation was made for $30,000 expenditure at Tuskegee for erection of an administration building. 2-6-45

The entire nation wide program as outlined before Congress Monday, covers hospital needs of the Veterans Administration up to and including June 30, 1947. It would make available 2,700 additional beds for neuropsychiatric cases, 3,400 for tuberculosis cases and 8,000 for general medical and surgical cases. A total of 14,100 beds is included in the program.

The bill also provides for construction of new services, major alterations, expansions and replacement of buildings, and utilities which have become obsolete.

The Veterans' Hospitals

Birmingham News

Not long ago a congressional committee made an investigation of the veterans' hospitals of this country. The member of the committee assigned to visit such institutions in Alabama and adjacent states gave them a clean bill of health in his report, which was naturally somewhat limited in scope and thoroughness. Recently the veterans' organizations of the nation have undertaken investigations of their own and, at least as far as the three Alabama veterans' hospitals are concerned, found that conditions were not entirely as good as they should be.

To the credit of these Alabama hospitals—at Tuscaloosa, Montgomery and Tuskegee—it should be said that most of the complaints made against them involved primarily shortage of help and space. The American Legion report stated that there was need for 1,791 more beds in these three institutions, and that there also is an urgent need for more doctors and nurses. 6-13-45

Also see 56-0 (Veterans)

The Tuscaloosa hospital, the Legion report said, is good on staff and patient discipline, food quality, quantity and preparation, and excellent on patient care and sanitation. Overcrowding and understaffing there, however, are said to have led to unpleasant conditions for some of the patients.

The hospital at Tuskegee was reported as needing additional physicians and 500 more beds. It was, however, rated good on staff and patient discipline, building and grounds, quality and quantity of food and treatment and care of patients. The need for recreational facilities for patients there also was stressed in the report.

The attitude of the staff at the Montgomery hospital toward patients was sharply criticized by the Legion report, which said: "The staff should be advised that they were employed and assigned to give service to patients and be told that their present attitude of thinking that the patients are there for the staff's convenience be corrected." Conditions at this hospital also were criticized by the report of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, which made an examination coincidental with that of the Legion. Patient morale is poor at the Montgomery hospital, the V. F. W. report said, adding that recreational facilities are inadequate and the hospital badly overcrowded.

Summing up, it appears from these reports that the hospitals at Tuscaloosa and Tuskegee are about as well conducted as possible with the limited staffs and facilities at present available. These are complaints heard from practically every hospital in these days of few civilian doctors and nurses. The complaints against the Montgomery hospital, however, are of a nature which calls for prompt remedial measures.

T. O. Krasbel, Legion rehabilitation director, points out that the present veterans' hospital system was designed to serve a potential load of 5,000,000 veterans. There is now a possibility that this figure may be increased to 18,000,000, he says, in urging an immediate expansion of the system "to assure veterans of this war the best that the country can provide in the way of medical and hospital treatment."

With the expected release of many doctors, as well as nurses, from the armed services, the prospect for relieving at least some of the understaffing at veterans' hospitals should become brighter. There will still remain, of course, the problem of overcrowding, and this, it would appear, can be solved satisfactorily only when materials and equipment become available. It is good to know, however, that in the main the chief complaints against Alabama veterans' hospitals lie within these two fields.

Dr. Dibble Denies Sanction of J.C.

WASHINGTON. (NNPA) — In a telegram to NNPA, col Eugene H. Dibble Jr., head of the all colored Tuskegee Veterans' Hospital, declared that Rep. John S. Dr. Dibble was referring to a state ment by Gibson in Congress, concurred in by Rep. John E. Rankin (Dem., Miss.), that colored patients must be segregated in veterans' hospitals, that white nurses should not attend them, and that every State should have an all-colored hospital. 6-16-45

Repudiates Views

Gibson said Col. Dibble agreed with him "in toto" on the business of segregation, and in his belief that colored people do not have to be mixed with whites to be able to "improve themselves."

Rankin, in the same debate, said anybody was crazy who "do not reflect my personal views."

Rankin Blames War Dept. For Trouble in Hospitals

Mississippian Manages to Inject Race Issue

By CHARLES A. MICHIE
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 15.—Rep. John E. Rankin (D., Miss.), chairman of the House Veterans Committee, has charged that "trouble" in veterans' hospitals — mistreatment and abuse of patients—is the fault of the War Dept.

Rankin criticized the Dept. for sending Negro soldiers into VA Hospitals as attendants under inefficient commissioned officers. His charge was typically Rankin:

"It is a disgrace that the War Dept. should send nigger troops into our Veterans Administration Hospitals to be mixed up with white nurses and with officers who cannot enforce discipline," he said.

As yesterday's hearings concluded, Joseph McQueen, general counsel for the VA, informed Rankin that Brooklyn's district attorney and Tom C. Clark, new Attorney General, had asked that all reports of abuse at the Northport, L. I., Hospital of the VA be submitted.

The Brooklyn district attorney is deciding whether seven civilian attendants should be cited for abuse of patients along with 13 soldiers. The soldiers already have been court-martialled at Governor's Island and sentenced to from two to six months.

Harry Stansfield, chief of the investigating division of the VA, admitted the difficulties of obtaining evidence from attendants at neuropsychiatric hospitals of the VA. He said that attendants had a tacit understanding not to testify against each other and added that nurses and attendants were afraid of Negro troops assigned to the facilities.

"They're afraid of the nigger soldiers?" asked Rankin.

"Yes, sir," replied Stansfield.

For a time it looked as if the "very worst" information investigators had to give the committee would not be made available to the public. Col. Louis Verdel, manager of the Northport, L. I., facility, refused to comment on the efficiency of Army doctors assigned to his hospital.

However, the VA investigator was allowed to give his testimony in public—interrupted at suitable intervals by Chairman Rankin, who wanted everybody to understand that the soldiers who were court-martialled for "abuse" at Northport were Negroes. He asked the same questions—six times.

Yes, they were Negroes, was the answer.

Rep. Bernard Kearney (R., N. Y.) declared that the transfer of Army personnel to the VA was "absolutely wrong." The men ought to be screened, he said, and maybe only volunteers should be accepted.

Rankin indicated that War Dept. representatives might be called to explain why Negroes and inefficient commissioned officers were assigned to VA hospitals.

Stansfield testified that the "undercover men" at the Northport hospital were not FBI men. They were investigators of New York State, who make periodic surveys of all mental hospitals. He said the so-called "abuses" were committed on white patients by Negro soldier attendants—limited service men assigned by the Army to the VA

Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, right, wishes success to Gen. Omar N. Bradley, who succeeds him as Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. In the center is Rep. John E. Rankin (D., Miss.), chairman of the House Committee on Veterans' Legislation, in whose office the generals met.

Jim-Crow Vet Hospitals Fought by NMA Members

Afro American Baltimore Md.

OPELOUSAS, La. — (ANP) — Colored doctors throughout the country want no jim-crow veteran hospitals, an overwhelming majority of letters from members of the National Medical Association reveal. 11-30-45

Moreover, agreeing that the problem of integration is not easily settled in the South, most of the doctors recommend sending as few as possible to that section of the country.

Pointing out that veterans' institutions throughout the country already show evidences of overcrowding, Dr. John P. Turner of Philadelphia adds that the situation for colored service personnel will be worse where segregation and jim crow are practiced.

Holding the same belief is Dr. John A. Kenny of New Jersey, who says:

"North of the Mason-Dixon line, there is no question but that there should be one facility for the soldiers of both races under the care of mixed staffs and attendants."

In his letter, Dr. Paul B. Cornely of the Howard University Medical School points out that the existing pattern of the Veterans' Administration is poor because it prevents the integration of colored professional workers in the various facilities. 10-20-45

His argument is also that of Dr. L. M. Hill of Atlanta, who says that hospital staffs should be selected "merely on the basis of training and merit of the doctors, regardless of race or color."

Cites Advantages of J.C. Setup

On the other hand, Dr. T. M. Smith of Chicago, past NMA president, advocates separate hospital facilities so that more colored persons "may have the opportunity for developing in their respective specialties."

The NMA has appointed at veterans' committee, headed by Dr L. H. B. Foote of Tallahassee Fla., to meet with Gen. Omar Bradley, Veterans' Administrator, to present the body views, Dr. A. C. Torrence, NMA public advisor, announced recently.

Difficulties Are Shown At Tuscaloosa, Montgomery And Tuskegee; Physicians Needed; Legion Unit Cites Red Tape

BY MARGUERITE JOHNSTON
News Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 12—Surveying the nation's 97 veteran hospitals as to their readiness to take on a future clientele of 18,000,000 men and women, the American Legion pointed to the present weaknesses in Alabama's three veterans' hospitals—at Tuscaloosa, Montgomery and Tuskegee.

All three are dangerously short on help, are cramped in the need of 1,791 more beds. The Tuskegee Hospital, in addition, is suffering for the lack of physicians which it could already put to use.

This report was made before a House investigating committee in Washington Tuesday morning.

6-12-45

THE SURVEY SHOWS THAT ON AVERAGE, veterans hospitals in this state give to former members of the armed forces hospital treatment and care of about the same caliber as that given civilians in city, county and state public hospitals. But narrowing the focus, the Legion survey spotted the flaws in the picture: Red tape, overcrowding and understaffing.

Tuscaloosa's neuropsychiatric Veterans Hospital was graded good on staff and patient discipline, food quality, quantity and preparation, and excellent on patient care and sanitation.

But to achieve this, nurses are "worked to death." Help is needed badly. The hospital should be doubled in capacity by the addition of 791 new beds to its present 791. Mental patients the survey indicated, are not properly separated from other patients.

GENERAL MEDICAL PATIENTS AT TUSCALOOSA complained to the Legion surveyors that they were kept in the same type of locked wards as mental patients. And because of crowded conditions, the Legion reported, "one veteran with a bullet in his hip was not operated upon or transferred to another hospital until authorities received a letter from the man's congressman."

The Montgomery Veterans Hospital was sharply rapped for the attitude of its staff toward the patients. "The staff should be advised," the report suggested, "that they were employed and assigned to give service to patients and be told that their present attitude of thinking that the patiens are there for the staff's convenience be corrected."

But here again the Legion investigators report "nurses worked to death" and an immediate need of more help. The 329-bed hospital should be expanded by 500 beds. Despite staff discipline, treatment and care of the patients pronounced "excellent," the hospital was reported overcrowded and clogged by red tape. No recreation facilities or programs are maintained, the canteen is rated poor and food quantity poor.

TUSKEGEE'S VETERANS HOSPITAL shows more basic lacks. The neuropsychiatric hospital needs additional physicians and 500 beds added to the 1,934 already in use. Thus handicapped, the hospital was yet rated good on staff and patient discipline, building and grounds quality and quantity of food, treatment and care of the patients. There are no recreational facilities for the giant mental hospital.

The conclusion at Tuskegee was "bett r medical personnel needed; 500 beds needed; overcrowded."

Decentralization of the nation's veterans hospital system to eliminate red tape and a 10-point administrative program was proposed to the House committee Tuesday.

6-12-45

"The present veterans hospital system was designed to serve a potential load of 5,000,000 veterans. It now faces a clientele that may well number 18,000,000, T. O. Kraabel, Legion rehabilitation director, pointed out.

"The enterprise should be revitalized and expanded immediately to assure veterans of this war the best that the country can provide in the way of medical and hospital treatment.

"Hospital treatment and care should be at the same high level as that in the famous Mayo Clinic and Johns Hopkins Hospital."

or some other form of entertainment is given.

4. Canteen service is most unsatisfactory.

6-12-45

5. Excessive delays in receiving wards. Two patients complained they were kept in these wards 16 days.

6. Hospital overcrowded. Authorized capacity is 269 patients, but hospital had 281 patients on day of inspection.

MR. REYNOLDS RECOMMENDED THAT at Montgomery, construction should be started right away for 500 additional beds. He also recommended that at Tuskegee interne doctors should be employed to lighten the load of the older doctors.

"In my opinion, the facility at Tuskegee is exceptionally well managed. The doctors, nurses and attendants all seem to take the greatest personal interest in each individual case," Mr. Reynolds declared.

6-12-45

Both Tuscaloosa and Tuskegee facilities are in need of two doctors each, Mr. Reynolds reported.

Soldier Attendants Blamed In Beatings at Northport

New York, N.Y. Times

By SAMUEL A. TOWER

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, June 14—Incompetent and dissatisfied soldier personnel were assigned by the Army to take care of veteran patients at the Neuropsychiatric Hospital at Northport, N. Y., Col. Louis Verdel, manager of the institution, told the House Veterans Committee today. He said this was mainly responsible for mistreatment of the patients.

More than half of the more than 300 soldiers assigned as attendants were unqualified and would have been rejected by him as "unfit" for the work, he said. Of the five Army doctors at the hospital, he reported, only three were on duty, with one absentee "suffering from an ear condition" and the other away following an Army "diagnosis of neurosis."

The colonel explained to the committee, investigating charges of violence to patients of Northport, that a contributing factor was his inability to take disciplinary action against enlisted personnel because of a system of divided authority whereby soldier-attendants were in charge of a company commander.

"Authority Over Civilians"

In the cases of civilian attendants guilty of abuse he had the authority immediately to suspend them and recommend their dismissal to the General Offices of the Veterans Administration in Washington, he testified.

Previous testimony before the committee has revealed that thirteen Negro soldiers have been court-martialed for mistreatment of patients and that seven white civilian attendants have been dismissed on similar charges.

Speaking of the courts-martial, Colonel Verdel stated he regarded the use of Negro soldiers in mental hospitals as inadvisable and that he had asked the Second Service Command for the substitution of white troops, but said that his request had been met only in part.

He stated that there was widespread discontent among both white and Negro soldiers over assignment to hospital duty and that this dissatisfaction "had a bad effect on the patients and other attendants."

Nevertheless, he suggested that "cases of civilian attendants and soldiers striking patients were acts of impulse."

6-15-45

"I do not believe we had any affairs of sadism," he said.

Both Departments Criticized

Colonel Verdel's testimony, made according to his words, under the handicap of being both an Army officer and an employe of the Veterans Administration, brought criticism of both departments from members of the commitee.

"I resent the War Department's attitude toward these hospitals," said Chairman John E. Rankin, Democrat from Mississippi.

Representative Bernard W. Kearney, Republican of New York, accused the War Department of "not playing the game with veterans," adding that he felt also that there was "too much red tape between the central office of the Veterans Administration and its regional facilities."

The committee then went into closed session to hear Colonel Verdel's report on the treatment of specific mental patients and the administration of the hospital, which followed in general his open testimony, according to committee members.

When the meeting was reopened, Harry Stansfield, an investigator for the Veterans Administration, testified on cases of mistreatment uncovered by undercover operators for the agency. Both he and Colonel Verdel contended that both soldiers and attendants followed a code of not "peaching" on one another, making substantiation of charges difficult.

Witness Tells of Beatings

Nevertheless, the agency's operators had witnesesd or received incontestable evidence of cases where patients were beaten and kicked by both military and civilian attendants, and sometimes choked with towels, not only in efforts to restrain patients but as a result of irritation.

Joseph MacQueen, counsel for the committee, announced that data on the seven civilian attendants had been requested by the new Attorney General, Tom Clark, and by the United States Attorney in the Second District of New York, and were being turned over immediately.

At the conclusion of the day's session, Chairman Rankin disclosed that the committee intended to summon representatives of the War Department to appear before it and explain the Army's policy on veterans' hospitals.

"It seems to me that these cases involved negligence on the part of the War Department rather than the Veterans Administration," he said. "We are going to try to find out just why they assign such men there."

McDonald Making an Inquiry

Miles F. McDonald, United States Attorney for Brooklyn and Long Island, said yesterday that his office was making an inquiry into the charges of mistreatment of patients at the Veterans Hospital at Northport, L. I. T. Vincont Quinn, Assistant United States Attorney in charge of the criminal division, is in charge of the investigation.

Mr. McDonald said that the investigation was the result of a request from Edward E. Odom, solicitor of the Veterans Administration in Washington. The Brooklyn prosecutor said he expected material would be presented to the Federal grand jury next week.

13 Negro GI Attendants At N. Y. Vet Hospital Jailed; 7 Whites Freed

Chicago Defender

Chicago, Ill.

By VENICE T. SPRAGGS
(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON—Thirteen Negro soldier-attendants stationed at the Neuropsychiatric hospital, Northport, N. Y., were courtmartialed and sentenced to from two to six months at Governor's Island for alleged abuse of patients interned in the hospital, Col. Louis Verdel revealed here.

No action has been taken against seven white civilian attendants dismissed at the same time.

Col. Verdel made this disclosure in testimony before the House Veterans committee this week, although the soldiers were sentenced last winter.

He further testified that half or more of the 300 soldiers assigned to the hospital as attendants are not suited to their jobs.

Many of them resent the assignment, the colonel said, and some are "very definitely neurotic and not suited to be working in a hospital of this type." 6-23-45

Rankin Usual Self

Chairman John Rankin (D. Miss.) immediately pounced upon the War Department for "sending nigger troops in a Veterans Administration hospital to be mixed up with white nurses and with officers who cannot enforce discipline." He termed the situation a "disgrace," and indicated that the War Department would be called into account to explain why Negroes and inefficient commissioned officers were assigned to VA hospitals, adding, "I bitterly resent the War Department attitude toward these veterans' hospitals."

Whether the Negro soldiers were actually at fault or victims of administrative prejudice was not clearly established by Col. Verdel's testimony. Although an army officer, Col. Verdel is an employe of the Veterans Administration, serving as manager of the Newport unit.

This much was established. The colonel had asked the Second Service Command to substitute white troops for Negroes at the hospital inasmuch as he regarded the use of Negro soldiers in mental hospitals as inadvisable. He told the committee his request had been met only in part. 6-23-45

Discontent Widespread

Revealing that there was widespread discontent among both white and Negro soldiers over assignment to hospital duty, Col. Verdel said the dissatisfaction factor "had a bad effect on the patients and other attendants."

Harry Stansfield, an investigator for the Veterans Administration, testified on cases of mistreatment which he said were uncovered by undercover operators for the agency.

He said he had experienced difficulty in obtaining evidence from attendants at neuropsychiatric hospitals of the VA. This he alluded was due to a tacit understanding not to testify against each other, and added that nurses and attendants were afraid of Negro troops assigned to the facilities.

Here Rankin asked, "They're afraid of the nigger soldiers?"

Stansfield obligingly replied, "Yes, sir."

Whites' Brutality Ignored

Rankin left no stone unturned to establish before the committee the fact that the 13 court-martialed soldiers were Negroes. But neither he nor Stansfield made any reference to the sensational charges of brutality brought against white attendants at the Lyons, New Jersey, charges substantiated in a large measure by Veterans Administrator Hines himself.

Stansfield said the "abuses" at the Northport facility were committed on white patients by Negro soldier-attendants-limited service men assigned by the army to the VA. Sixty of the soldiers were sightless in one eye, he testified.

These "abuses," he said, consisted of striking a patient with a knotted towel; punches on the jaw; blows on the chest, and some fractured ribs.

Joseph MacQueen, counsel for the committee, announced that data on the seven civilian attendants had been requested by the new attorney general, Tom C. Clark and by the United States attorney in the Second District of New York, and were being turned over immediately. 6-23-45

Legion Wants Jim-Crow

Spokesmen for both the VFW and the American Legion were making reports on their investigations of veterans facilities throughout the country, investigations which in each instance gave a clean bill of health to the installation at Tuskegee.

The facility at North Little Rock, Ark., according to the Legion report, presents something of a problem. "Contemplated plan of having an army detail of Negro attendants to serve white patients will prove highly unsatisfactory and should be resisted by the American Legion," the report said. A spokesman for the organization explained that "friction" between the groups is the reason for this proposal. His own view is that segregation is best for the races.

The report on Muskogee related the incident where a group of colored patients seated themselves at the counter and the canteen and demanded to be served. After this occurred, the manager called a meeting of the representatives of all parties concerned, and the matter was temporarily resolved. The report then went on:

"I am fearful of the consequences of colored and white veterans being associated together in the same hospital and not being allowed the same privileges. The colored veterans are allowed to come to the library and take books and magazines, but unlike the white veterans they must leave and are not permitted to read or lounge in the library. 6-23-45

"This facility hospitalizes the veterans not only from Oklahoma but from Texas and Arkansas. As the hospital becomes crowded, I think there will be greater possibility of friction between colored and white veterans. We of the American Legion are greatly concerned over this problem and recommend to the manager of the Veterans' administration that these patients be separated at once."

Consensus Of Opinion Secured By Association

Atlanta Daily World

Atlanta Physician Joins In Opinion Against Division

Atlanta, Ga.

OPELOUSAS, La.— (ANP) —Negro doctors throughout the country want no jim crow veteran hospitals.

A consensus of opinion on the question of separate hospitals for white and Negro veterans has been gathered thru the National Medical association by letters from many of its outstanding members.

Dr. L. M. Hill, an Atlanta, Ga. physician, suggested "hospitals for veterans that have no segregation as regards to race or color-only disease such as tuberculosis and neurological diseases." He wants hospital staffs that are not segregated, but selected "merely on the basis of training and merit of the doctors, regardless of race or color."

CORNELY COMMENTS

Dr. Paul B. Cornely, head of the department of bacteriology, Preventive medicine and public health, Howard university, Washington, said: 10-12-45

"I do no believe that the pattern which has been established by the Veterans' administration of having segregated hospital facilities for Negro veterans is desirable or good neither is the practice which prevents Negro physicians and other professional people from being able to be integrated in the various veterans facilities."

On the other hand, Dr. T. M. Smith, Chicago, past NMA president, believes "we should accept added separate hospital facilities for their (veterans) care in which more and more of our men may have the opportunity for developing in their respective specialities."

But Dr. E. B. Perry of Texas, said "my first approach would be to idealistically hope that in the future we would not have segregated institution. This is not possible in the advanced age.

"At present there is quite a deal of discussion about the shortcomings of many of our VA hospitals. Naturally, we should wonder if the whole VA set-up does not need an infusion of newer and younger blood."

STAFF INTEGRATION

He added that "we should as staff officers be integrated into non-segregated hospitals, especially in the more visionary sections of the country...." 10-12-45

"North of the Mason-Dixon line, there is no question but that there should be one facility for the soldiers of both races under the care of mixed staffs and attendants," said Dr. John A. Kenny of New Jersey. "For the south, the question is not so easily settled. These men need and want tranquility and comfort. They should have, not only expert medical care, but the mental attitude of those administering it will have a great deal to do with their physical reactions."

Dr. Homer V. Wilburn, medical director of Provident hospital, Chicago, said that "I feel that the existing facilities would be inadequate to meet the additional demands of the returning veterans. However, it is my opinion that civilian hospitals will have to and should participate in the service by expansion of their facilities and service units."

OTHER AREAS

Returning veterans should be hospitalized in the north, east or west rather than in the south, said Dr. Jno P. Turner of Pennsylvania "As far as possible, Negro veterans should not be sent to southern hospitals," he advised. He said that "reports from institutions throughout the country caring for veterans show a sad overcrowding. Naturally, where segregation and jim crow are part of the set up our boys and girls will fare worse in these areas"

The National Medical association has appointed a Veterans committee, headed by Dr. L. H. B. Foote of Tallahassee, Fla., to meet with Gen. Omar Bradley, head of the Veterans administration, to present the views of the NMA revealed Dr. A. C. Torrence, NMA public director.

Oppose All-Negro Vets Hospital In Mississippi

The Louisiana Weekly New Orleans, La.

Washington, Nov. 7.—The proposed establishment of an all-Negro veterans' hospital in Mississippi was opposed this week by representatives of 22 national labor, church, fraternal and professional organizations who attacked the proposal as a "direct insult to the Negroes of America."

Meeting at the offices of the National Non-Partisan Council on Public Affairs of the Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority in this city on Thursday night, members of the group voiced their objection to the establishment of any veterans' hospital on a jim-crow basis. 11-10-45

They were considerably more bitter, however, in their denunciation of the proposal for the establishment of a veterans' hospital in a state which has sent to Washington "such men as Bilbo, Eastland and Rankin, who would make race hatred and intolerance the law of the land." 11-10-45

Lashing out at "previous commitments," which, according to Veterans' Administration officials, virtually assure construction of the hospital at Mound Bayou or Greenwood, Miss., members of the delegation sent Wires to President Truman, General Bradley, Veterans Administration head; to members of the Federal Board of Hospitalization; to Congressman William L. Dawson; the Hon. Robert L. Hannegan, and to Harold D. Smith, director of the Bureau of the Budget.

Soldier Tells Bias In Army Hospital

Chicago Defender

Jim Crow appears to be more prevalent in the armed forces as time marches on. With conditions as grave as they are in Europe, one would think intelligent people as cultured as Americans would have a different outlook on life and not stoop so low.

I am a shut-in at a general hospital here in Georgia and have been here for more than two months. I have had quite a few experiences and never have I seen Jim Crow so largely displayed as around here. I have visited the Red Cross Recreation building here with friends and from observation I have found the workers quite interested in seeing that the white patients were participating in the games, while on the other hand, the colored patients were left holding their hands unless they found games of interest themselves.

Last week a spring dance, a formal affair, was held for white patients only. They don't usually ask the colored to give such affairs, but the fact that their presence is not desired is known. I have begun to wonder if our donations are being used on the front lines in this same manner. 5-19-45

Last Sunday I noticed having gone to the mess hall, for the first time, that white waitresses made their own Jim Crow signs although they are not hung on the walls. The one single line was formed of white and colored and we marched into the mess hall for the noon meal. The trays of the cripples as usual were carried or placed on tables for the patients. Here they made the separations by having all whites together and all colored together. Many times during the meal I wondered if these small minded American women stopped to realize what a slander that was since in active combat many of these same soldiers were happy to eat and drink with us.

The most striking incident was last Easter Sunday, during the morning worship in the chapel. There were only two colored patients present and the rest were whites. At the beginning of the Communion Service, the chaplain opened with the invitation for all to come forward and I was in the number going to the front. The whites knelt around the altar and as long as they possibly could they sought places to kneel rather than near me. Finally there was enough space beside me for three other people. How small they must be to carry such racial prejudices to the altar, partaking of the Lord's Supper. America is fighting two wars, one over there and another against her black sons and daughters in America.—T-Sgt. Edgar T. Stricknev, Thomasville, Ga.

2nd All-Colored Hospital Unit Overseas Ministers to Men of All Races in Burma

Afro-American

6-30-45

By FRANK E. BOLDEN
NNPA War Correspondent

ALONG THE STILWELL ROAD, India-Burma—(Delayed)—High on the side of a 4,500-foot peak of the dense, vast green jungle of the Patkai Mountain Range at Tagap in upper Assam Province nestles the only hospital in Asia entirely staffed by colored personnel.

One of the two such colored units operating overseas today, it administers to the various needs of its international patients, who include colored and white Americans, Britains, Chinese, Indians and Burmese.

Over 500 were treated in the first three and a half months of operation, with 20% of them white.

Headed by Philadelphian

Commanded by Maj. William H. Strickland of Philadelphia, the hospital is staffed by graduates of Howard, Lincoln, Wilberforce and Harvard Universities, Dartmouth and Meharry Colleges, and Harlem, Homer Phillips and Kansas City General Hospitals.

A graduate of Lincoln University and of Howard Medical School, Major Strickland practiced in Philadelphia before entering the Army, specializing in internal medicine, and also served at both Mercy and Douglass Hospitals there.

Assisting him is Maj. Robert S. Wilkinson of New York City, a Dartmouth Phi Beta Kappa and Harvard Medical School graduate, formerly associate visiting surgeon of Harlem Hospital and consulting surgeon of the Harlem Valley State Hospital, both in New York.

Heads 2nd Complete Unit

The author of a military treatise on abdominal staff wounds, Major Wilkinson, surgical chief of the Tagap Station Hospital here, is also the commanding officer of another complete station hospital unit.

Activated out of Major Strickland's complement, the new hospital is scheduled to move to another location.

Upon arrival here in September, 1944, the unit, which was activated at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., in August, 1943, first had to construct improved facilities for sheltering and treating the sick and wounded.

Native Help Used

With the help of native labor, new bamboo bashas were constructed to serve as laboratories, operating room, wards, and quarters for the hospital staff, while a complete water system was installed running from water sheds in the hills.

The hospital is equipped and prepared for just about any emergency. The X-Ray section is under the supervision of Capt. Leroy T. Barnes of Philadelphia, a radiologist. 6-30-45

In Surgical Division

In the surgical division one finds besides Major Wilkinson, who is Consultant to Surgical Service in the combined group;

Capt. Maurice F. Gleason of Cleveland and Chicago, a Meharry Medical School product, chief of surgical service in the combined group;

Capt. Neville A. Griffith of New York, a graduate of Magill University School of Medicine, Canada, who is Assistant Chief of Surgical Service in the combined group;

Capt. Clarence D. Hinton of Chicago, Howard Medical School alumnus, surgeon-in-charge of the orthopedic section;

Capt. Carl S. Jenkins of Wilberforce, Ohio, Howard Medical School graduate, surgeon on orthopedic service.

Field Staff of Nurses

In the combined group, 1st Lt. Rose E. Robinson of Morton, Pa., is chief operating room nurse, and 1st Lt. Rosamae G. Glover of Dayton, Ohio, is nurse supervisor on surgical service. She is assisted by 1st Lt. Polly Lathion of Piper, Ala.

Other nurses are 1st Lts. Madine H. Davis of Gainesville, Tex.; Deshia M. Watkins, Kansas City, Mo., and 2nd Lts. Fannie M. Hart, New Orleans; Eva J. Wheeler, River Forest, Ill., and Lillie M. Lesesne, anesthetist, of Pittsburgh.

New Yorker in Medical Service

In the Medical Service are Major Strickland, consultant for the combined group; Capt. Henry A. Washington of Syracuse, N.Y., Chief of Medical Service, and 1st Lt. Roscoe C. Williams of Alabama, now on detached service to Rest Camp No. 1 at Calcutta.

First Lt. Elestia E. Cox of Los Angeles is nurse supervisor on Medical Service, while 2nd Lts. Anna T. Landrum of Asheville, N.C., and Caroline E. Schenck of Uniontown, Pa., are assistants.

The principal chief nurse in the combined group is 1st Lt. Agnes B. Glass of Meridian, Miss., a graduate of Homer Phillips Hospital, who is assisted by 1st Lt. Daryle E. Foister of Bedford, Pa., a Mercy Hospital graduate.

Five Served in Liberia

Second Lt. Rosemary Vinson of Detroit serves as hospital dietitian. Among the nurses, Lts. Foister, Hart, Landrum, Schenck and Vinson are experiencing their second assignment overseas, having served with the 25th Station Hospital in Liberia.

The dental clinic, comparable to any overseas, is under the command of Capt. George E. Marshall of Jamaica, N.Y., who has 1st Lt. Marvin M. Fisk of Rockford, Ill., as his assistant.

Captain Marshall is now attached to Major Wilkinson's new unit and Lieutenant Fisk will remain with Major Strickland's outfit. Both Marshall and Fisk are Howard University Dental School graduates. 6-30-45

Bostonian Heads Pharmacy

In charge of the pharmacy is Sgt. John R. King of Boston, a registered pharmacist who used to own his own drug store there and who has filled some 1800 prescriptions since January 1.

In the clinical laboratory, three trained GI technicians, under the supervision of Captain Hinton, perform such tests as urinalysis, hematology, feces, sputum, malaria, and other diagnostic analysis, averaging 1000 separate lab checks monthly.

They are T/Sgt. Barney S. Goodson of Houston, who studied medicine at Meharry one year; T/4 Samuel H. Golden of Pittsburgh, who was studying pharmacy at Duquesne when inducted, and Cpl. Herman Green.

Highly Commended by All

A trip through the wards reveals that both colored and white patients are receiving the best of medical attention, all being generous in their praise of both the medics and nurses for their care and interest in them.

Typical are the remarks of one white soldier, who was recuperating from an operation for stomach ulcers, who said:

"This is the best hospital I've been in since coming into the Army, and I've been in four before. The doctors and nurses here treat you like a paying patient back home.

"They really know their work. If they can't find out what's wrong with you, then no one can. There's no discrimination here either.

Lack of Bias Cited

"All of us, including myself, my buddies, the Chinese, Indians and British, get the same treatment and attention. When we can move around, we eat, play, and talk with each other because we are all in the various wards together."

A clerk in an engineering outfit here, Pfc. Louis E. Lambert of Washington, an asthma patient, who attended Howard University and was a shoe clerk before being drafted, stated that it was good to receive medical attention which consisted of something else besides pills.

Both T/4 Joseph Redding of Dawson, Ga., and T/5 John W. Jackson of Philadelphia reported that if they didn't get well in a hurry, it wouldn't be because the medics and nurses are not doing all that they could for them.

Praise from 2nd White GI

Declaring that for the first time he had learned what was wrong with him, T/5 Phillip O. Thevenet, white, of Breaux Bridge, La., an electrician in an engineering outfit, said: 6-30-45

"You can say this for me, that these docs here really know their stuff—and they're such young fellows. Never seen anyone like 'em. They take pictures of you (X-rays) 'til they find your trouble and then they go to work, then you get well."

Many of the white patients, curious as to where the medics and nurses received their training, express surprise upon learning that some had trained in colored institutions and others at white ones.

Other Staff Officers

Others on the staffs of the combined and separate units are:

First Lts. Donarell R. Green Jr. of Atlanta, the assisting receiving and assistant sanitation officer; Charles S Hall of Omaha, Neb., adjutant; James B. Staffford of Alton, Ill., adjutant in the original hospital unit, registrar and supply officer;

Capt. Russell M. Coleman of East Orange, N.J., receiving and sanitation officer; 2nd Lts. Calvin J. Webb of Kansas City, Kans., detachment commander; Nelson F. Pallermon, San Diego, Calif., supply officer, and Virgil R. Harris, Cleveland, a detachment commander and the educational officer.

Enlisted men in the various sections of the hospital include:

DENTAL LABORATORY

T/4 William J. Owsley, Indianapolis, Ind.; T/4 Mahlon Lane, Clearfield, Pa., and Pfc. Thomas G. Alston, Everett, Mass., all of whom are admittedly excellent technicians.

IN ADMINISTRATION OFFICE

T/Sgt. Frank Ellis, Huntington, W.Va., personnel sergeant; Cpl. George C. Carpenter, Jellicoe, Tenn., a typist; Cpl. James L. Goudeua, Los Angeles, Calif., switchboard operator; T/5 Willie Moore Jr., Houston, Tex., clerk-stneographer;

T/4 Elmer H. Washington, Washington, chief clerk in the sick and wounded section of the registrar's office, and T/5 Elmer L. Childress, Minneapolis, Minn., also a clerk-typist.

ON MESS STAFF

Handling the cooking duties are: S/Sgt. Freddie Mayes Sr., Waco, Tex., mess sergeant; and the cooks, Pfc. Eddie L. Hill, Norfolk, Va.; T/5 Lawrence A. Johnson, Simpsonville, Md., and Pvt. Lorenzon Vincent, Philadelphia, who also represents the hospital unit in the India-Burma boxing tournaments.

First Sgt. John W. Gazaway, Chicago, who runs the detachment; Pvt. James L. Carter, Los Angeles, who is vitally interested in the rehabilitation of diseased and crippled veterans, and Cpl. James Brown, St. Joseph, Mo., who was my vehicle driver.

Anxious about their future in America, the soldiers have taken up the Army's voluntary savings plans. The pay allotment of the organization for savings and war bonds constitutes 75 per cent of its gross wages. Many have also enrolled in the Armed Forces Institute courses.

The Red Cross is supervised by Miss Bernice Grice of Omaha, Neb., a graduate of the University of Omaha, who also holds the master of arts degree from Howard University.

Pride of Personnel in Unit

In summing up the hospital here, Major Strickland has somewhat of a stock statement which he generally issues to all news scribes. He says:

"We are not an unusual organization. We are well-trained American citizens who all happen to be colored. We are able to do anything that comes within the scope of this training.

"To the majority of our personnel, this hospital represents the fulfillment of an ideal: an ideal that allows free men the opportunity to pursue their chosen occupations regardless of race, creed, or color."

Burma Hospital Has All-Negro Personnel

ALONG THE STILWELL ROAD, India-Burma—(Delayed)—High on the side of a 4,500-foot peak of the dense, vast green tapestried jungle of the Patkai Mountain Range at Tagap, in upper Assam Province, where the black panther craftily stalks his arch enemy, the Bengal tiger, through a dim, primordial world which for centuries afforded the elephant, the cobra, and the devil-tormented aborigine a refuge from the encroaching tides of civilization, nestles the only hospital in Asia entirely staffed by Negroes, and which is also one of two such colored units operating overseas today.

Here, midst the site of the happy hunting grounds of the Nagas, a primitive people, who only a generation or two ago were head hunters, and even today display the skulls of hapless adversaries as trophies of their native bamboo "bustees," this citadel of mercy administers unflinchingly to the various needs of its international patients, numbering both colored and white Americans, British, Chinese, Indians and Burmese. About 20 per cent of the patients to date have been white.

Under the command of dapper Maj. William H. Strickland, of Philadelphia, Pa., who is well-known in social circles along the Gay White Way of the Eastern Seaboard, the hospital has grown out of the planning and sweat of competent doctors, nurses and technicians. Assisting Strickland is the well-known and highly competent physician and surgeon, Maj. Robert S. Wilkinson, of New York City.

The hospital is equipped and prepared for just about any emergency. An X-Ray section is under the supervision of Capt. Leroy T. Barnes, of Philadelphia, Pa.. In the surgical division, one finds, besides Major Wilkinson, Capt. Maurice F. Gleason, of Cleveland, Ohio, now of Chicago, Ill.; Capt. Neville A. Griffith of New York, Capt. Clarence D. Hinton of Chicago, Ill., and Carl S. Jenkins, of Wilberforce, Ohio.

HOSPITAL PERSONNEL

First Lieut. Rose E. Robinson, of Morton, Pa., is chief operating room nurse in the combined group, and First Lieut. Rosamae G. Glover, of Dayton, Ohio, is nurse supervisor on Surgical Service in the combined group. She is assisted by First Lieut. Polly Lathion, of Piper, Ala. Other nurses are First Lieuts. Madine H. Davis, of Gainesville, Tex.; Doshia M. Watkins, of Kansas City, Mo., and Second Lieuts. Fannie M. Hart, of New Orleans, La.; Eva J. Wheeler, of River Forest, Ill., and Lillie M. Lesesne, anesthetist, of Pittsburgh, Pa.

In the medical service are Major Strickland, Capt. Henry A. Washington, of Syracuse, N. Y.; First Lieut. Roscoe C. Williams, of Alabama. First Lieut. Elestia E. Cox, of Los Angeles, Calif., is nurse supervisor on Medical Service in the combined group. Also working on this same service are Second Lieuts. Anna T. Landrum, of Asheville, N. C., and Caroline E. Schenck of Uniontown, Pa.

Principal chief nurse in the combined group is First Lieut. Agnes B. Glass of Meridian, Miss. She is ably assisted by First Lieut. Daryle E. Folster of Bedford, Pa.

Secnod Lieut. Rosemary Vinson, of Detroit, Mich., serves as the dietitian for the hospital.

The well-equipped dental clinic is under the command or Capt. George E. Marshall, of Jamaica, N. Y., and he has First Lieut. Marvin M. Fisk, of Rockford, Ill., as his assistant.

In charge of the pharmacy I found an old friend of mine from way back in the old Fort Huachuca days, cigar-smoking Sgt. John R. King, of Boston, Mass. The soldiers working in the laboratory are T/Sgt. Barney S. Goodson, of Houston, Tex.; T/4 Samuel H. Golden, Pittsburgh, Pa., and Corp. Herman Green, Trenton, N. J.

Others on the staff whom I met and who keep this mercy station going like a well-oiled machine were First Lieuts. Donarell R. Green Jr., of Atlanta, Ga.; Charles S. Hall, of Omaha, Neb.; James B. Stafford, of Alton, Ill., and Charles T. Cole, of Detroit, Mich.

I also met Capt. Russell M. Coleman, of East Orange, N. J.; Second Lieuts. Calvin J. Webb, of Kansas City, Kas.; Nelson F. Pallermon, San Diego, Calif., and Virgil R. Harris, Cleveland, Ohio.

In the dental laboratory are T/4 William J. Owsley, Indianapolis, Ind.; T/4 Mahlon Lane, Clearfield, Pa., and Pfc. Thomas G. Alston, Thomas G. Alston, Everett, Mass.

Over in the administration office are T/Sgt. Frank Ellis, Huntington, W. Va.; Corp. George C. Carpenter, Jellicoe, Tenn.; Corp. James L. Goudeua, Los Angeles, Calif.; T/5 Willie Moore Jr., Houston, Tex.; T/4 Elmer H. Washington, Washington, D. C., and T/5 Elmer L. Childress, Minneapolis, Minn.

Handling the cooking duties are S/Sgt. Freddie Mayes Sr., Waco, Tex., and Cooks Pfc. Eddie L. Hill, Norfolk, Va.; T/5 Lawrence A. Johnson, Simpsonville, Md., and Pvt. Lorenzo Vincent, Philadelphia.

I also met First Sgt. John W. Gazaway, Chicago; Pvt. James L. Carter, Los Angeles, and Corp. James Brown, St. Joseph, Mo.

The Red Cross is very efficiently supervised by a winsome little Miss from Omaha, Neb., one Miss Bernice Grice.

White GIs To Replace Negroes As Mental Hospital Attendants

Chicago Defender 6-23-45

NEW YORK—"Negro soldiers will be replaced by whites" at the Northport (L. I.) hospital for mental cases, declared Maj. Gen. Thomas N. Terry, commanding general of the Second Service Command, at a press conference Saturday. This announcement followed disclosure before the House Veterans Committee last week at a hearing in Washington that soldier-attendants had been court-martialed for brutality to patients.

General Terry revealed that ten colored soldiers at the Northport Hospital had been held for court-martial, six had been convicted and four acquitted on charges of mistreatment of patients. He further stated that the light sentences (highest being three months at hard labor and forfeiture of $10 a month pay) bore out the belief of the court that none had been guilty of deliberate violence. 6-23-45

ATTENDANTS "UNSUITABLE"

At the press conference were General Terry, Maj. Gen. Joe N. Dalton, deputy director of personnel, Army Service Forces, and Col. D. G. Hall, chief of the personnel service, Office of Surgeon-General. They agreed that soldier-attendants originally sent to Northport had not been carefully selected as regard "suitability" but the conditions would be remedied despite the lack of first-rate personnel.

The veterans' facility at Northport has 2,700 patients, predominantly white, and now has 134 colored soldier-attendants and over 200 white, replacing the original all-colored detachment.

At a hearing before the Veterans Committee, headed by Congressman Rankin of Mississippi, Col. Louis Verdel, manager of Northport, stated he regarded the use of Negro soldiers in mental hospitals as inadvisable and had asked the Second Service Command for the substitution of white troops.

RANKIN RAVES 6-23-45

Chairman Rankin then launched into a tirade against Negroes and Communists. He declared "I want information why Negroes were sent there. The Army is attempting to break down necessary segregation of whites and Negroes. I am tired of seeing Communists in the War Department. There must be a change in the War Department—the sooner the better."

After a heated discussion, the committee settled down to hear a report by the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars on conditions found to exist in veterans' hospitals throughout the country.

In the reports were the following references to Negroes:

LEGION OKAYS TUSKEGEE

All reports on Tuskegee were favorable. According to the American Legion report, there were no general or specific complaints on medical treatment and hospital care, standards of treatment were superior, discipline and morale of patients is satisfactory and of hospital personnel, good.

The facility at North Little Rock, Ark., according to the Legion report, presents something of a problem. "Contemplated plan of having an Army detail of Negro attendants to serve white patients will prove highly unsatisfactory and should be resisted by the American Legion," the report said. A spokesman for the organization explained that "friction" between the groups is the reason for this proposal. His own view is that segregation is best for the races.

The report on Muskogee related the incident where a group of colored patients seated themselves at the counter of the canteen and demanded to be served. After this occurred, the manager called a meeting of the representatives of all parties concerned, and the matter was temporarily resolved. The report then went on

FEAR CONSEQUENCES

"I am fearful of the consequences of colored and white veterans being associated together in the same hospital and not being allowed the same privileges. The colored veterans are allowed to come to the library and take books and magazines, but unlike the white veterans, they are not permitted to read or lounge in the library.

"This facility hospitalizes the veterans not only from Oklahoma but from Texas and Arkansas. As the hospital becomes crowded, I think there will be greater possibility of friction between colored and white veterans. We of the American Legion are greatly concerned over this problem and recommend to the manager of the Veterans Administration that these patients be separated at once."

Soldier in Italy Tells Apprehensions of Japanese-American Regiment

N.Y. N.Y.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

Many publications from the States, reaching us over here waiting for the War Department to decide our fate, have carried articles recently publicizing the remarkable combat record of the 442d Infantry Regiment, the so-called Japanese-American regiment, and most of us are highly gratified at the recognition they are now receiving. Anyone who has been in this theatre at all has heard of their feats; indeed, it would be hard to overpraise them.

Concurrently with such articles, however, has come a stream of news reports detailing a series of unbelievably discriminatory and terroristic treatment of the Japanese-Americans, many of them the families of these same soldiers, who are now, or will be, returning from the relocation centers and trying to resume a peaceful life.

Among those who know the 442d these reports arouse a just rage, and a deep feeling of shame that such Ku-Klux-Klannish violence exists in the States. Of course, we all know that it does: Anti-Negro riots, anti-Semitic disturbances, and the many other instances of the prevalence of racial and minority feeling, expressed and unexpressed, have shocked us all into realizing that fascism is a mental and spiritual disease of the entire world, and must be fought. 8-21-45

An article in Stars and Stripes again spotlights the apprehensions of Japanese-American service men over here for the welfare of their families. Is there not some movement which could be undertaken to guarantee to these people, who through their sons in the Army have demonstrated so overwhelmingly their loyalty to the United States and to democratic ideals—guarantee if necessary through national or State intervention—that they will be treated on a basis with other Americans? That is all they ask, and the least they deserve. 8-21-45

No Color Line at Naval Convalescent Hospital

Commanding Medical Officer Says He Opposes Any Discrimination

A PATIENT'S VIEW—"I couldn't ask for better," said one wounded seaman. "The medical care is excellent. We mix with white seamen, eat together, and indulge in all activities together."

Eleven colored seamen are enjoying all the comforts, recreational facilities and fun afforded patients housed in what was once the large boardwalk Half Moon Hotel. Among men in the group are Marcus Cooper of Camden, N.J., who is recovering from an appendectomy; Mack E. Gilmore of Hamilton, N.C., who is recuperating from a back ailment, and Marvin C. Williams of Philadelphia, South Pacific veteran, whose arm was broken while pitching for the Seabees.

By RICHARD R. DIER

BROOKLYN, N.Y.—There are eleven colored seamen at the U.S. Naval Convalescent Hospital, Sea Gate, and they are enjoying all the comforts, recreational facilities, and fun this former big boardwalk hotel, known as the Half Moon, affords its patients. They bunk together with whites, mix freely with them in sports and games, and are encouraged to do this by the hospital's medical officer in command, Capt. E. P. Huff, MC, U.S.N.

"I wouldn't stand for a color line, discrimination, or segregation here," Captain Huff told the AFRO last week at the hospital. "I always encouraged the colored men to mix freely with the whites in everything. The only time you find colored seamen bunking together in one room is when they personally request it."

No Separate Records

He pointed out that no records are kept of how many whites or colored are at the hospital and that there has been no trouble between the races. 6-30-45

Captain Huff said that the colored men used to be afraid to ask white girls to dance with them at the hospital on dance night, and that now both colored and white girls are invited. Occasionally, a mixed couple gets on the dance floor without complaint from any onlooker.

He explained that the men who come to this hospital are in the final stages of recovery from wounds, accidents, or illness, and that a good time is stressed for all.

Men who are in need of relaxation, fresh air, and sunshine are sent here by the Navy before returning to duty again. They play softball, go swimming, fishing and get the best of food.

"Couldn't Ask for Better"

The captain's statement on the non-discriminatory policy was confirmed by five of the seamen who said that this was the best hospital they had ever been in.

Edwin J. Detige, officers' cook 3/c, of St. Martinsville, La., who has been in the Navy four years and was seriously injured when his ship was bombed during the invasion of Sicily, had this to say about the hospital:

"I couldn't ask for better. The medical care is excellent. We mix with the white seamen, eat together, and indulge in all activities together. We should give thanks to Captain Huff for it."

Detige has been in various hospitals in the States since September, 1943. He came to Sea Gate Hospital about six weeks ago.

Roommate Is White

Marcus L. Cooper, steward's mate 1/c, Camden, N.J., who is convalescing from an appendectomy, he shares a room with a white seaman.

"I like this place fine," he said. "About the only thing I am able to do yet is go on the sun-deck for some sunshine. This hospital has a swell set-up."

He was a blacksmith in civilian life, but he intends to join the police force after the war. He has a brother, Albert, who is in the Coast Guard.

Mack E. Gilmore, seaman 1/c, of Hamilton, N.C., who has been here a month with a back ailment, says he likes the hospital very much although the only thing he is able to do is to go out on the beach and bake himself.

Gilmore was a drill runner in civilian life, a job to which he'll return provided there's an opening for him. 6-30-45

"Treated Swell"

"This is the best hospital I've been in yet," declared Marvin C. Williams, S2/c, who served in Guam, Pearl Harbor and the South Pacific: "I'm treated swell. I play softball; there's plenty to eat, and the movies and stage shows just hit the spot."

A former semi-pro baseball player, Williams broke several bones in his arm while pitching for the Seabees last September. His wife lives in Philadelphia.

No Friction

Samuel E. Norwood, cook 3/c, of Little Rock, Ark., who has been here since May 18, rooms with two white seamen at the hospital with whom he gets along very well.

He was slated to go overseas, but three days before his ship sailed he had to be operated on for a ruptured knee joint as a result of an injury he received in civilian life in an automobile accident.

"I think it is a pretty nice place here," he stated. "There's no discrimination. Men from the North and South are all thrown together. Except for an occasional wisecrack by a white patient which doesn't amount to much, we get along very well."

He was formerly a construction worker and would like to return to this trade when he leaves the service.

The Northport Veterans' Hospital

New Republic

SIR: Stories of the mistreatment of mentally disturbed veterans at the Northport, New York, Veterans' Administration Hospital have recently aroused public indignation. The fact that these stories emphasize the beating of white veterans by Negro soldiers may probably be ascribed to the influence of Representative John E. Rankin of Mississippi. Rankin, chairman of a House committee now "investigating" the Veterans' Administration, evidently hopes, by smearing the Negroes, to distract attention from other evidences of VA mismanagement. 7-16-45

Two time-worn policies account for the Northport situation: The VA's neglect of its mentally sick patients, and the Army's treatment of Negro soldiers. The VA has been notorious for its exceptionally low rates of pay, resulting in a second-rate medical personnel, and for dangerous understaffing, such as the assignment at Northport of one doctor to 350 patients or only one nurse to two wards. Similarly the VA has always been hostile to progressive medical techniques. For instance, in the 93 VA facilities there is exactly one research laboratory.

Northport is the site of one of the 33 neuropsychiatric institutions run by the Veterans' Administration. In 1943 the shortage of civilian attendants compelled the VA to ask that army personnel be assigned to the hospital. One hundred and twenty-five Negro soldiers were shipped in. The War Department, in its initial statement of policy regarding the use of soldiers in such institutions, ruled that, so far as possible, these Negroes were to serve under white commissioned officers. One factor in this decision was probably the presence of large numbers of Negro troops in the Second Service Command, comprising the states of New York, New Jersey and Delaware. Top Army policy has opposed the training of large numbers of Negroes for combat; and the relatively high level of education of Negro draftees from this area made them unsuitable or unruly material for labor battalions.

Civilian attendants at the hospital, never having received formal training in the care of the mentally disturbed, had developed their own methods. Emphasis was on absolute control. Beatings, soon after entry into the hospital, and a minimum diet, made the patients spiritless and submissive. Willing candidates for attendants' jobs were found among ex-patients who had been fascinated by the beatings and kickings they had seen dealt out while they were under "care." (Compare the reaction of ex-prisoner guards in German concentration camps.)

What did these soldiers know about the proper treatment of the mentally disturbed? Their imaginations were filled with stories of how "crazy people" acted. Their only guide was the elementary techniques of the civilian attendants. No other training was given them. Dr. Harold Foster lectured a few times, it is true, warning them not to strike patients. His admonition to call another attendant if patients became threatening, and to use mattresses to quiet them, was sardonically remembered by soldiers who had been left alone in a violent ward with 54 homicidals.

At first no effort was made to select soldiers temperamentally suited to work in a mental institution. Volunteers were not requested, although there was a War Department provision that a man might sign out after six months. In practice, signing out was discouraged. However, beginning in September, 1943, men with relatively high IQ's were assigned straight from the induction centers, and this practice continued until the spring of 1944. Then the Army began sending in veterans from overseas who, because of disabilities received in combat areas, had become ineligible for further foreign service. The first group of 28 sent to Northport went on a mass sitdown strike and obtained shipment out in three days. After that, overseas veterans were judiciously mixed with new inductees. By early fall of 1944 it was found that nine percent of the company were under observation or had been committed as insane, and a little more attention began to be given to requests for transfer at the end of six months.

In the last few months, the management of the hospital, under a new director, has made much capital of improper conduct by some Negro soldiers who were being used as attendants. However, as Major General Thomas A. Terry of the Second Service Command points out, the fact that only Negro soldiers were convicted of beating patients is meaningless, since the only soldiers used as attendants were Negroes.

Very recently, 183 white soldiers, many of them overseas veterans, were sent in to serve as attendants. Of the Negroes, 153 were shipped out and 135 were left behind to instruct the whites. To the surprise of the management, the Negro and white soldiers made common cause. Although the majority of white soldiers were from the South, they resisted all efforts at segregation, and cordial relations persist among the men. Most of the Negro soldiers would like to stay, under a sympathetic administration, though it is doubtful whether any man who has been in combat should be required to care for the mentally disturbed. This leaves the VA and the War Department in a dilemma, since the hospital management does not want Negroes at all, and official War Department policy is to discourage mixed units.

What's Wrong At Northport?

The Worker

7-1-45

The big veterans' hospital housing 2,700 patients at Northport, L. I., is mismanaged and understaffed, in the opinion of the men who work there. And Negro-baiting has added to the difficulties.

By EUGENE GORDON

COL. LOUIS F. VERDEL is the Medical Corps officer who (according to men who work under him) mismanages the Veterans Neuropsychiatric Hospital at Northport, L. I. He is officially listed as manager. In Washington on June 14 he told Rep. John E. Rankin (D-Miss), and the House Veterans Committee headed by Rankin, that soldier attendants in the Northport veterans' facility had beaten and otherwise abused mentally sick patients.

Verdel obviously was scared, for he was testifying in a situation which had aroused nationwide concern—the mistreatment of World War I and World War II veterans by the Veterans' Administration. He realized his own responsibility as a part of that administration. It was his fright which led him to pass the buck to his defenseless soldier-attendants—his fright combined with his ingrained prejudice against Negroes. Referring to them as "niggers," Verdel declared that he had never wanted the soldiers, many of whom, he told Rankin, were themselves mental cases.

What the Men Say

The Worker dispatched me to Northport, suggesting that I find out what remedy the men themselves had for what ailed the Veterans' Administration. I spent all the afternoon and early evening and all the afternoon and early evening of the following Sunday (June 24) on the hospital grounds. I talked with soldiers, with doctors and with relatives and friends who were visiting patients. 7-1-45

The consensus of opinion among the soldiers is that no remedy would be worth anything unless it included Col. Verdel's removal.

A talk with those men tends to center attention on the main issue: mismanagement of the Veterans Administration under Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines. Verdel's assertion that Negro soldiers "mistreated" white patients was Rankin's cue to change the subject to Negro-baiting. Let us get back to the original subject.

A private first-class thought the main fault lay in the fact that soldiers are ordered around by civilians—soldiers being helpers to civilian doctors and nurses. He saw no reason why soldiers shouldn't be attendants in a veterans' hospital, provided they took orders only from Army personnel. Most of the men resented the fact that soldier-attendants were poorly paid in comparison with the civilians in charge.

Complain About Food

Another private first-class complained that mental patients worked in the kitchen and dining room. Everybody agreed that the hospital food was inferior to government issue for soldiers. The quality, on the whole, they said, was all right, but it was ruined in preparation. One man said that dietitians prepared the food "according to prescribed hospital rules," but that mentally-sick helpers often ruined it. These helpers' personal habits were "awful," too, he said.

A private first-class who had not previously spoken said that if civilian help were offered higher pay the hospital would get better results. Even the civilian doctors, he showed, were underpaid. This man, before his induction, had worked for the Sheffield Farms laboratories as a senior technician. He now works in the kitchen.

Some of the doctors and nurses know how to use the special training possessed by the Negro soldiers. One such man, trained in X-ray technique, works with a civilian X-ray technician. The civilian "gets more a week than I get a month," the soldier said, and when he's absent "I have charge of the place." Doctors, too, have let this soldier take X-rays of bone fractures and heart cases.

"No matter how long I stay here," he complained, "I'll still be just a pfc." 7-1-45

This soldier, as is true of others, feels that Col. Verdal's attack in Congress injured the men's morale. He has asked for a transfer and has been denied. He said:

"The colonel told Rankin 60 percent of the Negro soldiers here were disabled—had one eye, or something like that, or were mental cases. Every Negro soldier here—or a majority of them—is capable of overseas service. The truth is that Verdel never did want Negro soldiers. He said so from the first. He passes us without saluting. Capt. Hatten—William H. Hatten—whom all the men liked, fought for them. The colonel got between him and the Negro troops. Hatten was relieved of his command."

REP. JOHN RANKIN

Negroes Lose Ratings 7-1-45

They said 305 Negroes came in at first. Verdel shipped out 137. He brought in 189 white soldiers.

"We're being kept here to train the whites," a corporal said, adding: "We Negro troops have lost all our ratings. The white boys are keeping theirs."

The white soldiers, however, also dislike the job, I was told. I found that, on the whole, they resented being brought here as attendants, having been trained for combat. That is the basic complaint of all the Negro troops.

"These are all beefs," I said at last, having listened to perhaps 20 different soldiers. "Now, tell me just what you think the remedy is for what's wrong out here."

Some said the remedy was that "no soldiers should take orders from civilian personnel." Some said it was to remove all soldiers and put in a complete civilian staff.

They all agreed that a larger trained staff was essential. They all agreed that Col. Verdel ought to be removed. 7-1-45

I was in a ward containing 208 patients. Two soldiers have charge. A ward being a big building of from two to three floors and many rooms, one attendant may not see the other for hours. These two men are locked in with the patients, some of whom are homicidal maniacs. When a patient recently stole up behind an attendant, threw a towel around the man's neck and proceeded to strangle him, it was only his fighting back that saved him.

Few Doctors On Duty

An attendant is not supposed to strike back, no matter what happens.

A larger number of attendants is essential, a doctor told me. He said that the hospital contained between 2,700 and 2,800 patients, yet, during the night, four or five middle-aged or elderly women nurses had to cover that immense block of big buildings. The doctor said:

"If there is 'abuse,' it's not deliberate. Some kind of force is necessary to give some patients their medicine or to get them to go in the direction they've got to go or to save your life.

"As to the troops, I think they are necessary here, because of lack of civilian personnel, trained or untrained. They just couldn't get anybody to work here. However, most of these soldiers have received basic training for action against the enemy. They haven't been trained to take care of mentally ill patients. Therefore, even their training is not suitable to the work they have been assigned to.

Too Few Attendants 7-1-45

"They're blaming the Army; they're blaming all sorts of things but the real thing. There's too much paper work for the doctors; too much red tape. Today, Sunday, for example, with all these patients and all their visitors wanting to see the doctor, there are only two of us on duty for more than 2,700 patients."

He thought Col. Verdel was too aloof from the hospital personnel. The colonel, he said, didn't consult or meet with them as he should.

He did not dispute my suggesting that Verdel be removed as a part of any thorough-going remedy of what ails Northport.

Dibble Denies Sanctioning Any Segregation Theory

Washington Tribune
6-16-45

By Harry McAlphin

In a telegram to NNPA, Col. Eugene H. Dibble, jr., head of the all-Negro Tuskegee Veterans Hospital, declared that Rep. John S. Gibson (Dem. of Ga.) apparently misinterpreted his associatian with a segregated institution as an unqualified endorsement of segregation in theory. Washington, D.C.

Dr. Dibble was referring to a statement made by Gibson on the floor of the House of Representatives, concurred in by Rep. John E. Rankin (Dem. of Miss.), that Negroes must be segregated in ties, that white nurses should not be allowed to attend Negro patients, and that it would be a fine thing if every State had an all-Negro hospital.

In the course of his tirade, Gibson said Col. Dibble agreed with him "in toto" on the business of segregation. He said the colonel agreed too that Negroes do not have to be mixed with whites to be able to "improve themselves". He was loud in his praise of the hospital at Tuskegee, which he referred to constantly as the "nigger" hospital. 6-16-45

Rankin Spouts

Rankin, in the same debate, said anybody was crazy who tried to knock down segregation.

Col. Dibble's full telegram to NNPA read: "This has reference to article by Charles A. Michie in PM of Sunday, June 3 in which it is stated Congressman John S. Gibson of Georgia said that Col. Dibble agreed with him in toto on the business of segregation.

"Congressman Gibson has apparently misinterpreted my association with a segregated institution as an unqualified endorsement by me of segregation in theory.

"While the Congressman's statements do not reflect my personal views, I wish to point out that it is not my privilege as a professional man in a United State Government agency to criticize the policies of that service either favorably or unfavorably. Above statement has been wired to PM today."

Veterans of Foreign Wars and American Legion Make Investigation With FBI Aid

Oklahoma City, Okla

FIVE WHITES HELD IN PROBE

WASHINGTON.—(ANP)—Mistreatment and abuse of mental cases at the veterans hospital at Northport, L. L., was laid to 15 enlisted colored troops and five white civilians by the Veterans of Foreign Wars, it was disclosed last Tuesday at hearings before the house veterans committee.

Spokesmen for both the VFW and the American Legion were making reports on their investigations of veterans facilities throughout the country, investigations which in each instance gave a clean bill of health to the installation at Tuskegee.

Joseph M. Stack of Pittsburgh, senior vice commander in chief for VFW, is the one who testified for his organization. "Our first recommendation," he said, "is for this committee to set in motion an 'undercover' probe, assuring immunity to each complainant." He called the conditions existing in the neuro-psychiatric hospitals, "starting with Northport," "sickening examples of the results of physical violence."

The report itself had this to say: 6-23-45

"When asked if there were any complaints or known instances here patients had been beaten or ill-treated, the manager (of the facility) informed the (VFW) committee that 15 enlisted colored troops had been court-martialed and convicted of mistreating the patients, and five civilian employees are now facing criminal assault charges for beatings administered to patients.

"These convictions were obtained, we learned, by three FBI agents who had been admitted to the facility as patients and produced evidnece to convict. The manager also admitted that there were other cases of mistreatment which were not reported and that any man against whom a complaint for mistreatments lodged, is immediately suspended and the charges investigated."

All reports on Tuskegee were favorable. According to the American Legion report, there were no general or specific complaints on medical treatment and hospital care, standards of treatment were superior, discipline and morale of patients is satisfactory and of hospital personnel, good.

The facility at North Little Rock, Ark., according to the legion report, presents something of a problem. "Contemplated plan of having an army detail of Negro attendants to serve white patients will prove highly unsatisfactory and should be resisted by the American Legion," he report said. A spokesman for the organization explained that "friction" between the groups is the reason for this proposal. His own view is that segregation is best for the racesu.

The report on Muskogee related the incident where a group of colored patients seated themselves at the counter of the canteen and demanded to be served. After this occurred, the manager called a meeting of the representatives of all parties concerned, and the matter was temporarily resolved. The report then went on:

"I am fearful of the consequences of colored and white veterans being associated together in the same hospitals and not being allowed the same privileges. The colored veterans are allowed to come to the library and take books and magazines, but unlike the white veterans they must leave and are not permitted to read or lounge in the library.

"This facility hospitalizes the veterans not only from Oklahoma but from Texas and Arkansas. As the hospital becomes crowded, I think there will be greater possibility of friction between colored and white veterans. We of the American Legion are greatly concerned over this problem and recommend to the manager of the Veterans' administration that these patients be separated at once."

NAACP Opposes Vet Plan For Separate Hospitals

Pittsburgh Courier — Pa.
2-3-45

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A protest against the announced plan of the Veterans Administration to construct separate hospital facilities for Negroes, was voiced by Leslie S. Perry of the Washington Bureau NAACP in a letter this week to Brigadier General Frank T. Hines, administrator of the Veterans Administration. In registering concern over the attitude of the Vet Administration, Perry pointed to Hines' own testimony before the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives regarding appropriations for 1945, in which he said:

"'We are going to have a problem undoubtedly of providing another Tuskegee Hospital, or a solid colored hospital, probably more in the Mississippi - Alabama area. There are a large number of colored troops from that area. The Board is studying all of that now."

In response to Hines' statement, Perry said, "The racial attitudes and practices of the Veterans Administration is a matter of deep concern to the Association as well as to thousands of thoughtful white and colored people throughout the Nation. We must express ourselves as being irrevocably opposed to the extension of jim crowism by the Veterans Administration, whether under the guise of so-called 'solid colored hospitals' or otherwise."

Promise Veteran Hospital Amalgam Probe

Negro Segregation
N.Y.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—After a conference Oct. 25 with representatives of the National Negro Publishers' Association, the NAACP and leading figures of the National Medical Association, General Paul H. Hawley, assistant surgeon general and chief of staff of the hospital division of the Veterans' Administration, promised that he would personally visit "non-segregated institutions of the Veterans' Administration and proceed as rapidly as circumstances permitted to integrate Negroes into these institutions."

At the conference which General Hawley held were Dr. E. I. Robinson, president of the National Medical Association of Los Angeles; Mrs. Mabel K. Staupers, National Association of Negro Graduate Nurses; Carl Murphy, Louis Lautier and Roy Garvin of the Negro National Publishers' Association; Dr. A. C. Torrence, Opelausas, La.; Dr. L. H. B. Foote, Tallahassee Fla.; Dr. Montague Cobb and Dr. Charles Prudhomme, of Howard University; Jesse Dedmon, Jr., and Walter White of the NAACP.

General Hawley, obviously impressed by the united opposition to segregated facilities in the Veteran's Administration promised that he would make a "personal visit to non-segregated facilities and would proceed as rapidly as circumstances permitted" to integrate Negroes in non-segregated institutions.

Among the topics discussed in the one-hour conference was the appointment of guardians for incompetent Negro veterans.

Negroes Protest Vet Hospital Abuse Charge

'No Training'—'Forced to Violence'—'Too Menial for Whites'

Negro soldiers stationed at the Veterans' Facility at Northport, L. I., today protested that their race had been unfairly maligned in connection with the abuse of patients at the hospital.

Letters received by the Lynn Committee to Abolish Segregation in Armed Forces from Negro soldiers stationed at the facility were bitter about the charge leveled at Negroes.

"I came with the first group of Negro soldiers here July 6, 1943," one letter said. "At that time the War Dept. specifically provided that detachments in veterans' neuropsychiatric institutions should be composed of enlisted Negro personnel and white officers. In other words, the work to be done was considered too menial and unpleasant for white soldiers."

"The soldiers were given no course of training. The facility was tragically understaffed. Soldiers would be thrown on wards of violent patients alone, without knowledge of how to protect themselves, much less the patients, from other patients . . .

"The civilian attendants had not been given a course of training either, and understaffed as they were, they had to resort to violence to protect themselves.

"Yet in almost two years we have been here there have been only 15 prosecutions for assaulting or threatening to assault patients on the part of soldiers. A month and a half ago the authorities determined to transfer the Negro soldiers and replace them with whites. But the Negro soldiers are still there because the white soldiers refuse to work on the wards under conditions the Negro soldiers have to face."

Other letters received by the Lynn Committee are in similar vein.

Congressman Rankin Licks His Chops:

Negro Vets Sentenced For Striking Patients

The Voice
New York, N.Y.
6-13-45

WASHINGTON—Mississippi's Representative, John E. Rankin, was licking his chops last week. He had something on Negro soldiers. During hearings of the House Veterans' Committee, it was disclosed that 13 Negro veterans had been court-martialed for mistreating patients at the Neuropsychiatric (Veterans) Hospital at Northport, N. Y., where they worked as hospital attendants, and sentenced to from two to six months.

Rankin wanted to make sure that everybody understood that Negroes were the guilty ones. He asked the same question six times of Col. Louis Verdel, manger of the hospital. He wants to investigate the War Department for sending Negro troops to care for white patients.

"That's a white hospital and every one of the convicted men was a Negro," he shouted. "It is a disgrace that the War Department should send Negro troops into war veterans' hospitals to be mixed up with white nurses and with officers who cannot enforce discipline."

"I'm tired of seeing communists in the War Department," he said at one point in the hearings." The Army is attempting to break down necessary segregation of whites and Negroes. There must be changes in the War Department—the sooner the better."

Previous testimony before the committee had revealed that seven white civilian attendants at the Northport facility had been dismissed on similar charges. They, with the soldiers, had been accused of striking patients. Col. Verdel suggested that the striking of patients by the attendants had been "acts of impulse." "I do not believe we had any affairs of sadism," he said.

He regarded the use of Negro soldiers in mental hospitals as inadvisable, the colonel said, and had asked that they be replaced by white soldier attendants. He also said that both white and Negro soldiers were dissatisfied over assignment to hospital duty and their attitude had a bad effect on the patients.

Negro Publishers Blast Physicians Seeking Jim Crow Veteran Hospital

WASHINGTON (Special) — The National Negro Publishers Association sub-committee on the welfare of wounded Negro war veterans went on record here Friday as committed to a right to obtain complete integration of the servicemen in all hospitals, regardless of race or color.

Told in an interview with Gen. Omar N. Bradley, newly appointed head of the Veterans Administration, that some Negro physicians are high pressuring a proposition for Jim Crow hospitals for wounded Negro veterans in order to provide places for them to practice, the NNPA declared:

"Let the federal hospitals take care of the Negro doctors, let the Veterans Administration take care of the GI's first. Let there be no color separation of war veterans. There was none during the war—continue the practice in times of peace. Separation does no one any good. We do not want another Tuskegee."

The NNPA went on record as demanding a Negro in the veterans administration to advise and work on matters of policy; someone whose duty it will be to set up bulwarks and to guard against discrimination and Jim Crow in the various bureaus.

Abolish Jim Crow

Abolition of Jim Crow "north of the Mason-Dixon line" was urged by Dr. John A. Kenney of New Jersey, who added, however, "for the South the question is not so easily settled. These men need and want tranquility and comfort. They should have, not only expert medical care, but the mental attitude of those administering it will have a great deal to do with their physical reactions." 10-20-45

Doubts as to the advisability of outright abolition of racial barriers were expressed by Dr. E. B. Perry of Texas:

"My first approach would be idealistically to hope that in the future we would not have segregated institutions. This is not possible even in this advance age."

Nevertheless, he urged integration into non-segregated hospitals of Negro physicians.

A veterans committee headed by Dr. L. H. B. Foote of Tallahassee, Fla., has been appointed by the National Medical association to meet with Gen. Omar Bradley head of the Veterans' Administration to discuss the findings of the NMA.

Dixie Vet Care Assailed

OPELOUSAS, La. — Jim Crow and wounded Negro veterans must not be bedmates in government hospitals.

This is what leading Negro doctors throughout the country made clear in a poll taken by the National Medical association this week.

One outstanding physician suggested that colored vets not be sent to hospitals in Dixie, but only in the North, East or West.

No Segregation

Dr. John P. Turner urged that Negro veterans "should not be sent to Southern hospitals. Where segregation and Jim Crow are a part of the set up, our boys and girls will fare worse in those areas."

He advised hospitalization in the North, East, or West for Negroes.

Dr. J. M. Hill of Georgia suggested:

"1. Hospitals for veterans that have no segregation as to race or color—only as to diseases, such as tuberculosis and neurological diseases.

2. Hospital staffs that are not segregated, but selected merely on the basis of training and merit of the doctors, regardless of race or color.

Dr. Paul B. Cornely, head of the Department of Bacteriology, Preventive Medicine, and Public Health, stated: 10-20-45

"I do not believe that the pattern which has been established by the veterans' administration of having segregated hospital facilities for Negro veterans is desirable or good; neither the practice which prevents Negro physicians and other professional people from being able to be integrated in the various veteran facilities."

Drop Plan for Dixie Veterans' Hospital

Pittsburgh Courier — Pa.

By JAMES L. HICKS, NNPA Staff Writer

WASHINGTON — The plan of the Veterans Administration to build a 500-bed all-colored hospital in Alabama or Mississippi has been abandoned, according to an announcement made by Major General Omar N. Bradley, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, last Thursday. 12-15-45

Revision of a prior authorization for the all-colored hospital has been approved by the President. The revision calls for a 250-bed addition to be built at a jim-crow hospital in Alexandria, La. Allocation of the remaining 250 beds will be made later, General Bradley said. 12-15-45

RACE GROUPS OPPOSED PLAN

Funds for the construction of an all-colored hospital in Alabama or Mississippi were provided in the 1946 Independent Offices Appropriation Bill.

The Veterans' Administration declined to reveal why its plan had been changed, but opposition of colored organizations and individuals is believed to have been responsible.

With a capacity of 725 beds, the jim-crow hospital at Alexandria has 495 beds available for white veterans and 230 beds available for colored veterans in segregated wards. The 250-bed addition will bring its capacity to 975 beds.

CITY CALLED A "HELL-HOLE"

The Veterans' Administration declined to say whether the 250 additional beds will be used for colored veterans, thereby making a total of 480 beds available to colored veterans, or whether they would be divided proportionately between white and colored veterans. It did state, however, that the racial policy in effect at the Alexandria hospital follows the pattern of the local community and would not be changed.

Colored soldiers who were stationed at Camp Claiborne and Camp Livingston, La., near Alexandria, regarded that city as one of the worst hell-holes in the entire South. They were subjected to race discrimination and police brutality, the latter culminating in the wanton murder of a colored military policeman by a white civilian officer.

President Truman's approval of such a proposal.

The 250-bed addition at Alexandria represents one-half of an authorization given in the 1946 Independent Offices appropriation act for the construction of a 500-bed all-colored veterans hospital in either Alabama or Mississippi at a total cost of $3,049,830.

Construction of another jim crow hospital was opposed by the Negro Newspaper Publishers' Association, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the National Medical Association, the National Negro Nurses' Association and other organizations. 12-22-45

Opposition to construction of an addition for colored veterans at Alexandria is based on (1) conditions evisting in Alexandria and other localities in the deep South.

Two Men Murdered

At least two cases of apparent wanton murder of colored soldiers and a number race riots occurred in Alexandria during World War II.

A riot took place in Alexandria on the night of January 10, 1942. Colored soldiers and civilians and members of the military and civilian police force were involved. Twenty-nine colored soldiers were injured, three of them critical.

Pvt. Raymond Carr, a colored MP, on Nov. 1, 1942, was killed by State Trooper Dalton McCollum. A Louisiana grand jury refused to indict McCollum.

As a consequence of this case, forör Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson asked Congress to enact a bill broadening existing law so as to make it a Federal offense to assault or kill any service man. Congress has failed to pass such legislation.

Proposed Hospital Unit in Hostile Town Opposed

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — Opposition to the building of a 250-bed addition for colored veterans at the veterans' hospital in Alexandria, La., was developing after it became known that the Veterans' Administration had obtained

Killed by Bu Driver

On March 14, 1944, Pvt. Edward Green, a soldier, was shot and killed by Odell Lachnette, a white bus driver. The Army officer, who investigated this case, said that the conclsion was inescapable that the there was no justification for the killing. Nothing was done to Lachnette.

Those incidents are typical of incidents which colored veterans sent to veterans' hospital at Alexandria would be subjected to whenever they had occasion to leave the hospital and go into the community.

According to a rialble source, Army experiences with colored troops, which have an important bearing on the location of veterans' hospitals, indicate that in border States conditions in Army camps were tolerable.

In the States of the deep South, conditions on military posts were generally undesirable and in the civilian communities intolerable.

Would Face Embarrassment

Many of the veterans who would be sent to Alexandria and other veterans' hospitals in the South have returned from overseas and would be continually facing embarrassment. A more favorable atmosphere is desirable for them.

The 725-bed general hospital at Alexandria has been converted into a tuberculosis hospital, the Veterans' Administration announced last Thursday. It declined, however, to state whether the proposed 250-bed addition be used exclusively for colored veterans.

The Alexandria hospital at present has 495 beds available for white veterans and 230 beds for colored veterans on segregated wards.

Money Appropriated for Second Separate Unit

12-8-45

WASHINGTON

Approval by the House Friday of the deficiency appropriation bill which provides funds for an addition to the Tuskegee Veterans' Hospital and the construction of a similar jim-crow unit either in Alabama or Mississippi this week forecast a prolonged fight over the issue of segregated hospitals.

Several organizations are already on record as vigorously opposing any extension of the old pattern of racial discrimination in veterans' facilities.

That this opposition might be ignored by Maj.-Gen. Omar Bradley, administrator of veterans' affairs, unless further pressure is brought to bear, was indicated this week.

General Bradley appeared to be moving along the old familiar path of racial segregation, observers pointed out. This was indicated by: 12-8-45

1. His appointment of Lt. Col. Harry E. Brown, a Southern industrial engineer and son of a former Georgia governor, as acting director of hospital planning and operation for veterans' hospitals throughout the United States.
2. His repeated disclosure that certain colored "leaders" in various parts of the country are urging the Veterans' Administration to follow a practice of jim-crow hospitalization of colored veterans.
3. A statement of Maj. Gen Paul R. Hawley, acting surgeon general of the Veterans Administration, that commitments on the issue of segregated hospitals made by General Bradley's predecessor Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, would prove embarrassing if not carried out.
4. The failure of General Bradley to change the 1946 hospital program as submitted to Congress. This program calls for additions to Tuskegee and the erection of a similar segregated unit in either Alabama or Mississippi.

House Approves Program

A total of $158,320,000 for veterans' hospitals and facilities was included in the deficiency appropriation bill passed by the House Friday. It is certain to be approved by the Senate.

Of this sum, $3,729,786 is definitely ear-marked for additions to the Tuskegee hospital and $3,659,898 would go for the erection of the new 500-bed general medical and tuberculosis hospital in Alabama or Mississippi.

Patterned after the Tuskegee institution, this would be the second all-colored hospital.

A delegation representing the NAACP, the National Medical Association and the Negro Newspaper Publishers' Association, protested the segregated policy to General Bradley several weeks ago, and were given assurance that he would "study the matter." 12-8-45

At that time, General Bradley told these representatives that "some colored leaders" favored the old jim-crow plan and had written letters requesting that the new segregated building be erected.

Two Favor Segregation

Two men who are reported as favoring the plan for all-colored hospitals are Col. Eugene Dibble, present manager of the Tuskegee hospital, and Maj. Vance H. Marchbanks, former flight surgeon of the 332nd Fighter Group at Godman Field, Ky.

Opponents of any continuation of the segregated plan point to Tuskegee as the best example why such an organization should not exist.

Charges are made that only colored doctors who are not qualified to compete with white doctors in integrated hospitals will accept jobs in segregated set-ups like Tuskegee's.

Ironically enough, a statement made public by the Veterans' Administration itself fully substantiates the charge. The administration said: 12-8-45

Men Refuse Jobs

"Several attempts have been made to place colored doctors in hospitals in the South where special wards are provided for colored men. Apparently each attempt has failed, primarily because the colored doctor applicant has refused to go to a Southern hospital where segregation is practiced.

"Many colored doctors desire to be placed in hospitals in the North where there is no segregation of colored and white veterans. The Veterans' Administration has found this situation to be untenable in that it is difficult to place colored physicians in the position of tending white veterans, no matter where the locale. Public opinion for the most part will not stand for it."

However, Dr. Montague Cobb, professor of anatomy at Howard University, a firm opponent to jim-crow hospitals, does not share the views of the VA, when it says colored doctors cannot be integrated.

"Experience is, that if qualification is present at the beginning, and the administrative officer makes no particular inquiry to determine whether it will be agreeable with other personnel, absolutely nothing happens," he asserted.

Experiences Cited

To prove his contention, he cited experiences at Western Reserve University in Cleveland and Washington University in St. Louis.

Most flagrant abuse at Tuskegee, it was charged, was in the matter of guardianships for veterans, which borders on a racket.

The guardians, all white, are appointed to handle veterans' finances, with the power to invest the money and take a portion of it as their fees. 12-8-45

No colored persons are appointed as guardians for colored veterans at Tuskegee and some white men act as guardians for as many as ten colored veterans, it was charged.

Veterans' Administration figures reveal that of the 97 veterans' hospitals, 17 do not admit colored veterans except in cases of "medical emergency" and 24 of the remaining 80 admit them only to segregated wards.

15 Located in South

Fifteen of the institutions which totally bar colored veterans are located in the deep South, where most of them reside. The other two are at Reno, Nevada, and Waukesha, Wis.

Of the funds approved by Congress Friday, $1,525,000 will be used for the erection of a neuropsychiatric ward at Tuskegee. Other items in the Tuskegee appropriation include a storehouse, $146,000; refrigeration, $55,000; elevators, $24,000; incinerator, $65,000, and landscaping, $20,000. Remodeling of the dining hall and kitchen, $305,000; recreation building, $263,000; a gymnasium, $243,000; a theater building, $425,000; occupational therapy shops, $274,000; a connecting corridor between buildings, $45,000; a new $12,500; a chapel, 12-8-45

Negroes Battle U.S. Army Hospital Jimcrow in South

Daily Worker, New York, N.Y.

12-10-45

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9 (UP).—Negro leaders are demanding that Gen. Omar N. Bradley end segregation in southern veterans hospitals but he has refused, it was revealed tonight. Maj. Gen. Paul R. Hawley, Bradley's acting surgeon general, has cautioned him that the Veterans Administration cannot be made an agency for social change and that it must follow local custom.

Fanned by the Negro press, the issue has become one of Bradley's big headaches. His position has been that segregation will be eliminated as local custom changes.

A delegation representing 25 Negro organizations is currently seeking an appointment with the administrator to press the demand. Bradley's office said a meeting has not been arranged.

Thomasina W. Johnson, legislative representative of the National Nonpartisan Council, an organization of Negro women, charged that Bradley for six weeks has given her "the run-around" in scheduling the conference.

She said that in three previous talks with smaller groups, Bradley has been non-commital.

Bradley recently ordered a survey of Negro hospital facilities which showed that of VA's 97 hospitals, 17 accept no Negroes except in emergency and that 24 of the remaining 80 have separate wards for Negroes.

One hospital, at Tuskegee, Ala accepts only Negroes. The remaining 55 make no distinction.

AKA Amendments Hold 'Joker'

'Hospital Bill Makes World Charter Worthless--Langer

The Pittsburgh Courier—Pittsburgh, Pa.

12-22-45

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—Any Senator who voted to ratify the United Nations Charter adopted at San Francisco and outlawing discrimination on account of race, color, creed, or sex anywhere in the world, and voted for the Hill-Burton hospital survey and construction bill, was not consistent, Senator William Langer, Republican of North Dakota, declared just before the Senate passed that measure.

VIOLATES UNO CHARTER

Referring specifically to the Alpha Kappa Alpha-sponsored provision which authorizes race segregation in jim-crow States, Mr. Langer said:

"A short time age we ratified the United Nations Charter adopted at San Francisco. That document is either a great, immortal document, or it is a worthless scrap of paper. It is one or the other.

"In the Charter we said that there should be no future discrimination anywhere on earth because of race, color, creed, sex, or language.

"Yet, Mr. President, there is pending before us today a bill provides that a colored man lying in a hospital, if it be in a State which prohibits a colored doctor practicing in the hospital, cannot call in his colored physician.

WILL VOTE UNDER PROTEST

"I shall vote for the bill, but I shall vote for it under protest. I feel that anyone who voted for the Charter drawn up at San Francisco, in which we said we were going to have no more discrimination and then votes for a bill such as this, is not consistent."

Before making this comment Senator Langer had tried unsuccessfully to amend the bill so as to require State plans for carrying out the purposes of the measure to permit a patient to employ any doctor licensed to practice in the State where the hospital is located.

In support of his amendment Mr. Langer said he believes any hospital patient "'should have the right to select any physician he desires to take care of him. That is especially true," he added, "where Federal money is being appropriated to build and maintain hospitals."

STATES SHOULD DETERMINE

"Who shall practice in the hospitals, and the other matters pertaining to the conduct of the hospitals," Senator Lister Hill, Democrat, of Alabama, said "we have sought in the bill to leave to the authority and determination of the States, and not have the Federal Government, through this bill invade the realm of the operation and maintenance of hospitals."

Under the terms of the bill, six months after the legislation becomes effective, the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service with the approval of the Federal Hospital Council and the Federal Security Administration shall prescribe regulations on certain specified matters.

One of these regulations would require that the State construction plan provide for adequate hospital facilities for the people of the State, without discrimination on account of race, creed, or color.

Regulations also may require that an applicant for an individual hospital construction project give assurance to the State that it will serve all persons residing in the territorial area of the applicant.

"JOKER" IN AMENDMENTS

But the joker in the three AKA Non - Partisan Council - sponsored amendments is the proviso that if the regulations do require a policy of no discrimination, they must make an exception where separate hospital facilities are provided for separate population groups, if the State construction plan makes equitable provision on the basis of need for facilities and services of like quality.

In plain language, this provision if approved by the House and the President, will authorize, by Federal law, race segregation in States where jim-crow practices prevail.

Colored leaders of the medical profession said the Hill-Burton bill will help perpetuate race segregation, with colored people standing to lose.

The bill would provide an outlay of an estimated $700,000,000 for the construction of hospitals and health centers. Of the $700,000,000, the Federal Treasury would provide $375,000,000.

Five years ago the Senate passed a similar bill but it died in the House.

Vet Hospitals Refuse Or Segregate Negroes

The Call Kansas City, Mo.

12-7-45

By JAMES L. HICKS
NNPA Staff Writer

WASHINGTON. — (NNPA)—Of the 97 veterans' hospitals in the United States, 17 do not admit colored veterans at all, except in cases of medical emergency," and 24 of the remaining 80 admit them but place them on segregated wards or units, a study of the Veterans' Administration revealed.

Fifteen of the veterans' hospitals which do not admit colored veterans are located in the South, the other two being at Reno, Nev., and Waukesha, Wis. The 15 lily-white veterans' hospitals in the South are located at Albuquerque, New Mexico, Amarillo, Texas, Atlanta, Ga., Bay Pines, Fla., Biloxi, Miss., Dallas, Texas Fayetteville, Ark., Fayetteville, N. C., Montgomery, Ala., Legion, Texas, Cutwood, Ky., Augusta, Ga., Gulfport, Miss., Lexington, Ky., and Tuscaloosa, Ala.

According to officials of the Veterans' administration, the term "medical emergency" in its application to colored veterans, is not given too strict an interpretation in order that "no injustice" may result to colored veterans applying to lily-white hospitals for treatment.

12-7-45

Plan More in South

There are now 34 veteran hospitals located in the South, and the Veterans' administration is at present considering sites in Alabama and Mississippi for the erection of another. This would be an all-colored 500-bed hospital patterned after the one now located at Tuskegee, Ala., which only accepts colored veterans and is completely staffed by colored doctors and nurses.

Congress' action in appropriating funds for the erection of another all-colored hospital aroused protests from colored organizations but, at the same time, it was disclosed, a small minority of self-styled "colored leaders" have been urging the Veterans' administration to go ahead with its plans for jim-crow hospitals.

When a delegation representing the N.A.A.C.P., the National Medical association and the Negro Newspaper Publishers' association conferred with General Omar N. Bradley, recently, to protest segregated veteran hospitals, they were informed that some colored leaders favored the plan and had written letters requesting that such a hospital be erected.

Favor Jim Crow Plan

Two men who are reported as favoring the plan for all-colored hospitals are Col. Eugene Dibble, present manager of the jim-crow hospital at Tuskegee, and Major Vance H. Marchbanks, former flight surgeon of the 332nd Fighter Group and now stationed at Godman Field, Ky. 12-7-45

Opponents of the plan of an all-colored hospital point to the only all-colored hospital now in existence at Tuskegee, Ala., as the best example of why such an organization should not exist.

Charges are made that only colored doctors who are not qualified to compete with white doctors in integrated hospitals will accept jobs in segregated set-up such as the one at Tuskegee, and ironically enough, a statement made public by the Veterans' administration itself fully substantiates the charge.

The statement of the Veterans' administration said:

"Several attempts have been made to place Nero doctors in hospitals in the South where special wards are provided for Negroes. Apparently each attempt has failed, primarily because the Negro doctor applicant has refused to go to a southern hospital where segregation is practiced.

"Many Negro doctors desire to be placed in hospitals in the North where there is no segregation of Negro and white veterans. The Veterans' administration has found this situation to be untenable in that it is difficult to place Negro physicians in the position of tending white veterans no matter where the locale. Public opinion for the most part will not stand for it." 12-7-45

However, Dr. Montague Cobb, professor of anatomy at Howard university, and a firm opponent of all-colored hospitals does not share the views of the Veterans' administration when it says that colored doctors cannot be integrated into non-segregated hospitals.

Speaking directly to Major General Paul R. Hawley, acting Surgeon General of the Veterans' administration, at a recent conference, Dr. Cobb said "Experience is, that if qualification is present at the beginning, and the administrative officer makes no particular inquiry to determine whether it will be agreeable with other personnel, absolutely nothing happens." He then cited experiences at Western Reserve university in Cleveland, Ohio, and Washington university in St. Louis.

Some of the charges levelled at Tuskegee were specific. Among them was a charge that the matter of guardianships for veterans at Tuskegee is a lucrative racket in which white guardians are appointed to handle colored veterans' finances. 12-7-45

These guardians, it is charged, have the power not only to invest the ex-soldier's money but also to take part of it as payment for being his guardian. It is also claimed that no colored persons are appointed as guardians for colored veterans at Tuskegee, and that some white men act as guardians for as many as 10 colored veterans.

Questioned on this matter, the Veterans' administration said that guardians are appointed for veterans by a county probate court within the state and admitted that guardians have the power to invest a veteran's money and that the court allows a guardian to take up to five percent of the money handled as payment for being the soldier's guardian.

The investments, however, said the Veterans' administration, are usually made in war bonds and the guardian's handling of the ex-serviceman's money is frequently checked by the court. 12-7-45

It was further charged that colored veterans at Tuskegee must pay concession operators a certain sum of money to get their checks cashed. When queried on this matter, the Veterans' administration stated that this is a practice that has been widespread in veterans' hospitals until a few months ago, but that plans are now underway which will place all such canteens and stores under the Veterans' Special Service branch and that individuals operating concessions in Veterans' hospitals now are merely serving out their unexpired leases which will not be renewed when they expire. In the future the federal government will operate the concessions at Veterans' hospitals.

Plan $3,729,786 Addition At 'Skegee Vets Hospital

The Memphis World Memphis, Tenn.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA) — Although the House Appropriations Committee considered the Veterans' Administration 1946 hospital building program, which includes an item of $3,729,786 for a 164-bed addition to the Veterans' hospital at Tuskegee, Alabama, it recommended no appropriation in the first deficiency appropriation bill for 1946 which it reported last Monday.

The amount sought for veterans' hospital totaled $158,320.00, but the committee deferred action because it believes it should have more time for studying the projects located in relation to existing facilities and those now foreseeable for which appropriations must later be made and the possible utilization of surplus Army and Navy Hospitals by the Veterans' Administration. 12-7-45

The addition at Tuskegee will be a neuropsychiatric ward to be built at a cost of $1,525,00.

Other items for the Tuskegee hospital, for which estimates were submitted but for which no appropriations were made, include a storehouse, $146,000; refrigeration, $55,000; elevators, $24,000; remodeling of the dining hall and kitchen $305,000; recreation building, $263,000; a gymnasium, $243,000; a theater building, $425,000; occupational therapy shops, $274,000; a connecting corridor between buildings, $45,000; a new incinerator, $12,500; a chapel, $65,000, and landscaping $20,000.

Any addition to the veterans hospital at Tuskegee and the construction of another Jim Crow hospital in Alabama or Mississippi have been opposed by colored organizations as an extension of race segregation.

House Body Considers Large Item

Statement Not Read By Gen. Bradley

Journal-Guide

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—The statement which Gen. Omar N. Bradley, administrator of Veterans' Affairs, had prepared to read at a conference last Thursday but was prevented from doing so by the reading of a lengthy statement by the spokesman for the delegation, was released for publication last Friday.

It follows: 12-24-45

"The Veterans' Administration is charged with the responsibility of rendering service to the veterans of our country's wars, under the provisions of several pieces of national legislation.

Norfolk, Va.

"This legislation makes no distinction among veterans because of race, creed, color or national origin. It will be the basic policy of the Veterans' Administration to work toward the elimination of any such distinctions that may exist in any program under its control.

"General study of the entire Veterans' Administration is being made. It is not possible at this time to state all of the changes which can or should be made, but you may be assured that when our investigation shows that there is any distinction being made in the handling or treatment of veterans and their relatives, because of race, creed, color or national origin, in any matter under the control of the Veterans' Administration, that every possible step will be taken as rapidly as feasible to eliminate these distinctions."

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10. — Negro leaders are demanding that Gen. Omar N. Bradley, Veteran Administrator, end segregation in Southern veterans hospitals, but he has refused. Maj. Gen. Paul R. Hawley, Bradley's Acting Surgeon General, has persuaded him that the VA should not be made "an agency for the changing of social customs" and that it must "follow the customs" of local regions.

Fanned by the Negro press, the issue has become one of Bradley's major problems, but so far his position has been merely that segregation will be eliminated as local custom changes. New York N.Y.

A delegation representing 25 Negro organizations has for some time been seeking an appointment with the Administrator to press the demand, but Bradley's office says no meeting has been arranged. Field On Morotai Named For GI Killed In Combat

Defender
Chicago, Ill.

WITH THE 93RD INFANTRY DIVISION IN THE NETHERLANDS EAST INDIES—In a moving ceremony witnessed by more than 6,000 service men, the athletic field of the 25th nfantry Regiment recently was dedicated to the memory of a Texas Doughboy who died battling the Japs on Bougainville in May, 1944. Sat. 12-29-45

The event, held during the Morotai Island baseball championship play-off, honored Staff Sgt. Walter J. Burroughs, son of Mrs. Mabel Burroughs, 1610 East Third street, Fort Worth, Texas.

The field was officially dedicated by Colonel William M. Hoke, commanding officer of the 25th Infantry. His remarks follow:

Hero's Death Told

" . . . Today, before the beginning of this championship game between the Bullets of the 25th Infantry and the All-Stars of the 369th Infantry, we thought it fitting to give an official name to the field, the home of the 25th Infantry Bullets baseball team. In naming it, we wish to honor the late Staff Sergeant Walter J. Burroughs, a former member of this command who was killed in action against the enemy on the 14th day of May, 1944.

"Sergeant Burroughs was inducted into the army from his hometown, Fort Worth, Texas, on the 18th of January, 1941. During his three years of service with this Regiment, he was known by his immediate comrades to be a likeable person, a fine man and a brave and efficient soldier. He was also an outstanding athlete. Those of you who were members of the Division in the fall of 1942, will remember him as an excellent football player. In fact, his every action as a soldier and as a man makes us proud to claim him, honor him, and perpetuate his memory.

"So as Regimental commander of the 25th Infantry, it is with the greatest pride in the service of a soldier of this command, that I officially name this place of recreation, Burroughs Field."

The Bullets won the championship of Morotai by a score of 6 to 1 over the All-Stars. The winning pitcher was Captain Frederick D. Jenkins of Alexandria, La., who was Sergeant Burroughs' company commander at the time of his death.

DEDICATE LARGEST BRIDGE IN FRANCE TO SOLDIERS

Plaindealer, Kansas 1-5-45

By Rudolph Dunbar
Associated Negro Press War Correspondent

Paris. (ANP) — A ceremony which touched the unusual was staged at Rouen, France, where, with pomp and dignity, the Darental bridge, the largest in France, was dedicated by two colored soldiers of the 392nd Engineer Regiment General service. They were Pfc. I. D. Dickerson, whose address is Box 173, Pikeville, N. C., and Pfc. Albert Ames of Cave City, Ky.

1-5-45

The former was killed by an anti-personnel mine at Carenton while clearing a mine field; and Ames was killed by an anti-personnel bomb while on guard duty in Brittany. The ceremony included the award of the Legion of Merit to M/Sgt. Eldred M. Currie who comes from Nashville. It is said that he is a man of large resourcefulness. With consummate skill he trained some of the most inexperienced men to work on the administrative staff. His wife is at present living in Columbus, O.

Pvt. A. I. June received the Certificate of Merit for saving a soldier from burning to death. The soldier's clothes were in flames due to the explosion of a gasoline tank. In fear of being burned to death he started to run away, thereby feeding the flames with his movement. Pvt. Al June ran behind the soldier, threw him on the ground and rolled him about until the flames were extinguished. Pvt. Al June's address is Route 1, Box 175, Rodessa, La. His mother, who lives at the same address, is Mrs. Hana June

The ceremony had triple function for aside from dedicating the bridge to these two gallant Negroes and the award of medals to the officers and men: it was the manifestation of a remarkable engineering feat completed with astonishing rapidity. It was also the greatest tribute paid to Negro soldiers that I have seen in France. 1-5-45

The construction of the bridge was carried out by the second battalion under the supervision of Maj. Horace B. Rickey from New Orleans who received the Brown Star award. Before the Nazis cleared out of Rouen they deposited 40 tons of TNT under the main columns of the Viaduct which blew up nine arches of the bridge. This made a gigantic pile of masonry which took eight days to clear away by blasting, and by the use of bulldozers before the actual work on the bridge began.

The men had to dig nine feet under the ground in order to get a solid foundation. There were no timber available consequently the men had to go into the forest and fell huge trees to get their timber required for the massive structure of the bridge. Special belts were made in the French machine shops. The French railroad officials provided the battalion with flood lights thus enabling them to work on a 24 hour shift. They had to face an arduous task for the perpetual rains had threatened to rob them of the record they were trying to establish. Coupled with this there was a sea of mud which added to their difficulties.

Nevertheless, the job was completed as arranged much to the astonishment of the British and French officials who said that it was impossible of accomplishment. In order to demonstrate the resistance of the bridge, two engines weighing 200 tons each were coupled together and made a run across which was a distinct success. It was a great achievement for the 2nd battalion and high military and civil dignitaries including Americans, French and British, gathered to pay them homage.

The Ceremony 1-5-45

The ceremony began with a luncheon at the Grand Hotel De La Poste where Maj. Gen. C. B. Moore, chief engineer, U. S. Army ETO, was the principal guest. Sitting beside the general were Adm. Rivett-Carnac, commander of the British naval forces, Rouen; Brig. Ben. Monguy, French 3rd region; Brig. Hynes, commander British Rouen garrison; Capt. Heron de Vollefosse, French naval commander, Rouen; Comdr. Morris, U. S. navy; the mayors of Rouen and Darental, the vice president of the chamber of commerce, railway officials, the commander of the port and a multitude of other important personages.

After the luncheon the party drove to the bridge where the ceremony was carried out. After the bridge was officially dedicated to the two colored soldiers by General Moore, a 200 ton locomotive decorated with the allied flags, slowly and gracefully made a run across the bridge sounding its whistle in salute of the occasion. It was an impressive sight for it brought a spontaneous burst of cheering from the large crowd that were standing in the rain.

The presentation of colors and award of decorations followed. The guard of honor was made up of a detachment of the 2nd battalion with its regimental band under the direction of 1st Lt. Edwin H. Rusker from Grosse Ile, Mich. They enlivened the scene with martial enthusiasm by the playing of marches and the three national anthems. To mark the end of the ceremony the official party boarded a streamline train and drove across the bridge to the main station. 1-5-45

What impressed me most was the enthusiasm the officers in this regiment had shown for the recognition of their men. In addition, their unpolluted esteem for them in general for it was the men's wish that the bridge should be dedicated to their fallen comrades.

Maj. Edwin W. Hamilton, the executive officer who comes from Tulsa and who was also given the Bronze Star medal, was carrying the Legion of Merit medal in his pocket and showing it to every colored soldier he met in Paris. Col Woolsey Finell, Jr., from Kentucky is the commanding officer.

Dedicate Bridge To 2 Dead Heroes In France

By RUDOLPH DUNBAR, ANP War Correspondent

PARIS—Dedication of the rebuilt Darental bridge (largest in France) to two dead Negro soldiers, presentation of the Legion of Merit and Certificate of Merit to two heroic Tan Yanks, and a tribute to the remarkable engineering feat of the Second Battalion of the 392nd Engineer Regiment (General Service), marked the unusual ceremony staged recently in Reuen, France.

There's an interesting story behind this colorful ceremony. It all started when retreating Germans placed 40 tons of TNT under the main columns of the bridge and blew up nine of its arches. This is where Negro soldiers, members of the 392nd Engineer Regiment, entered the story. The second battalion of the 392nd moved in and in eight days cleared the debris. In reconstructing the bridge, the tan Yanks had to dig nine feet to reach a solid foundation. Working 24-hour shifts and hindered by rain, the engineers felled the trees to get timber required for the massive structure of the giant bridge. Nevertheless, they completed the bridge, much to the astonishment of the British and French.

SEEK OUT DESERVING GI'S

When it came time to reopen the bridge and pay due honor to the Negro engineers who had made possible the reopening, Army officers decided this was the occasion for giving praise to outstanding colored heroes of the ground forces.

This was the time to dedicate the bridge to two fallen fighting men and to present awards to deserving GIs'.

Pfc. I. D. Dickerson of Pikeville, N. C., was kiled by an anti-personal mine at Carenton while clearing a mine field, and Pfc. Albert Amos of Cave City, Ky., was the victim of an anti-personal bomb while on guard duty in Brittany. To these two brave tan Yanks who proved their mettle during moments of danger, the bridge was dedicated.

SAVES BURNING SOLDIER

The awards went to M./Sgt. Eldred M. Currie of Nashville, Tenn., and to Pvt. Al June of Rodessa, La. Sergeant Currie, awarded the Legion of Merit, was credited with training some of the most inexperience men to work on the Army's administrative staff.

Private June received the Certificate of Merit for saving a soldier from a fiery death. The victim, his clothes ignited by an exploded gasoline tank, was overpowered by Private June and rolled on the ground until the flames were extinguished.

The ceremony was one of the greatest tributes paid to Negro soldiers. It began with a luncheon at the Grand Hotel De La Poste where Maj. Gen. C. B. Moore, chief engineer, U. S. Army, ETO, was principal speaker. High ranking Allied officers were present.

The party drove from the hotel to the bridge where the remainder of the ceremony was carried out. After the bridge was dedicated to the two soldiers by General Moore, a 200-ton locomotive, decorated with flags of the Allied nations, made a test run over the bridge. A large crowd stood in the rain to witness this impressive sight.

GUARD OF HONOR

The presentation of colors and award of decorations followed. The guard of honor was made up of a detachment of the second battalion with its regimental band under the direction of 1st Lt. Edwin H. Rusker of Michigan.

"Immortality" Given Colored Women by 92nd GI Artist

Afro-American 1-6-45

By CAPT. DOUGLASS HALL
Chaplain with the 92nd Division

SOMEWHERE IN ITALY.—A lasting memorial to colored womanhood is being left here by Sgt. Ralph McAfee, 19, of California, a member of the 92nd Division, whose hobby is painting life-size poses of bronze beauties upon the walls of Italian buildings.

From Salerno Beach to his present station, wherever his outfit has moved and set up a club, he has left his trademark, painting of a beautiful colored woman.

Explaining his hobby, the young sergeant says: "Well, they talk so much of the girls back home and rave so about their pictures that I just figured they would like life-size models of them."

GI's Eager for Glimpses

That he figured right is evidenced by the attempts of soldiers to get passes so that they can go to town and see the images he has created.

Sergeant McAfee, who was a student at a California college when he was drafted, says that he expects to return to his work in civilian life after the war, adding: "I think I will give my life to immortalizing the beauty of the colored woman."

RACE CITIZENS OF WASHINGTON START MOVEMENT TO ERECT MONUMENT DEDICATED TO OUR NEGRO SOLDIERS

Northwest Enterprise
Seattle, Wash 1-9-45

Every man and woman in the Pacific Northwest will have an opportunity, starting today, to contribute to a $150,000 fund for the building of one of the nation's outstanding monuments, dedicated to our Negro soldiers.

The plan, which was started in Seattle, will embrace the entire Pacific Coast, including the states of Washington, Idaho, Oregon and California. Committees have been and are being set up in each of these states, to operate under an executive committee composed of the following:— 1-3-45

J. A. (Jack) Johnson, Chairman; E. R. Chainey, Vice Chairman; William B. Foster, Secretary; E. I. Robinson, Treasurer; Mrs. Eleanor Mitchell; Russell E. Smith; and C. T. Dawson of Seattle, and D. B. G. Swanson of Bremerton. Executive committee members will be added from Tacoma, Yakima and Spokane and also from other states in the campaign area.

"More than 700,000 Negroes now are fighting with the American forces," said Chairman Johnson. "In every war this nation has fought, the Negro has fought side by side with his white brother-in-arms. He has borne the same hardships and made the same sacrifices. He has fought just as bravely and died just as gamely, knowing all the while he did so that when the history of the war was written, he and his race would get little of the credit. Unfortunately, that is the way things are. 1-3-45

"But the time has come for we who stayed at home—we in the shipyards and the airplane plants and wherever we may be—to recognize our obligation to the 700,000 who are doing our fighting for us on battlefields the world over. Look at the heroic record they have made, a record that is being added to daily by deeds of valor on land and sea. The blood of many of these heroes already has been spilled in the South Pacific, in Italy, in France, on battlegrounds everywhere. Negroes cannot ignore the noble sacrifices these men and women have made. 1-3-45

"And so we are going to build this huge monument as an eternal tribute to the Negroes who fought and bled and died that freedom and democracy might survive."

Alonzo Victor Lewis, eminent American sculptor, already has been commissioned to begin his studies for the statue. It will be heroic in size, larger even than the "Doughboy," created by Mr. Lewis as a testimonial to the soldiers of the last war and erected in front of the Seattle Civic Auditorium. 1-3-45

The monument will be built on the Pacific Coast. The exact location will be determined by the state that raises the largest contribution toward its erection in proportion to the number of Negro residents of that state.

Pacific Coast headquarters for the campaign have been opened in the Elks Club Building at 662½ Jackson street, Seattle (4) Wash. Phone Elliot 9787.

Beginning today solicitors will begin work in all parts of the state. Every authorized solicitor will give official receipts for all contributions. 1-9-45

All funds collected will be deposited in the Seattle First National Bank and those responsible for handling it are bonded.

Ceremony Held For Engineer Corps Privates

By RUDOLPH DUNBAR
NNPA War Correspondent

PARIS.—(ANP)—A ceremony which touched the unusual was staged at Rouen, France, where, with pomp and dignity, the Darental bridge, the largest in F..., was dedicated to two colored soldiers of the 392nd Engineer Regiment General service. They were Pfc. I. D. Dickerson, whose address is Box 173, Pikeville, N. C., and Pfc. Albert Amos of Cave City, Ky. 1-5-45

The former was killed by an anti-personal mine at Carenton while clearing a mine field; and Amos was killed by an anti-personal bomb, while on guard duty in Brittany.

The ceremony included the award of the Legion of Merit to M.-Sgt. Eldred M. Currie who comes from Nashville. It is said that he is a man of large resourcefulness. With consummate skill he trained some of the most inexperienced men to work on the administrative staff. His wife is at present living in Columbus, O.

Pvt. Al June received the Certificate of Merit for saving a soldier from burning to death. The soldier's clothes went in flames due to the explosion of a gasoline tank. In fear of being burned to death he started to run away, thereby feeding the flame with his movement.

WORTHY OF SUPPORT

Birmingham News—Alabama

A project that merits support by public-spirited Dallas Countians is the funds campaign which Negro leaders will launch this week for completion of a youth camp on Highway 80 as a memorial to members of their race who died in World War II.

The site for the camp, formerly known as Joyland, already has been purchased and paid for by Negro sponsors of the project and an additional $1,500 in cash is in hand from last year's financial campaign. An additional $12,000 is being sought to permit construction of a memorial swimming pool, a bath house, a pavilion, a fish pond and six small cottages, all of which can be achieved if the stipulated goal is reached. 9-17-45

As scores of Dallas Negroes went into the armed services during the war and gave an excellent account of themselves, it is only fitting that this county should memorialize their dead. It is even more fitting that such a memorial take the form of a development that will aid in the betterment of the youth of the Negro race, and the camp project should be given the full moral and financial support that its high purposes merit.—Selma Times-Journal.

Plan $500,000 Memorial Unit

CHICAGO 4 (ANP) — A $500,000 memorial civic auditorium building, dedicated to Negro service men and women, will be erected in one of several local communities soon, according to Ald. Oscar Depriest here last week. 8-22-45

Ald. DePriest, who disclosed that he is now looking for a site to begin construction on the building, denied that the sponsors of the building have any political designs in its erection. He said that it is to be non-partisan, absolutely free of political control.

DePriest, a former congressman and also a south side realtor revealed that the auditorium will have a seating capacity of 10,000 and will be equipped with facilities for recreation, sports meetings and conventions, news-reel theatre, ice hockey and skating arena, he said. The auditorium will be air-conditioned. 8-22-45

"The recreation program is scheduled so that about 70 per cent of the activity will be allocated to the public without charge," the Alderman added. The building will house several war veterans posts.

Similar memorial civic buildings will be erected in other cities, he said by the Commerce Research group, which will handle construction of the proposed memorial building here.

Name Plane After Captain Faulkner

Atlanta World

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (SNS) — Honor to the memory of Captain William J. Faulkner, Jr., former Lockhead employe of Department 15, Factory A-I, the first Negro officer to receive a commission in the Army Air Forces, was paid this week when a fighting Lockhead Lightning was decided in his name.

Captain Faulkner was killed on a combat mission over Austria on November 7, 1944, after completing 56 battle missions with the famed 99th Pursuit Squadron. On many occasions he had been cited for bravery, leadership and efficiency and was holder of the Air Medal and four Oak Leaf Clusters.

4-18-45

Son of Dr. W. J. Faulkner, dean of Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn., Captain Faulkner graduated from Morehouse College, Atlanta, Georgia; and completed his pilot training at Tuskegee Army Air Field in Alabama. He had gone to work for Lockhead on October 23, 1941, and terminated August 15, 1942, to join the AAF. At the time of his death a message came from Major General N. F. Twining, commanding officer of the 15th Air Force, which stated that Captain Faulkner had participated in action during the most vital period of Mediterranean operations.

4-18-45

"His record compares favorably with those of our finest airmen," said General Twining.

Honor guest at the dedication of the Memorial plane this week was Captain Faulkner's widow, Mrs. Martha Faulkner, who was accompanied by officials of the company and close friends among his co-workers at Lockhead.

Capt Treswell was the son of Captain and Mrs. Treswell, formerly of the 24th Infantry. He was born at Fort Benning, Georgia During his high school and college days he was a promising tennis player and participated in the major sports as well.

8-9-45

He graduated from West Point and was the third ranking student in his class Shortly after the outbreak of war, Capt. Treswell was attached to the 99th Bomber Squadron and had 23 missions to his credit before he was killed in action in the European Theatre of Operations.

The American Red Cross staff in charge of the Treswell Club has worked-out a well balanced program of leisure time activities including dances, ping-pong tournament, badminton, bridge, whist and other table games. Birthday parties are staged each month and plans are underway for a monthly amateur talent night.

Ralph A Long is director of the Treswell Club. He is a former tennis champion and was an all-round athlete at Clark College. He has had rich experience in community and recreation work and prior to entering the Red Cross was supervisor of recreation and assistant coach at Atlanta, Georgia.

Other members of the staff are: Miss Willie C. Powe, assistant club director, of New Orleans, formerly supervisor of Parish Schools in Louisana; Miss Ocey Smith, of New York City, program director; and George Taylor Waugh also of New York City, in charge of Welfare Services.

Rally to Honor Merit of 75 Negro Workers

Seventy-five outstanding Negro workers representing almost every type of industry and business in Cleveland are to be honored at a "Merit Rally" at Carver Park Sunday afternoon.

Capt. Clarence L. Jamison, famous flyer of the 477th Bombardment Group will present badges to the workers. They have been chosen as representative of the hundreds of other Negroes who are not only good citizens but doing outstanding work in their jobs.

The Urban League is sponsoring the rally which has the support of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Sidney Williams, executive secretary, and H. M. Nash, industrial secretary of the Urban League, are in charge of the program. George Leroux, assistant plant manager of National Mallable & Steel Castings Co.; Joseph Kres of the Industrial Union Council, B. D. Zevin, vice president of World Publishing., and Frank Evans of the A. F. L. United Auto Workers will take part in the program at 4 p. m.

HOWARD THOMAS encourages others to do their best. Mr. Thomas, superintendent of waste collection and disposal for the city, has about 700 people in his department. He himself works 60 hours a week and is responsible for street-cleaning, garbage and rubbish disposal. He is always on call in case of emergency, when a fire breaks out on the dump for example.

Mr. Thomas was born in Middletown, O. but he has spent most of his life in Cleveland. He started out as a laborer and has gradually won his way ahead to his present position. Mr. Thomas and his wife live at 2207 E. 71st street.

Mr. Thomas was chosen to represent Negro employees of the city because "he is able to get the confidence of his fellow-workers and encourage them to do their best," S. F. David, director of public service, said. "Beneath his devotion to duty he possesses a frank simplicity which endears him to all who know him. He is a real asset to the city and a credit to his race."

PAUL HERVEY overcame a physical handicap. Mr. Hervey is a box maker at the Copifyer Lithograph Corp. Although he has only 10 per cent of normal vision, Mr. Hervey finds his way through the various departments at the firm and does a skilled job without help. Boxes he makes are used for sending Army Air Force manuals overseas.

"We've had other blind workers here but none of them except Paul Hervey have been able to stick it out," an official of Copifyer Lithograph said today. "He's a top-notch worker and we chose him as representative because of his dependability, his skill and the fact that he never uses his handicap as an excuse not to do good work."

Mr. Hervey, a graduate of the Ohio State School for the Blind in Columbus, has a brother in the Army in Burma. He gets around through the city streets by following the crowd which he sees only as a blur. He lives at 2175 7. 68th street.

MRS. SARAH DUNCAN helps to maintain war plant morale. Mrs. Duncan heads the good housekeeping committee at Railley Corp. She superintends 10 people and is responsible for the cleanliness of the entire plant.

Mrs. Duncan was born in Arkkansas and came to Cleveland in 1923 with her husband who works for the State Highway Department. Before the war she did hotel work. She has worked at her war job six days a week for three years and for the past two years she has never once been absent or tardy even a minute. Mrs. Duncan lives at 2218 E. 101st street.

Foremen and supervisors at Railley chose eleven people who were believed to be outstanding in their departments and then let them vote among themselves for a representative worker. Mrs. Duncan was chosen because of her "important part in maintaining factory morale."

The Negro and Manpower

Daily Worker N.Y.

IN HIS message to Congress, President Roosevelt has given a vivid description of the crisis in manpower. Because of its seriousness, Mr. Roosevelt has asked for legislation to mobilize the people for greater effort as the war approaches its climax. Proposals are even now being made to meet this pressing demand. 1-10-45

The people will agree wholeheartedly that everything necessary to achieve maximum output should be adopted. We, for our part, have always favored measures to assure this end. The best way to bring this about is for government, management and labor to arrive at an agreement, making those recommendations and advancing those measures which will realize this objective.

But we have always pointed out, also, that the failure to make full use of Negro manpower is an evil which has to be corrected. This is required as part of the effort by government, management and labor to get maximum production. 1-10-45

The war has dramatized that every measure and law, including the Fair Employment Practices Committee, should be utilized for this purpose. There are still many industries in which Negroes are not fully utilized. There is a need for the wide employment of nurses in war activities, accompanied by the denial of service to Negro nurses. We find that this practice of segregation in this field has gone so far as to deny the services of Negro nurses even to combat units manned by Negro soldiers. We can see how costly, particularly in lives, has been this failure in drawing upon this reservoir of manpower.

This is not only a postwar question. The war brings before all our people the urgency for overcoming prejudices and brushing away artificial barriers. If this is done, the whole nation, along with the Negro people, will gain immensely.

S/Sgt. Jimmy L. Johnson, Jacksonville, Texas, who wears the Solder's Medal, the Silver Star, the Purple Heart and South Pacific Theatre Ribbon with five stars; Pfc. Joseph Green of Alexandria, La., a veteran of the Italian campaign, who has the Purple Heart; Pfc. Melvin Miller, Stockdale, Texas, who served in the South Pacific almost twenty-four months; Pvt. W. D. Bowman, Madisonville, Texas, a former artilleryman wounded at Bougainville, who has the Purple Heart, South Pacific Ribbon and two stars; and Pfc. Ozzie C. Dunning of Selma, Ala., who served eighteen months in New Hebrides during the invasion of Guadalcanal.

Negro Labor Part in War Work Found 280% Greater Since '41

Daily Worker 1-30-45

War production records have been smashed by no "labor elite," but by an all-American team of white manpower AND black manpower, declares Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission, in the current issue of the Chicago Defender, influential Negro weekly. This all-American team, adds McNutt, includes "the power of the handicapped, the power of the over-aged workers and the power of woman-power." 1-30-45

Referring specifically to the Negro, McNutt writes:

"As never before, the tradition of exclusion has been hammered at in every state, in every community. Negro Americans, traditionally 'the last hired, the first fired' have been given their greatest job opportunity since the reconstruction period. In 1941, Negro workers made up about three percent of war labor; by September, 1942, the percentage was approximately 5.7 percent, and in January, 1943, about 7.4 percent. Today it is approximately 8.4 percent. These percentages are a graph of economic democracy in action."

This represents a 280 percent increase since Pearl Harbor in Negro labor's share in war work.

McNutt sees the Negro as having demonstrated his "know-how in all the war industries." He sees the Negro's skills as "potentially convertible into the pay envelopes of peace." He sees hate strikes against Negroes as having thrown a "national spotlight on those resistant Americans who are either racist in their philosophies or confused or indifferent to the practices of economic democracy."

No American has a right, McNutt thinks, to a prejudice or to "a confusion or an indifference that will impede the flow of war goods to the fighting Americans overseas." At the same time, however, prejudice cannot be swept away by fiat, by wishful thinking, by rhetoric."

"The new maturity of organized labor, both in the AFL and CIO, combined to facilitate the hiring and upgrading of Negroes in war production. If these new attitudes . . . are projected into the postwar, all workers will benefit, not only the Negro workers." 1-30-45

McNutt concludes: "The color line in industry is a line against democracy," and "the only lines that counted in making a ship, a plane, a jeep, a rifle, were the lines on a blueprint."

Brooklyn UE Member Chosen Miss Negro Victory Worker

Daily Worker 6-22-45

The Negro Victory Rally yesterday named 24-year-old Ruth Hemming, a Brooklyn machine winder, as Miss Negro Victory Worker for 1945 and will present her at Madison Square Garden Monday night.

Miss Hemming, in the nationwide contest to find the young woman with the best record in war industry, and carrying on such outside activities as buying bonds, keeping a victory garden and participating in voluntary war activities, works for the United Transformer Co., Brooklyn, and is a member of Local 430, United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, CIO.

Sponsored by the Brooklyn National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Miss Hemming ran far ahead of a score of contestants. She has two brothers and 10 first cousins in the armed forces and is a regular purchaser and seller of war bonds. She maintains a victory garden at 1798 Pacific Ave., where she lives with relatives.

She donates blood and recruits blood donors. During the last Red Cross campaign she turned in $365, the largest sum collected by an individual in the Bedford-Stuyvesant area. She is also chairman of the Sweethearts of Servicemen, a branch of American Youth for Democracy.

Asked how she found time to do so much, Miss Hemming replied:

"Well, I use my lunch hours, my Saturdays, and my evenings after work."

She does it all, she said, because, working on a war job and having so many loved ones in the services, she "wanted to do all I could to help them." 6-22-45

Her father, now 64, and about to retire on a pension, is a coal miner in Virginia. Her mother lives on a farm in Buckingham Co., Va. Miss Hemming has lived in Brooklyn six years.

Negro Workers to Receive Citations

Capt. Clarence L. Jamison of Cleveland, flyer in the original 99th Pursuit Squadron, will make the citation to the honored workers at the merit rally sponsored by the Urban League of Cleveland, Aug 12, in Carver Park. Capt. Jamison, now with Col. B. O. Davis in the 477th Composite Group, Godman Field, Ky., will be accompanied by other Ohioans in the fighter group.

Wide representation of industries and shops employing Negro workers is expected at the rally, according to Howard M. Nash, the league's industrial secretary. The program has the support of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. Many shops have already elected their representatives, it was reported yesterday.

The Urban League is requesting the entire Negro community to cooperate in the league's postwar welfare program for Negro workers by reporting to Nash cases of workers laid off as a result of cutbacks and reconversion, and even rumors of cutbacks.

Contribution Described In D. C. Bulletin

Atlanta Daily World

WASHINGTON — (SNS)— Increasing their civilian employment from 1,500,000 in 1940 to more than 2,100,000 in 1944, Negro women workers not only helped to produce the weapons of war, the Department of Labor reported this week; they also have played an important part in preventing a major breakdown of the essential consumer services in wartime.

Atlanta Ga.

The contribution of Negro women to the war effort is outlined in a bulletin, 'Negro women War Workers," prepared by the Women's Bureau, U. S. Department of Labor, and released July 16.

STORY OF WAYS

"What this report tells," the bulletin points out, "is a story of the ways in which Negro women have helped to bridge the manpower gap. Working together with men and women of every other national origin, their contribution is one which this nation would be unwise to forget or to evaluate falsely. They are an integral part of Americas' prospect."

The 23-page booklet, which may be obtained at 10 cents a copy from the Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Govenrment Office, Washington 25, D. C. presents a series of vignettes of Negro women's work in munitions plants; in steel mills, factories, shipyards, aircraft plants; on the railroads and in the canneries, in laundries and restaurants, as well as in many jobs including the WACS, WAVES, SPARS, U. S. Cadet Nurse Corps, American Red Cross, and other branches of the war services.

FARMS TO FACTORIES

The most dominant changes in Negro employment between 1940 and 1944, the bulletin states, were a marked movement from the farms to the factories, especially to those making war munitions and a substantial amount of upgrading. There was little change in the proportions occupied in unskilled jobs however.

The proportion of Negro women on farms was cut in half in the four year. In April 1944, approximately 16 per cent of all Negro women in the labor force were on the farms; four years later only eight per cent remained, and the number employed on farms had decreased by about 30 per cent. While the total number of Negro women employed increased by approximately a third, the number employed as craftsmen and foremen and as factory operatives almost quadrupeld.

"Negro women's empolyment increased not only in the munitions factories," the report states, "but in food, clothing, textiles, leather, and all other manufacturing. The greatest increase was in the metals chemicals and rubber group. Fewer than 3,000 Negro women were employed in this group in April 1940; four years later 50 times as many were so employed.

"In the other major occupational were large, but the number involved were not sufficient to have much effect on the occupational distribution of Negro women. The number working as proprietors, managers, or officials trebled. Those working as saleswomen almost five times as great as before.

Negro Workers to Get Honor Pins At Urban League's Merit Rally

Several hundred outstanding Negro workers will be honored at a merit rally at Carver Park August 12.

The event is sponsored by the Urban League, to recognize representative Negro workers and demonstrate their stability, according to Howard M. Nash, Urban League industrial secretary, in charge of the program.

"A majority of the 200 plants and shops invited to delegate a representative worker have done so," Nash said today.

HE ADDED that the rally has endorsement and support of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, the AFL and the CIO here.

Among the scores of men and women to be honored are Charles White, 2642 E. 45th St.; Calvin C. Strong, 5001 Hoover Ct.; Wyatt Fountain, 12513 Hirst Ave.; Mrs. Ollie Brown, 2209 E. 38th St., and Mrs. Eula Lightner, 2559 E. 49th St.

Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Lightner are sewing machine operators at the Gottfried Co., 2822 Detroit Ave. Mrs. Brown has a son in the service in Burma and Mrs. Lightner's brother is stationed in France.

Mrs. Brown, (left) and Mrs. Lightner

"Both these women have made outstanding service records," said Lawrence A. Cort, factory superintendent. "I am glad to know they will receive public recognition."

Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Lightner are members of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, an AFL affiliate. Mrs. Brown has served as a union group chairman, while Mrs. Lightner has done much to help her unskilled co-workers increase their working capabilities, Mr. Cort added.

Mr. White

Mr. Strong

Mr. Fountain

Now a lathe operator at the Enamel Products Co., Eddy Rd. and Taft Ave., Wyatt Fountain has worked there for 26 years as mill room helper, mill room straw boss and forge operator.

HE IS THE OLDEST Negro at the plant on point of seniority and the third oldest male employe in seniority, according to Edward E. Hill, personnel manager. He is serving as a union committeeman.

"My son leaves for military service August 6," remarked Mr. Fountain. "I'm going to work harder than ever."

Charles White, 42, is a pipefitter's helper at the Standard Oil Co., 3527 Broadway, and he hasn't missed a day's work since he started January 26, 1940. He has a son in service.

On one occasion, according to plant officials, White worked 14 hours without interruption to prevent delay in production of vital war materials.

An outstanding service record is that of Calvin Strong, an agent for the Domestic Life & Accident Insurance Co., 2584 E. 55th St., who has never missed a day because of illness in 12 years.

THESE AND OTHER nominees will receive a badge of honor, presented by Captain Clarence L. Jamison, 477th Bombardment Group, Godman Field, Fort Knox, Ky.

The rally program will also include greetings from B. D. Zevin chairman of the industrial committee of the Urban League and president of the World Publishing Co.; George J. Leroux, assistant plant manager of the National Malleable & Steel Castings Co.; Frank Evans of the AFL, and Joseph R. Kres, treasurer-manager of the Negro plant gets citation on anniversary

Los Angeles-Calif. Tribune

With Mayor Fletcher Bowron extolling the contribution made to the "more spectacular" larger defense plants by such small plants as The Pacific Parachute Co., the Coast's only Negro war plant observed its third anniversary Sunday, Mar. 25.

"Yours is typical of the large number of smaller plants which have been integrated into our overall war production program", Mayor Bowron told Pacific Parachute workers, adding, "Without your splendid effort and your contribution, the larger and more spectacular completed war production would not be possible".

Award of an "approved rating" citation by the Army Air Forces was accepted during the anniversary ceremonies by President-Founder Howard "Skippy" Smith. Now producing bomber parts, the company's work was praised by Major Max Franklin who presented the citation.

Two Negroes Credited For First Southern Lumber Co. Getting Army-Navy E Award

New York Age

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The first southern lumber company to win the coveted Army-Navy E. Award this week credited two Negro workers with making a major contribution to this achievement. The workers were identified in a letter to the War Production Board as Theodore Denman and Jesse Howard, carpenters, employed by the Angelina County Lumber Company at Keltys, Texas.

According to officials of the company, Denman and Howard, during 1944, converted 2,500,000, board feet of yellow pine lumber into 1000,000 "general-manager type" grain doors, used by railroads to hold grain shipments in cars.

"Their only equipment in addition to keen eyes and muscular coordination," the officials stated, " was a hammer and a good supply of nails. Starting at opposite ends of a 20" x 7' door each man works toward the center. A knack developed through long experience enables the nailer to slip one nail at a time from the supply in his hand. With machine-line precision the nails are placed and pounded home.

"Doubtless the work of these men contributed to Angelina's achievement as the first southern lumber company to earn the Army-Navy E Award."

1-6-45

Company officials pointed out that the men averaged $10 a day in wages, and that each has purchased his own home in addition to other real estate in the community. One of the workers has four children; two of them are in grammer school, one in high school and one recently graduated from high school. The other has five children; one in the Army, one in college, one graduated from high school, one in high school, and one in grammar school. Both Denman and Howard are regular purchasers of War Bonds.

Company officials pointed out that the Angelina County Lumber Company was founded in 1887 and has continued under the same management for 57 years.

Whites Work With No Pay on Ship Named for Negro

Louisville City Call
1-5-45

BRUNSWICK, Ga. — Heeding the plea of President Roosevelt for war workers to stick to their jobs and keep the munitions flowing, more than 500 shipyard workers of the J. H. Jones Construction company volunteered to work without pay at the Brunswick (Ga.) shipyard on Christmas Day to speed the construction of the first Liberty ship named for a Negro and built in that establishment.

The ship is the SS William Cox, and it was named for a Negro fireman who lost his life when the SS David A. Atwater was shelled and sunk April 2, 1942. Cox, a native of Cairo, Ga., was born March 29, 1898. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Arlee Cox, of 559 Indiana Street, Savannah, Ga. 1-5-45

The volunteer drive for Christmas work on the ship "without pay as a gift to the boys overseas,' began with 80 shipfitters in the yard and rapidly spread to more than 500 Negro and white workers, Emil J. Krapt, general manager of the yard, revealed. The completion of the ship will mark up seven Liberty ships in December for the yard.

Negroes To Be First Fired In Peacetime, Aircraft Man Admits

Chicago Defender 1-6-45

By R. RANDALL IRWIN

Will the aircraft industry continue to employ Negroes in peacetime?

Will Negroes be the first to be laid off as war orders for aircraft end?

These two questions are posed continuously, in one form or another, to personnel directors by various groups, organizations, writers and individual workers. They are good, direct-to-the-point questions. Unfortunately, they cannot be answered by a simple "Yes" or "No."

Frankly, the situation as it can be surveyed thus far in advance is discouraging in many ways. This, however, is due to basic conditions which have little or nothing to do with racial distinctions or discrimination. 1-6-45

The curtailment of war production will unquestionably bring a temporary setback in the employment of Negroes, as it will in the employment of all other relatively new employees. That is unavoidable.

On the brighter side of the picture is the fact that based upon the excellent performance records of Negro workers, the doors are now open for their reemployment as the postwar production program requires their services.

Negroes have proven, in direct competition with other workers, that they are good producers and good employees.

In order to understand this situation and judge just what opportunities exist for Negro employment by the aircraft industry in future years, it is necessary to know something of the problems that accompanied the integration of Negroes into aircraft factories.

Few Negroes in Prewar Jobs

In the prewar period, the number of Negroes in aircraft plants was almost negligible. The industry was small. Airplanes were built more or less on a custom basis. Thus, the work was extremely diversified and required a wide range of skills.

Because there were many more applicants than there were available jobs, the factories were inclined to employ persons who had a background of technical or junior college training in a wide range of aeronautical skills. In addition, experienced toolmakers and members of other special trades were employed. 1-6-45

In the areas where aircraft manufacturing was performed, there was practically no supply of skilled Negroes adapted for this work.

Apply For Employment

With the beginning of the national defense program, the question arise of reaching out and tapping new sources of labor supply to meet the expansion of the aircraft industry has been likened to an explosion than an expansion; and, seeing attractive job openings, Negroes began to look to these jobs as employment opportunities. They first began to apply in very small and then in larger numbers, realizing that here was a large untapped source of production manpower, the aircraft factory management began to seek ways and means of utilizing this force that had not been employed instead of the one hours or, at first, weeks of training required.

R. RANDALL IRWIN is possibly the foremost personnel man in the aviation industry with close contact to the employment problems in this virtually new field. At present he holds the post of director of the industrial relations research service of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce of America, which includes most of the biggest plane manufacturers in the nation. He formerly was industrial relations director of the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation in California.

FDR Executive Order

Then, on June 25, 1941, the President issued an Executive Order which provided management with a basis for action in hiring Negroes, the aircraft factory management began to apply effectively and adaptability. In many cases they were selected and recommended by local Negro workers. How effective the Executive Order was shown in the groups, whose aid had been sought, talked to by top management and aircraft factories responded to the proclamation of the President's Executive Order. The first Negroes to be employed were selected for character, attitude and adaptability. In many cases they were selected and recommended by local Negro workers. First, the Executive Order was in the factory before and that the success of the policy would depend upon the way in which they adapted themselves to the social and working conditions within the factory.

Rapid Promotions

At the same time, supervisors in the particular departments to which Negroes were to be assigned were talked to by top management and informed of company policy.

As to occupational distribution, obviously the newcomers first entered at the lower brackets of jobs, but promotions were rapid. In one factory, as of August of this year, there were Negroes employed in ninety-four occupational classifications. Eighty-seven per cent of the Negroes were employed in the semi-skilled brackets, such as assembly and riveting. Only 13 per cent were in the common labor and custodial occupations.

It is true that there still are few Negroes in the supervisory or professional ranks, but the reason is the relatively short period of employment and the relative lack of experience or professional training. There are, of course, outstanding exceptions. There are engineers, personnel representatives and various professional people among the Negro employees, but numberwise, they still are relatively small.

Negro Employees Increase

It is interesting to note that whereas the total employment in aircraft has been declining since July 1943 in South California aircraft factories, the actual number of Negroes employed continues to increase. Most of the new employees now are women rather than men, and for the most part they are without previous industrial experience.

It is agreed by aircraft personnel executives that the future of Negroes in aircraft will depend upon the same factors as will affect other aircraft employees.

First of these is the curtailment of aircraft manufacturing. Unfortunately, this is wholly an unknown quantity.

Secondly, there is the matter of the number of service men and women who will want their jobs back. 1-6-45

Thirdly, much of the future employment will be governed by the operation of the lay-off provisions in labor contracts.

Seniority Hits Negroes

During the six months following V-E Day, it now appears that the employment reduction may be very largely absorbed by normal turnover. There will be a steady curtailment during the six months period following V-E Day and before V-J Day. If it is not true that the turnover will take care of the reduction needed, then the layoffs for the most part will be in accordance with seniority. Organized labor has been generally insistent in securing rather rigid seniority clauses in its agreements. In one sentence, it merely means this: The last hired, the first laid off.

The fact must be faced frankly that Negro men and women were among the last hired in aircraft, so necessarily will be among the first laid off, with no discrimination as to sex or as to color.

Perhaps the greatest problem that aircraft faces is the re-absorption of former employees who are now in the armed services. Most of the aircraft factories have several times as many employees on leave in the armed forces as they had total employment at the beginning of the national defense and war production programs.

The aircraft industry is expected to be substantially larger in the peacetime that follows the war than it was before the war, but it would have to be many, many times the size that it was, to re-absorb all the veterans that the government and the veterans expect the industry to re-absorb. 1-6-45

Proved Efficiency

Thus, the answers to the questions asked . . . Will the aircraft industry continue to employ Negroes in peacetime? . . . and, will Negroes be the first to be laid off as war orders cease? . . . must be answered affirmatively or negatively according to circumstances as they develop.

There is no slightest doubt but that Negro workers have proven their efficiency on the production line. In addition, they have shown that they can work harmoniously with white employees. There is every reason to believe that when aircraft factories need additional help for peacetime production, Negroes will be given equal opportunity to qualify for job opportunities.

On the other hand, the situation must be faced that many Negroes will be among the first to be laid off wartime production lines . . . not because they are Negroes, per se . . . but because they were among the latest to have been hired. However, those who are laid off will be rehired as the post-war production schedules require their services.

Negroes and whites, employers and employed, have reason to take pride in their joint war accomplishment in the aircraft industry. They can feel assured that future industrial relationships will be enhanced because of the efforts that all have made together in producing the airplanes which have done so much to win the war.

Negro Welders Hired By New Orleans Shipyard

Chicago Defender 2-3-45

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(ANP)—The Delta Shipbuilding company of New Orleans has notified the Region X office of the FEPC at Dallas that skilled Negro welders are now being hired, the committee announced Tuesday.

The hiring of 30 Negro production welders by the company during the early part of this month, according to the FEPC, has helped to relieve a shortage of welders reported by the firm during much of 1944. The new workers are members of the AFL International Brotherhood of Boilermakers.

Honor Negroes' War Role in Rally Sunday

The rally, sponsored by the Urban League of Cleveland, will honor Negro workers in war industries who have outstanding production records. 8-10-45

B. D. Zevin, chairman of the league's industrial committee, will welcome guests and sketch a history of Negro employment in this vicinity.

The United States Coast Guard Band, directed by Allen P. Dudley, radio technician second class, will play George Gershwin selections, and a group of Jamaican workers will entertain.

Captain Clarence L. Jamison, of the 477th Bombardment Group, Fort Knox, Ky., will present merit awards to the honored workers.

The program will also include greetings by George J. Leroux, assistant plant manager of the National Malleable & Steel Castings Co.; Frank Evans, international representative of the United Automotive Workers (AFL), and Joseph R. Kres, treasurer-manager of the Cleveland Industrial Union Council. 8-10-45

Howard M. Nash, industrial secretary of the Urban League, will be master of ceremonies.

Coast Guard Mixes Crew Finds Experiment Works

AFRO-AMERICAN

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — Lt. Carlton Skinner, former secretary of the Washington Newspaper Guild, is responsible for an experiment in the Coast Guard to combat racial discrimination at sea, according to an article appearing last week in the Guild Reporter.

Skinner, according to the article, got permission from Admiral Waesche to take a mixed crew of colored and white men and officers on a tour of duty to determine whether abandonment of the segregation policy would work out in actual operation. 4-28-45

Commander Skinner took out a mixed crew with the Atlantic fleet on the Sea Cloud, a weather patrol ship. At the end of a year, his ship got a grade AA rating on every operation.

Experiment Proves Successful

As a result of Skinner's experiment, the Guild Reporter says, the Coast Guard has concluded the experiment was a success and that the team work was first rate. The report was publicized by Drew Pearson in his syndicated column.

The Coast Guard reports the Sea Cloud's duty was unusually rough and that the ship made every patrol on schedule and that colored members of the crew were like members of any other crew.

"It would be nice to be able to say that she was an outstanding ship and that the colored members of the crew were all bursting with energy and could be seen at all hours of the day and night wiping and cleaning and studying," the report said. 4-28-45

"Actually, it wasn't so," the report concluded. "They were just like any other group of officers and enlisted men. Some were bright and quick, some were slow and lazy, some wanted to advance and be promoted. Some didn't give a damn and wanted to turn in their sacks all the time."

White Crew Works Year With Negro Skipper

Chicago, Ill.

By ALFRED E. SMITH
(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON—The first Negro skipper to command a white navy crew reported back in Washington this week. 7-28-45

He was Panama-born Lt. Clarence Samuels, skipper of the L.S. 115, a coast guard patrol vessel in the Panama canal area.

Samuels non-Jim Crow assignment, the first given a Negro officer, was exclusively reported in the Chicago Defender a year ago. This week he visited Admiral R R. Waesche, rugged commander of the U. S. Coast Guard.

Lieut. Samuels 7-28-45

"It's been a complete success," Samuels told the Defender concerning the Coast Guard's trial step. "It was my pleasantest assignment."

When Samuels first took command of the powerful patrol vessel rumors were widespread that his white crew would apply for a mass transfer rather than serve under a Negro.

After the brown-skinned veteran had read his orders to his assembled crew he put them at ease. Then in his friendly but firm fashion he talked to them briefly, invited their confidence, assured them of commendation and promotion when deserved and also assured them of punishment if deserved.

Later, when the crew, which has only two Negro members, Alfred B. Johnson, bosun's mate second class and Henry Brown, ships cook third class, presented him with an icing-inscribed birthday cake "to our skipper," Samuels said he knew complete harmony would prevail.

"There was never any difficulty," he remarked.

Samuels, now a full lieutenant, is leaner, grayer than a year ago. When interviewed he was tired but attentive, having spent 72 consecutive sleepless hours on the bridge during his trip from Panama to Norfolk. He had attended to the all-important navigation himself.

Democracy aboard the little coast guard cutter extended ashore where Samuels said he regularly visited homes of white fellow officers. He commented that democracy has been more or less assured in Panama because of the white officers and enlisted men who have married natives and who would be classed as "colored" or "Negro" in the United States. 7-28-45

Samuels' immediate future is somewhat uncertain. Admiral Kingham, commander of the 15th Naval District, has requested his return to Panama, where his fluent Spanish is an invaluable asset.

Another possible assignment for Lt. Samuels is with an all-Negro crew in the Aleutians where colored Coast Guard officers, Lt. Joseph Jenkins and Ensign Harvey Russell are now serving.

Samuels' L.S. 115 is one of the cutters which intercepts ships coming into the entrance waters of the Panama canal to check for clearance papers. At present, it is tied up at Coast Guard docks in Norfolk Area with one-third of its crew on leave.

3800 Negroes In Coast Guard 155th Anniv.

Philadelphia Tribune

Pa. 7-28-45

More than 3,800 Negro enlisted men, officers and SPARS will join approximately 170,000 fellow members of the U. S. Coast Guard in celebrating the 155th anniversary of that branch of the armed services on August 4, Coast Guard Headquarters announced here this week.

Founded in 1790 with an appropriation provided by the first Congress of the United States, the Coast Guard has fought in every major war of the United States. In the last war, the Coast Guard had the highest proportional loss of men of any of the United States services. In every major invasion of this war, from Casablanca to Normandy, from Guadalcanal to Okinawa, the Coast Guard has fought alongside the Navy to put men and supplies on the beaches.

Negro coast guardsmen have participated in the vast majority of these encounters, official announcements reveal. In one of the first major coast guard encounters with the enemy in the North Atlantic, an all-Negro gun crew on the cutter Campbell fired several rounds and scored telling hits on a Nazi U-boat, which was later rammed, and sunk by the cutter. A Negro crew member was cited for bravery when the little ICARUS sank a Nazi submarine twice her size and captured most of its crew.

As of July 3, 1945, the Coast Guard boasted 3 687 Negro enlisted men, nearl 1,000 of whom were serving as petty officers; three commissioned officers, one warrant officer and five enlisted SPARS.

In recent months, Coast Guard correspondents have reported heroic actions of Negro members on Iwo Jima, Okinawa, Majuro, Eniwetok, Saipan, Tinian, Leyte, Luzon and other landings.

In this war, the Coast Guard was the first to have contact with the enemy when Greenland radio installations were seized from the Naxis months before Pearl Harbor. That our convoys were able to reach Europe in ever increasing proportions was due in large measure to the patrol and escort work of the Coast Guard. The service now mans over 5,000 vessels. 7-28-45

3,800 Negro Coast Guardsmen And Spaars Join Fellow Members In Celebrating Branch's Anniversary

N. Y. Age

WASHINGTON, D. C. — More than 3,800 Negro enlisted men, officers and SPARS will join approximately 170,000 fellow members of the U. S. Coast Guard in celebrating the 155th anniversary of that branch of the armed services on August 4, 1945, Coast Guard Headquarters announced here this week. 7-28-45

Founded in 1790 with an appropriation provided by the first Congress of the United States, the Coast Guard has fought in every major war of the United States. In the last war, the Coast Guard had the highest proportional loss of men of any of the United States services. In every major invasion of this war, from Casablanca to Normandy, from Guadalcanal to Okinawa, the Coast Guard has fought alongside the Navy to put men and supplies on the beaches.

Negro coast guardsmen have participated in the vast majority of these encounters, official announcements reveal. In one of the first major coast guard encounters with the enemy in the North Atlantic, an all-Negro gun crew on the cutter CAMPBELL fired several rounds and scored telling hits on a Nazi U-boat, which was later rammed and sunk by the cutter. A Negro crew member was cited for bravery when the little ICARUS sank a Nazi submarine twice her size and captured most of its crew.

As of July 3, 1945, the Coast Guard boasted 3,687 Negro enlisted men, nearly 1,000 of whom were serving as petty officers; one warrant officer and five enlisted SPARS. N.Y.N.Y.

Hampton Navy School

Twofold Purpose Served by Hampton Navy School

AFRO-AMERICAN

HAMPTON, Va.—While, perhaps, not deliberately designed as such, the Navy training program at Hampton is actually capable of serving a twofold purpose.

Obviously, the primary objective is to get men ready for many duties aboad ships and to train them to perform these duties effectively and skillfully in combat.

4-28-45

The secondary purpose — one which might be described as an incidental by-product — is the opening of a numbered of post-war possibilities for the personnel receiving the training.

Trained for Specialization

The training provides basic background in Diesel engineering, sheetmetal, electric and arc welding, electricity, storekeeping, yeomanship and communications.

In a 16-week period, trainees are thoroughly grounded in fundamentals in their respective specialist courses. Eight weeks are devoted to classroom work, with the final half given over to practice.

Before coming here from Great Lakes Naval Training Station, each man is given diversified mechanical aptitude tests.

Assignment Based on Tests

After the results are collated with his background, he is assigned to the school for which his aptitude and talents seem best fitted.

4-28-45

A trainee is by no means a finished product when his 16-week schooling is completed, but he knows enough about the fundamentals to go from there.

Repots of the remarkable records being made aboard ships and at other installations by graduates of the various schools tend to substantiate any conclusion that first class training is offered here.

Visual Aids Employed

The Navy is making extensive use of visual aids. The courses are repleted with movies. Models showing operations of the mechanisms also have proved assets.

From both the standpoint of its absolute essentiality to the Navy and its counterpart value to the trainee when he eventually returns to civil status, the Diesel engineering school offers promising possibilities.

Virtually all Naval craft are utilizing Diesel engines, and, undeniably, they will be an integral part of civilian pursuits at the end of the war.

When a trainee completes his course here, he is able to dismantle and reassemble diesels and to repair their divergent parts.

With actual Navy experience added, he will be able to exploit the opportunities that Diesel engineering will offer in post-war re-construction. With advanced training, he may become an expert craftman in the field.

The yeoman school offers the kind of training that produces the most effective results in the 16-week period.

Is Made Good Secretary

When a bluejacket finishes this course, he is capable of typing at the rate of 45 to 60 words per minute and to take shorthand dictation at the rate of 60 to 70 words per minute.

From necessity, a trainee deals with Naval forms, correspondence, etc., but the various business nomenclature, habits and abilities he acquires may easily be transferred to a civilian pursuit.

Once released from service, he may engage in stenographic or secretarial work, or even apply this training to some other work field not directly related to the commercial line.

4-28-45

Communications to Be Vital

With the anticipated ascendency of air travel after the war, the signal school offers a wonderful postwar outlook for the sailor assigned to it for training.

He learns how to send messages with the blinker system, using the Morse code and semaphores. He likewise learns communication procedure—decoding and deciphering messages.

Security of receiving and sending messages is of prime importance in wartime Naval operations and should be of vital significance after the war. The need for trained personnel, therefore, will be urgent.

Other Fields Important Now

The school of basic engineering, embracing sheetmetal, shipfitting, electricity, electric and arc welding and metalsmith, speaks for itself as to potentalities for Navy men in civil life.

A shipfitter may become a plumber; a sheetmetalist a worker in ventilation and cooling systems; a welder may be used in any number of occupations, and the same goes for the metalsmith.

Carpentry and storekeeping also will open many avenues of employment for the trainee after the shooting is over.

Henry Cole of Washington, fireman second class, is shown operating a drill press in the metalsmith shop of the school of basic engineering at the Navy training center at Hampton, Va.

John J. Lewis of Norfolk, left, and Wilbur Hyson of Washington, both firemen 2/c, work together threading a pipe in the shipfitter's shop in the school of basic engineering.

Richard C. Carter of S. Hanover, Mass., fireman 2/c, is shown practicing arc welding, which along with electric welding, is offered in the Naval training program's school of engineering.

William Carnes, left, of Charleston, W.Va., watches Thomas Livingston of Washington as he takes apart a carburetor. Both firemen 2/c, they are learning to handle gasoline engines.

Graduates No Longer Made Petty Officers, Advanced One Degree

HAMPTON, Va.—Nine months ago, when a trainee graduated from Hampton Naval Training School, he would come out with a petty officer's rating in his speciality, but not any more.

Trainees either come now as seamen second class or firemen second class. They are only advanced one rating when they leave and with efficient service aboard ship or elsewhere usually earn it.

NORFOLK, Va.—The U.S. Naval Training School at Hampton Institute will be closed following the graduation program for the last class on August 15, Lieut. Commander Leroy F. Moore, commanding officer, announced last week.

5-19-45

Established on September 12, 1942, with a complement of 900, the school turned out thousands of colored sailors as specialists who are now serving on naval ships in every theater of war.

The men were trained as motor machinists, coxswains, quartermasters, electricians, signalmen, carpenters, yeomen, storekeepers and shipfitters. Some Hampton graduates were rated chief petty officers and petty officers. Commander E. Hall Downs, USNR, preceded Lieutenant Commander Moore.

Negro Sailors Now Throughout Pacific

Atlanta Daily World

HONOLULU —(ANP)— It now can be told where the great mass of Negro graduates from Great Lakes Service Schools are functioning. The slight haze of mystery which had been thrown around it is disappearing as Negro sailors and craftsmen are being flung into regular navy jobs and having their ups and downs like the rest of the sailors. 7-21-45

Comdr. Daniel W. Armstrong, too whom everybody remembers as the man who tackled the job of the special service units at Great Lakes in order to get Negroes started into the navy in the early days, is right out here with his boys. He's now attached to the staff of the commander, service force, U. S. Pacific fleet, and that's where most of the colored sailors are functioning. Atlanta, Ga.

NORMAL PATTERN

The story of the participation of Negro units in the naval operations of the Pacific war has followed a normal American pattern. In the earlier stages of development of plans and the execution of them there have been strengths and weaknesses, excellent performances and poor performances. There is no doubt today, however, that the record of Negro naval units in swinging to strengths and excellent performances. Many factors account for this trend.. Seasoning and experience of the men themselves, some of whom now have from two to three years of naval service to their credit, have been a great factor. 7-21-45

From the Pacific coast, where they operate patrol ships and harbor craft a swell as man shore facilities, to the beaches and hills of Okinawa and on the high seas between, Negro men of the navy are shouldering their assignments with confidence and ability.

IN HAWAIIAN ISLANDS

In the Hawaiian islands, particularly at the many stations surrounding Pearl Harbor, many thousands perform innumerable duties in the operations which carry the war forward. These include naval air stations, naval ammunition depots and the vast naval supply depot. 7-21-45

Negro officers carry a large share of the administrative load at Manana Naval barracks where one is the first lieutenant and maintenance officer, another the disbursing officer, another the commissary officer, and others doctors and dentists.

Negro petty officers at many stations are carrying out duties in administration, military leadership and skilled specialties such as work on aviation engines, communications and transfer of high explosives. Yeoman handle office management duties, storekeepers concern themselves with the vast quantities of supplies passing thru to the fleet, gunner's mates supervise ammunition activities; and machinist's mates keep mechanical devices in operation.

LOGISTICS SUPPORT COMPANIES

At Iroquois Point, on the island of Oahu, there is a major training activity through which many new logistic support companies are passing for training on the way to duty in combat areas. Both Negro and white companies are being trained identically and will perform identical duties side by side when they reach their destination.

ON HIGH SEAS

On the sea, many of the great fleet auxiliaries carry substantial numbers of Negroes in their deck and engineering forces. It is no rarity to find a Negro quartermaster or seaman standing a steersman watch on the bridge, or a Negro signalman at the blinkers or flagbag on the signal bridge, or a Negro gunner's mate readying the ship's heavy guns for action.

IN MARIANAS

In the Marianas islands at Guam, Saipan and Tinain, units of navy Negreos are carrying on activities of vital importance to the fleet in harrying the enemy. Some of these activities are less dramatic and perhaps less glamorous than those of many of their shipmates mentioned, but they are neverthless performing essential military duties at the supply depots ammunition depots and operating bases of that area.

ON OKINAWA

On Okinawa, nearing the end of the long westward march to the heart of the Japanese empire, American forces include some Negro navy logistics support companies. Detailed accounts of these units must be withheld until operation can be made completely revealed and details obtained, but early reports gave clear indication that they have performed remarkably well under difficult operational circumstances.

Skippers Find Navy's Non-Bias Policy Works

Chicago, Ill. Defender 10-20-45

HONOLULU — (ANP) — Captains and other executive officers aboard ships that have applied the navy's non-discrimination policy toward Negro sailors have reported the results as successful, said Lester B. Granger, National Urban League official and a traveling representative for Secretary Forrestal.

Granger, a World War I artillery officer, said that Washington is sincerely and honestly trying to execute the race code that gives Negro sailors the same chance for ratings as other sailors have. But the farther he has traveled from Washington in his tour for the navy, the more evidence he has found of violations and ignorance of the policy. 10-20-45

"This policy, which opposes that of segregated service, had to be worked out cautiously and skillfully to overcome the widespread prejudice that Negroes would make only good messmen aboard ship," he said, "and not good machinists, electricians and other technical rates. Nearly all the skippers reported the policy successful after it was given a fair trial."

The navy's traveling race relation expert remarked that "the whole thing is largely a matter of convincing officers of the fairness and workability of the policy. The hardest to deal with is the well-meaning but timid officer."

He prophesied a postwar migration similar to that which followed World War I when 1,000,000 Negroes left the South to make homes in the North and West. Negro veterans will insist on their civilian right to equal treatment as regards to employment, wages, veteran's benefits and many other things, he believes.

Granger is accompanied on his tour of navy bases by Matthew Bullock, chairman of the Massachusetts State Parole Commission and former Dartmouth football star; Lt. Sylvester White, a Chicagoan and one of the first 12 Negroes commissioned in the navy; Harry McAlpin, White House correspondent; and Lt. Robert Roper, representing the bureau of naval personnel. 10-20-45

His tour will include visits to the Marianas, Okinawa, the Philippines and other naval installations.

Marine Corp

Only 2800 Colored Men Wanted, Says Marine Corp

Afro-American

By JAMES HICKS

WASHINGTON (NNPA)—The following questions were asked and answers given in an exclusive interview with a Marine Corps officer in the public information division of the Marine Corps headquarters: 11-24-45

Q. Is it true, as Lester Granger charged, that the Marine Corps is following a strict policy of segregation in dealing with colored Marines? Baltimore

A. The word "strict" is not correct. The policy of segregation of colored Marines is the same policy that applies to any combat unit. All men eat and sleep with their own organization.

In each division headquarters the Marine Corps has what is known as a Steward Branch composed of colored personnel who do the cooking and baking and other such jobs for the officers of the division's headquarters. These men sleep in a tent together, but the tent is located in a row of tents with white marines. They do not eat with the white enlisted Marines but eat at the officer's mess where they work.

Q. If question number one is true, will this policy be followed in the peacetime Marine Corps?

A. The policy as outlined in the answer to question number one will remain unchanged.

Q. Are colored men being accepted for enlistment or re-enlistment in the Regular Marine Corps? Are there any colored men now in the Regular Marine Corps? 11-24-45

A. Colored men are now being accepted for enlistments and re-enlistments in the Regular Marine Corps. Records are not available at this time which would show whether or not there are colored men in the Regular Marines. Present plans call for about 2,800 in the Regular Marines. We hope that the 2,800 will come from the trained men already in the corps whom we hope will shift over to the regulars. If more than 2,800 seek enlistment we will take the best 2,800.

Q. Were there any colored Marine combat units committed to combat in World War II?

A. The 51st Antiaircraft Battalion was in the Marshall and Gilbert Island and has one battle star. The 52d Antiaircraft Battalion landed after the assault troops in Guam and may have done patrol work but the complete records are not in yet. The Steward Branches of each division which are composed of colored personnel went in with their divisions on Iwo Jima, Saipan and Tinian.

Quota Filled, Volunteers Now Rejected

Chicago Defender

Spokesman For Marines Admits New Ban On Recruits

By JAMES L. HICKS

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA)—There will be no new Negro Leathernecks, the Marine Corps admitted this week. Chi. Def.

Col. Edward Hagenah, executive officer of the Marine Corps' division of public information, said that no further enlistments are being accepted from colored men.

The Navy bureau of public information declined to comment on the charge of Lester P. Granger, special assistant to the Secretary of the Navy and executive secretary of the National Urban league, that Negroes are being refused enlistment in the Marine Corps.

Hedge On Integration

In reducing its peacetime strength from half a million to 100,000 men, Marine Corps officials said that 18,000 Negro Leathernecks now in the service fill the present quota.

The Marine Corps also hedged on the question of integration for colored Marines already in the service.

Brig. Gen. Gerald C. Thomas, director of plans and policies, admitted to the Associated Negro Press that there had been no marked degree of integration in the branch. He refused to say that integration might not be "in the cards," but that hurdle had not yet been reached. 11-17-45

Granger's Recommendations

Granger, recently returned from an inspection tour of Pacific naval installations, recommended to Navy Secretary James Forrestal improvements which "can be brought about on a permanent basis for an enlarged peacetime Navy."

Granger's statement was interpreted to mean that he had recommended to Secretary of the Navy James Forrestal that wider use be made of colored personnel in all branches of the Navy, but the stand taken by the Marine Corps would indicate that such a policy has not been adopted for the peacetime Marine Corps.

The marine corps, which was 170 years old last Saturday, broke a long precedent when Negroes were accepted for the first time in April, 1942. Last week Brig. Gen. Gerald C. Thomas of Greenville, N. C., and Slater, Mo., director of the division of plans and policies, was able to say flatly to the ANP:

"The Negro is in the marines to stay as far as we are concerned. They have done good work in the Pacific and there is no intention to saw them off."

In point of planning for the future the marine corps has gone further than any other branch of the navy. In August, 1939, congress had set an authorized strength for the corps of 27,400 but only 17,000 of this was ever attained. The new strength is expected to be about 100,000.

How Negroes Will Be Used

On the basis of this new figure there will be provision for a minimum of 2,800 of colored personnel. Of that number 1,847 will be in the fleet marine force—the combat organization—and the remainder in other activities. A further breakdown was given:

Anti-aircraft (1 btn.)	967 men
Depot and ammunition	880 men
Stewards branch	704 men
Non-available (sick and in transit)	249 men

"These are our plans at the present time," General Thomas said. "There is some thought that we can use more but we want to see what congress will do about the post-war Marine size before we do any more planning."

At present there are 17,000 Negroes in the marine corps or slightly more than four percent of the total strength. On October 15, there were 3,550 non-commissioned officers—corporal and above. Better than 74 per cent of the Negroes have served overseas, General Thomas said.

Asked if there had been any special reports made on Negro performance, General Thomas declared confidently there had been none. "We didn't expect these fellows to fall down and we saw no need for specific reports on colored personnel," he declared. "They came in, did their work, and that was all there was to it."

He was not able to discuss reenlistments yet because their letters are only now going out to the field. He did say, however, that "any man, upon discharge, who desires to re-enlist in the marine corps can do so. We will re-enlist them in their present rank. We are making every effort —and our stress is on people in service, trained and tried—and we are going to make effort to fill our requirements for Negro personnel from those in the marine corps."

Urban League Sec'y Says Negroes Are Refused In Marines

The Call, Kansas City Missouri. 11-16-45

Colonel Edward Hagenah Says Corps Is Reducing Its Present Strength to Peacetime Strength; Now Has 18,000 Colored

By JAMES L. HICKS
For the NNPA News Service

WASHINGTON.—The Navy Department's Bureau of Public Information declined to comment this week on the charge of Lester P. Granger, special assistant to the Secretary of the Navy and executive secretary of the National Urban League, that colored men were being refused enlistment in the Regular Marine Corps.

Colonel Edward Hagenah, executive officer of the Marine Corps' Division of Public Information, said the Marine Corps is reducing its present strength from 500,000 to a peacetime strength of 100,000 and, since it now has 18,000 colored Marines, no further enlistments are being accepted from colored men.

This statement by Colonel Hagenah contrasted sharply with a statement by Granger in his press conference at the Navy Department, November 2, that he has "indicated some ways in which I believe improvements can be brought about on a permanent basis for an enlarged peacetime Navy." 11-16-45

Used Colored Personnel

Granger's statement was interpreted to mean that he had recommended to Secretary of the Navy James Forrestal that wider use be made of colored personnel in all branches of the Navy, but the stand taken by the Marine Corps would indicate that such a policy has not been adopted for the peacetime Marine Corps.

At his press conference Granger admitted that the Navy is permitting downright discrimination against colored personnel in the Pacific, that many naval commanders openly exhibit their racial prejudices to their colored personnel and that, now that the fighting is over, the Marine Corps is refusing to accept Negroes for enlistment in the peacetime Marine Corps.

Despite these facts, Mr. Granger insisted that the Navy's policy towards colored personnel has improved greatly over the last three years and, in the next breath, he hotly denied charges by colored leaders that he is a "tool of the Navy Department."

Summarizing his 30-day inspection tour of racial conditions at Pacific bases, Granger revealed that the most consistent complaints he received from colored servicemen concerned slowness of promotion and racial segregation.

Charging the Marine Corps with following a strict policy of segregation in the Pacific, Granger said that colored Marines now on active duty were being turned down when they applied for enlistment in the Regular Marine Corps. 11-16-45

Lash at Critics

He lashed out at critics who have charged him with being a "tool of the Navy," asked them to "look at the record," and declared that racial improvement in the Navy over the last three years had been remarkable.

Granger stated that his party could not have been expected to cover every phase of the various situations which it encountered but that its visit had brought comfort as well as information to colored personnel and had served as a corrective and advisory influence in dealing with colored officers.

Members of Granger's official party which visited nine island bases and 47 separate Naval activities while in the Pacific included Matthew W. Bullock of Boston, chairman of the Massachusetts State Parole Commission; Harry S. McAlpin, newspaperman; Lieutenant (junior grade) Sylvester White of the Navy's Bureau of Public Information; Commander Daniel Armstrong, Liaison Officer for colored Personnel in the Pacific, and Lieutenant R. P. Roper of the Bureau of Naval Personnel.

The Marine Corps Should Quickly Make Up Its Mind

Journal & Guide Norfolk, Va. 11-24-45

(Story on Front Page)

SINCE the commissioning of 2nd Lt. FREDERICK C. BRANCH as an officer in the nation's Marine Corps was in the nature of a symbolical advance toward democratization of a service branch totally closed to colored Americans until the onset of war, it appears that the ordinary reasons for placing new officers, including him, immediately on inactive status might have been waived.

It takes away some of the understandable satisfaction that, at long last, a tentative and indicative step long needed had been taken by the Marines, the last branch of service to open up to other than white-only enlistments.

It never took in any Negro women marines (nor did the Coast Guard accept any colored Spars), although the Army has our women in its Women's Corps and Nursing Service and the Navy has a token cadre of Waves and one nurse at least.

The interpretation already put on the corps' action in commissioning and then de-activating Lt. BRANCH is that the action is in line with its policy of keeping colored personnel in subordinate positions. It does leave it with no colored man above the rank of master sergeant.

The corps is of course reducing personnel and all the white officers in Lt. BRANCH's class were similarly put on inactive status. The Negro group does not ask for special advantage, but the whole setup in the corps with respect to the Negro is so special itself that an exception would not be difficult to justify and, in fact, seems imperative.

The de-activation of Lt. BRANCH also is inconsistent with an announcement last Friday that the corps would accept qualified colored men at once for enlistments. This contradicts or supercedes an earlier and contrary statement of policy. The result is confusion.

LESTER GRANGER on his return from the Pacific charged that Negro marines were being turned down for enlistments. 11-24-45

It behooves the corps to make up its mind. And it certainly ought to have Negro officers if it is going to retain any colored personnel under its non-integration policy or otherwise.

NAVY, COAST GUARD AND MARINE CORPS TO KEEP NEGRO RATINGS AND COMMISSIONS DURING PEACE

The Black Dispatch

Forrestal Insists Upon Using Race Personnel To Fullest Extent

NEGRO VOLUNTEERS WILL BE ACCEPTED

WASHINGTON.—(ANP)—Negroes with ratings and commissions are in the navy for keeps—and that goes for the coast guard and the marine corps.

The Associated Negro Press has just completed a survey of the plans of the several branches that comprise the navy as to the future role of Negroes in the service. Unequivocal statement made by top-ranking officials of the branches attest to the fact that experience growing out of World War II in the utilization of Negro personnel has substantially justified their inclusion in the respective post-war organizations.

This is in sharp contrast to things which happened following World War I, when Negroes in the navy were demobilized, and those coming in later were confined to the steward's branch of the service. 11-17-45

Whereas experience is justifping this position, much of the credit for this straightforward position is stemming from the office of Navy Secy. James V. Forrestal, who in the short time that he has headed up the department, has shown a greater insistence upon fullest utilization of Negro personnel than any previous secretary.

Vice Adm. Louis E. Denfield, since Sept. 11 chief of the bureau of naval personnel, was quite frank in his statement. "I believe we will use Negroes more extensively as their training and experience would indicate," he said. "As they get to be chief petty officers we will use them to the fullest extent of their capabilities.

Reminded of what had happened after the last war, Adm. Denfeld said, "I don't think we will ever go back to that. Certainly," he added, "I have no feeling about it." 11-17-45

Denfeld said that the future navy will be a volunteer organization, and that Negro volunteers will be accepted with no holds barred. Reenlistments are now coming in at the rate of 500 a day, he said, but no breakdown was available on Negro re-enlistments. The service will continue to adhere to the 10 percent of complement quota set in 1943, but will show no hesitance about going over that if enlistments warrants. Congress is authorizing a peacetime strength of 500,000 men for the navy.

Negroes were admitted to general service in the navy in April, 1942, for the first time since World War 1. On V-J day, there was a peak strength of 165,000 enlisted Negroes serving with the navy. On Nov. 6 there were 53 commissionel officers, four nurses and 23 officer candidates. These figures are exclusive of the marine corps and coast guard. 11-17-45

This personnel was assigned to shore estatblishments in continental United States, at Pacific basses, aboard auxiliary vessels and on sub-chasers, PC, DE, minesweepers, and district craft.

Policy Of Corps Is Confused

Journal & Guide
Norfolk, Va.
11-24-45

Never Given Chance Actually To Serve As 1st Race Officer

By James L. Hicks
NNPA Staff Writer

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Second Lt. Frederick C. Branch of Charlotte, N. C., who on Nov. 10 became the first and only colored man ever to be commissioned in the United States Marine Corps, was placed on an inactive duty status as soon as he received his commission, it was learned this week.

This action, which is in line with the Marine Corps' policy of keeping its colored personnel in subordinate positions, still leave the pride of the United States fighting forces without a colored man, above the rank of master sergeant, who can issue a qualified order in the Marine Corps.

HAS NO AUTHORITY

Having been placed on inactive duty, Lieutenant Branch has no authority of command over marines on active duty, and unless recalled to active duty, falls into the same category as any civilian who has graduated from college and received a reserve commission as second lieutenant in the Reserve Officers Training Corps.

In explaining this action, the Marine Corps' bureau of public information fell back on its statement of last week, that the corps was reducing its personnel from 500,000 to 100,000 and pointed out that all white officers of the class in which Lieutenant Branch had graduated also had been placed on inactive duty. 11-24-45

This explanation, however, was inconsistent with the announcement of the Corps' Division of Public Information last Friday, that effective immediately the Marine Corps will begin accepting qualified colored men for enlistments.

COMPLETE REVERSAL

This was a complete reversal of the policy announced by Colonel Edward Hagenah, executive officer of the corps division of public information, who unequivocally stated that the Marine Corps was reducing its strength and no enlistments were being accepted from colored men. 11-24-45

Colonel Hagenah confirmed the charge made by Lester Granger, Urban League secretary, upon his return from a tour of inspection of naval installations in the Pacific, that colored marines were being turned down for enlistments.

When asked whether Colonel Hagenah had erred in making his statement, the Marine Corps said that Colonel Hagenah's statement had been correct at the time it was made but that the policy had been changed "in the last few days."

All this gives rise to the question: Why place the only colored officer in the Marine Corps on inactive duty when colored personnel are still being accepted for enlistments even though the Corps is reducing its strength?

The answer is not hard to find.

Will Have No Command of Men on Active Duty

POLICY REVERSED

11-24-45

Pat Explanation Given by Officials of Corps

WASHINGTON (NNPA)—2nd Lt. Frederick C. Branch, of Charlotte, N.C., who, on Nov. 19 became the first of his race ever to be commissioned in the United States Marine Corps, was placed on an inactive duty status as soon as he received his commission, it was learned last Friday.

This action, which is in line with the Marine Corp's policy of keeping its colored personnel in subordinate positions, still leave the pride of the United States fighting forces without a colored man, above the rank of master sergeant, who can issue a qualified order in the Marine Corps.

Same As Civilian

Having been placed on inactive duty, Lt. Branch has no authority of command over marines on active duty and, unless recalled to active duty, falls into the same category as any civilian who has graduated from college and received a reserve commission as second lieutenant in the Reserve Officers Training Corps.

In explaining this action, the Marine Corps' bureau of public information fell back on its statement of last week, that the corps was reducing its personnel from 500,000 to 100,000 and pointed out that all white officers of the class in which Lt. Branch had graduated also had been placed on inactive duty.

This explanation, however, was inconsistent with the announcement of the Corps' Division of Public Information last Friday, that effective immediately the Marine Corps will begin accepting qualified colored men for enlistments. 11-24-45

Want No More Men

This was a complete reversal of the policy announced by Colonel Edward Hagenah, executive officer of the corps division of public information, who unequivocally stated that the Marine Corps was reducing its strength and no enlistments were being accepted from colored men.

Colonel Hagenah confirmed the charge made by Lester Granger, Urban League secretary, upon his return from a tour of inspection of naval installations in the Pacific, that colored marines were being turned down for enlistments.

When asked whether Colonel Hagenah had erred in making his statement, the Marine Corps said that Colonel Hagenah's statement had been correct at the time it was made but that the policy had been changed "in the last few days."

Answer Is Easy

All this gives rise to the question: Why place the only colored officer in the Marine Corps on inactive duty when colored personnel are still being accepted for enlistments, even though the Corps is reducing its strength?

The answer is not hard to find.

Former Pfc. Branch, graduated from the First Officers' Reserve Class, of the Officers' Applicant Battalion, at Hadnot Point, Camp Lejeune.

Enlisting in May, 1943, Branch trained at Montford Point, Camp Lejeune. In January, 1944, he joined the 51st Defense Battalion and served seven months overseas.

He started V-12 training at Purdue University in Sept., 1944, and completed the course with high scholastic honors.

On V-J Day, Branch was among the Marines given the alternative of being discharged immediately or attending the six-week Reserve Officers' Class.

Attend Temple University

He attended Ferderick E. Bellows High School, Mamaroneck, N.Y., and Johnson C. Smith University, where he won the freshman award for scholastic achievement. He was a member of the Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity. Branch was a student at Temple University when he was drafted.

The Marine is married to the former Miss Camilla Robinson of 2518 N. 22d St., Philadelphia. A graduate of Philadelphia's Girls' High, Mrs. Branch also attended Temple University.

Lt. Branch's parents, the Rev. and Mrs. James Matthew Branch, live at 305 W. Second St., Charlotte. Rev. Mr. Branch, a minister for 30 years, is pastor of the Clinton Chapel AME Zion Church, Charlotte.

Two brothers of the Marine are in the service. Second Lieutenant Matthew D. Branch is serving with the 372d Army Infantry in the Pacific and Army First Sergeant Milton C. Branch is in Europe. William B., youngest of the four brothers, is a student at Lt. Branch plans to continue his studies at the University of Pennsylvania.

Negro Marine Tried By Court-Martial At Algiers Naval Base

The Informer
Houston, Texas
2-10-45

NEW ORLEANS — Charged with leaving his post of duty and attempting to rape a woman on the night of November 25, 1944 at the Naval Ammunition Depot, McAlester, Oklahoma, Marine Private, First Class David Hickman, 24, was tried by court martial at the Naval Repair Base, Algiers, La., on Wednesday and Thursday. At press-time, the official verdict of the court was awaited.

"Truly American"

"During the entire testimony in the court martial trial of Pfc. David Hickman at the Algiers Naval Repair Base last week, there was not a single reference to the racial identity of the accused nor the color of the alleged victim," stated John E. Rousseau, Jr., Informer reporter, who covered the trial.

Because New Orleans is the headquarters of the Eighth Naval district, Pfc. Hickman was brought here for trial on December 13, 1944.

According to evidence presented in the trial by Lt. Commander Lewis, prosecutor, Hickman had been assigned to guard a parking lot at the Naval Ammunition Depot, McAlester, Oklahoma, on the night of November 25, 1944 between the hours of 8 and midnight.

Shortly after nine o'clock that night a white woman (whose name is purposely withheld) was set upon by an assailant who choked her, and threw her to the ground on a muddy footpath, a short distance from Hickman's post of duty, it was said out during the trial. The woman screamed and fought the attacker off and attracted the attention of persons nearby, who, like the woman, were going to their homes at the completion of the day's work as civilian employees in the ship service canteen, probers were told.

Officials of the Naval Ammunition Depot were notified of the incident and a search was instituted, witnesses testified.

Hickman, whose post of duty was not far from the attack scene, was questioned as to whether or not he had seen or heard anything, his superior officers declared, but he replied he had not. The search ended after the vicinity had been scoured and no trespasser was found. Hickman has steadfastly maintained he is innocent. 2-10-45

Officers testified under oath that they had noticed mud on Hickman's trousers at the knees; mud on his hand, and fresh abrasions on his face. The parking lot patrolled by Pfc. Hickman was of asphalt and gravel and there was no place on his post where he could have gotten mud on his shoes, trousers and hands, it was testified. Naval personnel on duty at the McAlester Naval Ammunition Depot on the night of the affair were brought to New Orleans for the trial.

Sgt. Arthur Wright, U. S. Marines, a native of Jacksonville, Fla., took the stand and testified that he is stationed at the marine barracks, main gate at the Naval ammunition depot, McAlester, Okla. He told of assigning men to their posts on November 25, and pointed out on a map produced by the prosecution the section to which he had assigned Hickman.

At the beginning of the search, he had noticed mud on Hickman's trousers at the knee and had wondered how he had become muddy since the entire lot patrolled by Hickman was gravelled, Sgt. Wright testified.

Marine Sergeant Robert S. Youngdeer, an American-Indian, stationed at the Naval ammunition depot, Mc Alester, Okla., on the night of the incident, testified he had noticed mud on Hickman's feet, knees and right hand, and had noticed fresh scratches on both sides of his nose. Hickman made the excuse that he had perhaps rubbed the mud from one of the automobiles parked on the lot, Sergeant Youngdeer testified. 2-10-45

Marine Sgt. Eugene C. Ross, also stationed at the marine barracks on the night of the attack, told how he had brought Hickman to the medical officer for examination about an hour after the incident had been reported. He also testified that he had noticed the mud on Hickman's clothing and the scratches on his face. Sgt. Ross added that he noticed Hickman's trouser flap was unbuttoned when his field jacket was removed.

Commander Arthur L. Shultz, senior medical officer at Mc Alester Naval Ammunitnon depot, testified as to the condition of Hickman's clothing; and that the scratches on Hickman's face were fresh when he examined them and could not have been inflicted more than two or 3 hours earlier at the most. There were not physical evidences to sustain a theory that Hickman had attempted to commit rape, Commander Shultz said under cross-examination. 2-10-45

Capt. Charles M. Briggs, of the Naval ammunition depot, Mc Alester, Oklahoma, took the stand and told how he had noticed the mud on Hickman's clothing, and scratches on his face. He also told of visiting Hickman, in the brig and discussing the case with him, after being ordered to do so by the commander.

"I told Hickman he could put his statement in writing if he cared to," Captain Briggs testified.

Lt. Col. David W. Mooy testified as to the methods used in assigning men to guard posts, and also said Hickman had been a good marine and had never been in trouble, at that station prior to the incident.

Lt. Commander Thomas L. Shean, USNR, McAlester Naval Ammunition Depot, maintainance officer, testified as to the lighting of the parking lot guarded by the accused and further declared that it would be impossible to identify any person standing 25 or 30 yards on the outside of the parking lot, because the lights were not designed to carry for that distance.

Lt. Commander William J. Bivens and Attorney A. P. Tureaud of New Orleans, defended Hickman.

The statement purportedly written by Hickman, was submitted as evidence by the prosecution. The admissibility of the statement was challenged by the defense counsel. The court sustained the defense counsel's objection and ruled the statement inadmissable as evidence.

In the cross examinations, the defense counsel established the fact that the alleged attack victim had never identified Hickman as her assailant. The scratches on Hickman's face were previously accounted for when Hickman told his superior officers he had sustained them in a basketball game. 2-10-45

The trial court consisted of nine United States Navy officers, headed by Captain Arthur E. Jones.

When interviewed, Pfc. Hickman, a well built, handsome, young man, said he is a native of Center, Miss. He is married, father of one child and has been in the armed forces since March, 1943, he said.

Since he entered the service and even during his arrest and incarceration, he had been treated fairly and had no complaint whatsoever, he declared.

Negro Marines Iwo Casualties

Pittsburgh Courier 4-7-45 p2

IWO JIMA—(ANP)—Negro marines have been under fierce Japanese artillery and mortar fire and have fought bravely side by side with combat troops to help stem counter attacks.

Piling on the torn beaches, which were systematically being raked by shells lobbed on them from Japanese gun positions in the volcanic hills, were three depot companies and one ammunition. They did a wonderful job of handling vital supplies such as ammunition, food and water in ship to shore operations, day and night.

Some of our Negro casualties evacuated from Iwo Jima to an Army field hospital on this advanced American base are: Pfc. Raymond Glen, Jonesboro, Ark.; Pvt. James Hawthorne, Seneca, S. C., and Pfc. James Davis, Philadelphia.

ABOUT THE MARINES

Editor: As you know, in June, 1942, the Marine Corps broke its lily-white tradition by accepting Negroes into its organization. On June 15, 1944, which was D-Day for the Saipan invasions, Negro marines were experiencing for the first time jungle warfare. We stormed the beaches under heavy Japanese mortar fire and found out that was was really hell. I'm proud to say that of the four colored marine companies that participated in that bloody battle, my company received the Presidential Citation for meritorious service. Since then other Negro marines have been used in operations and have added glory to their history. — CPL. ERNIE STEWART. N.Y.N.Y.

Archbishop Hails Heroism of U.S. Merchant Mariners

New Orleans, La.

(By NCWC News Service)

The American merchant seaman has emerged from World War II in a blaze of glory, Most Rev. Joseph F. Rummel, Archbishop of New Orleans, said at a banquet on the first anniversary observance, last week, of the United Seamen's Service-George Washington Carver Hotel for Negro merchant marines.

The American merchant seamen, Archbishop Rummel said, has attained "newer heights of honor in the esteem of his fellow-countrymen, a niche of honor and gratitude in America's hall of fame. His task has been to transport men food, clothing, munitions, everything needed by the armed forces on a thousand battlefronts. He stretched the lines that formed a liaison between a feverishly productive home front and a courageously fighting battlefront. Those lines were reddened with blood and spotted with danger and death constantly lurking on and under the waters and in the air."

Paying tribute to Dr. Carver, scientist of Tuskogee institute, for whom the hotel was named and whose picture was unveiled at the banquet, the Most Reverend Archbishop said: "He was born a slave, but knew how to take advantage and culture. As student, scientist and educator he ranks high among the greatest of the generation."

Rabbi Julian B. Feibelman gave the invocation, Rev. L. L. Haynes gave the benediction and Rev. Vincent O'Connell, S. M., Notre Dame seminary, said the grace.

Two Negro Companies Cited By Navy For Service With Marines

New York Age 7-21-45

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Two Army Transportation Corps port companies, the 311th and 539th, have been awarded the coveted Unit Citation by the Navy for their heroic services with the Fourth Marine Division, Reinforced, during the invasion of the Marianas, the War Department announced Monday.

This was the second time the Navy Unit Citation was presented to Army units and the first time that an Army Service Forces unit in any theater had received the award. First to win the red-gold-and-blue ribbon was the American Division, now on Cebu in the Philippines, for its work on Guadalcanal.

The official citation lauded the 311th and 539th for "outstanding performance in combat during the seizure of the Japanese-held islands of Saipan and Tinian in the Marianas, from June 15 to August 1, 1944." 7-21-45

During the invason the two port companies were attached to the Fourth Marine Division. Despite fanatical Jap counter-offensives and casualites within their ranks, the portmen unloaded ammunition and other supplies in the face of enemy fire, hour after hour, without relief.

Training of the port companies, which are composed of Negro personnel, took place in Hawaii, under the command of Lieutenant General Robert C. Richardson, Jr., Commanding General of the Pacific Ocean Areas.

The 311th was activated at Indiantown Gap Military Reservation, Pennsylvania, and received its advanced training at the Seattle Port of Embarkation. The 539th, activated at the Charleston Port of Embarkation, was trained at the New Orleans Port of Embarkation and the Hampton Port of Embarkation—all Transportation Corps installations.

Marines Prove Worth In First Waves Of Pacific Operations

6-30-45

Pittsburgh, Pa.

By CHARLES H. LOEB, NNPA War Correspondent

SOMEWHERE IN THE PACIFIC—"The Negro race can well be proud of the work performed by an ammunition company as they have demonstrated in every respect that they appreciate the privilege of wearing a Marine uniform and serving with Marines in combat . . . in the eyes of the entire division they have earned a WELL DONE."

To earn this high praise from former Commanding General W. H. Rupertus of the First Marine Division, Negro Marines had to live up to the ultimate in fighting tradition of the Corps . . . and Marine Corps tradition is lofty!

Members of the Marine ammunition companies are hand-picked for size and courage. In the assault landings on Peleliu last September, and throughout the fierce fighting that followed, members of this ammunition company proved that they possessed both.

IN FIRST WAVES OF FIGHTING

They swarmed over the beach with the first waves of fighting Marines; loaded vital ammunition under fire, lugged it to the front lines, and brought back wounded on the return trips. Then, when the going got really tough, they were thrown into the line to defend vital sectors of our still inadequate beachhead.

Two of its members were awarded the Order of the Purple Heart. One of them, Pvt. Dryel Augustus Shuler, son of Mrs. Charlye Mae Shuler, Springfield, Mass., is still with the company on this island; the other, Pvt. John Copeland, son of Mrs. Willie Copeland, Philadelphia, Pa., is buried beneath one of the white crosses in the little cemetery on Peleliu.

MEN RESTLESS FOR ACTION

The ammunition company was not fighting when I caught up with them out here, but I found them eager to be off to the wars. They know that the work they are doing on this islands is vital. Ammunition must be sorted, loaded and shipped to the forward areas, but the men are restless for action.

Under the Marine policy of assigning non-commissioned Negro officers to Negro outfits as rapidly as they can be made, I found many rated men handling the details that make a company click. The lone white NCO was First Sgt. George E. Richards, Philadelphia, Pa., a veteran of nine years in the Marines.

Others in the outfit include:

SERGEANTS: James B. Diggs, Washington, D. C.; F. W. Gaffney, Swansea, S. C.; J. Harlee, Greensboro, N.o C.; G. H. Nagle, New York City, and Joseph Woolridge, Newark, N. J.

COOKS: Chief Cook B. E. Morris, Monerey, Calif., and Field Cooks J. Maffett, La Grange, Ga., and A. McDonald, New York City.

CORPORALS: L. B. Atkins, Atlanta, Ga.; J. B. Billups, Colembus, Miss.; H. Dillahunt, New Bern, N. C.; A. Fontenot, Beaumont, Tex.; O. V. Hanks, Atlanta, Ga.; H. L. Paige, Norfolk, Va.; W. Russell, Tuskegee, Ala.; J. A. Shields, Suffolk, Va.; O. C. Watson, Hugo, Okla.; W. O. Wesley, Washington, D. C., and B. T. Williams, Memphis, Tenn.

ACTING COOKS include W. Alexander, Frederick, Okla.; S. B. Avant, Wilmington, Del.; C. R. Crawford, Jacksonville, Fla., and N. Jackson, Natchitoches, La.

COMPANY CLERKS: Pfc. Leonard Franklin Mayo, Morton, Pa.; Pfc. Rudolph Boush, Washington, D. C., and Sgt. Charles Robinson, Dayton, Ohio.

MASTER OF "HOWARD" — Capt. H. L. Nillson, native of Malmo, Sweden, is master of the SS Howard Victory, namesake of Howard University. The ship was launched May 14. The "Howard," which will soon move troops overseas, passed a series of rigid tests on a trial run June 5.

Our Marines On Okinawa Display Superb Courage

New York Amsterdam News 7-14-45 N.Y.N.Y.

By PFC. JARVIS ROVINSON and PFC. LEONARD VAUGHN
(ANP Marine Combat Correspondent)

SOMEWHERE IN THE PACIFIC (ANP)—Near the southern front lines on Okinawa, where bitter fighting raged, colored marines of the Third Marine Ammunition company displayed courage in the execution of their duties which was the supplying of ammunition to a famed marine division, while under intense irregular Japanese fire.

South of Naha, those gallant leather necks steadily suplied tons of precious ammunition while Nipponese artillery and mortar barrages made their area a roaring inferno. Once they were camped as close as 500 yards from the front line fighting, but this position and the violent shelling were old stories for them. These invasion veterans had experienced enemy resistance before in the Marianas. 7-14-45

Another peril set in again for them as they were guarding a bridge during a pause in their duties, when word was passed of a Jap breakthrough. Reports reaching them indicated that the Nips were approaching the object which was their job to protect. The destruction of this bridge would help the Japs in that it would erase it as a supply route for the advancing marines. The very splendid composure of those men while in wait for the attack (which somehow never came off), rated praise from both the officers from the company as well as those from the division. Once again the company had performed an unfaltering duty in the action against the little men from Japan.

The lasting tribute paid to the third amphibious corps for its great victory on Okinawa must include this Negro marine corps unit and others who have shown bravery and heroism while serving with combat teams in the fury of the Ryukus islands. 7-14-45

Marines Get First Glimpse Of Japan's "Holy" Mountain

Huston Post 7-22-

The Informer

By Charles H. Loeb
NNPA War Correspondent

WITH AMERICAN OCCUPATION FORCES IN SAGAMI BAY—(August 28)—It was a sight to bring exultation to the heart of any American—the power of the fleet that stretched for 100 miles across the Pacific before it steamed into Sagami Bay, 30 miles south of Tokyo, in preparation for the landing of our occupation forces. With the breaking of dawn, correspondents and the impatient Marines aboard the USS Meriwether, Navy transport that had brought us to this day of triumph, crowded the rail for their first glimpse of the famed Fugiyama, Japan's "Holy" mountain.

However the towering mountain, long a scenic epicure for tourists, was but an imposing backdrop for such power as is represented by the battleships Iowa and Missouri (the latter the Flagship of Admiral Halsey). Completing the picture of any Naval might gathered at the front door of Japan were other powerful fleet arms . . . the battleships Duke of York and King George V, belonging to the British . . . and scores of destroyers, mine sweepers and auxiliary craft.

First Opportunity Offered

After more than two weeks in the cramped quarters of our transport, we jumped at the first opportunity offered to visit some of the fighting ships. Led by Lt. (jg) Sam Dietz, Public Relations Officer in charge of the group aboard the Meriwether, we boarded a small boat and bounced across the choppy bay to the IOWA, and a visit of several hours with its Negro personnel. 7-22-45

All Negro members of the Iowa's crew are stewards mates. Lt. (jg) J. C. Coleman, USNR, of Kalamazoo, Mich., introduced me to Steward first class, W. C. Williams, New York City, and Steward first class, John O. Banks, another New Yorker, who supervise the stewards department of 54 Negro and 6 Filipino bluejackets.

Heroic Seabees, Workhorses of Navy, Found Jammed on Leyte Gulf Houseboat

the afro american
Baltimore Md.

By HARRY McALPIN

LEYTE GULF, P.I.—(NNPA) Over 400 of the men who, with the First Marine Division, were responsible for victory in the bloody Battle of Peleliu Island in September, 1944, are living today on an overcrowded houseboat in the middle of Leyte Gulf.

They feel that they have been forgotten, mistreated and ignored.

The men are members of the second section of the 17th Seabees Battalion—workhorses of the Navy. They are stevedores and cargo handlers. Their story came to light during the course of the investigation tour of Lester B. Granger as personal representative of the Secretary of the Navy. 11-10-45

Supplied Marines

Two hours after the Marines hit the beach at Peleliu, the men of the 17th Seabees were carrying ammunition and supplies in to them. The battle line was only 25 yards from the water's edge. At one stage of the battle the Marines were driven back into the water, and were fighting knee-deep in the ocean. Still, the 17th Seabees fed them the needed ammunition and supplies.

Some of the Seabees were killed in the action. 3m 2/C Sinclair King remembers seeing four of his buddies killed by mortar shells just 20 feet from him in the water.

As the fight progressed and defeat for the Marines was staved off partially by the steady supply of ammunition, the Seabees followed the action onto the island and carried ammunition across the airfield under fire 11-10-45

Served as Combat Men

They fought, too, to bolster the dwindling ranks of the heroic Marines, though they had not been trained for such action.

Deservedly, the First Marine Division was given a Presidential citation. Their casualties were unusually heavy and their victory a costly one.

But the 17th, who were as necessary to victory as were the courage, fighting hearts and never-say-die spirit of the Marines, have heard no praises ringing in their ears. They have received no citations. They have been accorded no rest. 11-10-45

While this situation is not peculiar to this unit, and appears to have no racial implications, the men are growing sour because of its existence.

Twenty-two months ago, on December 16, 1943, these men began their overseas service. They served four months on the Island of Banika, five months on the Island of Emerau in the Bismarck Archipelago.

After helping take and secure the Island of Peleliu, they served five months there, unloading ships, storing supplies. Then half of the organization was moved to the Island of Guam and the other half was sent to the Philippines.

Work 'Round the Clock

This second group is stationed in Leyte Gulf. They are still doing stevedoring work and doing it well. Their schedule, though the war is over, calls for round-the clock service, which they do without shirking.

Their duty is performed ashore and on the ships that dock in the spacious harbor of San Pedro Bay. But they live on a houseboat, called by the Navy an APL (Auxiliary Personnel Lodging).

For eight months, these men have lived on an APL. Twice a week, sometimes only once, they are given "liberty" to go ashore for recreation. The rest of their time off from work is spent in the sardine-can space of an engineless ship, parts of which even have been declared out of bounds to them. 11-10-45

They had completed their 18 months of overseas duty long before the war ended. But they were not accorded the rotation privilege and sent home.

Discrimination Victims

On top of all this, they feel that they are the victims of racial discriminations. Their quarters on the boat are below deck where the generators hum and add to the stifling heat. Over 400 of them live under these conditions. Topside is reserved for the headquarters and ship's companies—which are predominantly white.

The few colored men who are members of headquarters company are nevertheless housed below deck with the rest of their race. For all colored men, except those who service the officers' quarters, topside is "out of bounds."

According to Mr. Granger, this kind of set-up is in line with and descended from a practice common throughout all the Seabees outfits he has observed in his several tours of Naval installations.

Most Seabee outfits he has visited contain both colored and white personnel. This would seem to make them racially mixed units. Actually, however, he points out, all the white personnel have been assigned to headquarters and ship companies, or to supervisory positions which include many of the "white collar" and skilled duty assignments.

The remaining companies in the unit, which are responsible for the stevedore work, are composed of colored personnel.

Do Heavy Work

This arrangement puts colored recruits in the position of doing the heavy laboring work, while the most sought-after jobs are held primarily by white. "With this pattern established," said Mr. Granger, "the way is open for all racially different situations to be construed as racial discrimination by colored personnel."

As an instance, in the movies shown on deck, when the mess hall is converted into a movie house, the 50 or 60 white enlisted men aboard invariably occupy the front tables and seats, the remaining tables and seats being occupied by colored men.

Lt. T. F. Gaffey, officer in charge of the 17 Seabees, told this correspondent that there have been no orders for such separation and segregation, and that it is voluntary on the part of the whites. 11-10-45

But the men, because of the pattern cited above, are convinced in their minds that here is another evidence of racial segregation.

Another of their complaints is that in the eight months on this floating "hotel," they have had no chaplain. No provision has been made for those who would like to attend and participate in religious services, or for the discussion of their personal problems with a member of the clergy.

One bright spot, which has had perhaps most to do with maintenance of their morale and prevention of a total collapse on the part of these men, has been the presence of a lone colored officer, Ensign J. B. Williams, of Annapolis, Md.

With Them 9 Months

Ens. Williams has been with the men for nine months. He has spent the entire period with them since they have been marooned on an APL in the middle of Leyte Gulf.

But eight months of such life, 22 months overseas without rotation or rest, and racial discriminations, both real and fancied to boot, are dulling the edge on the wholesome effects of Williams's presence and rank. 11-10-45

Today, these 400-odd men, above all their grievances, want only one thing—to come home. Their immediate commanding officers agree they deserve such consideration.

Because of their exemplary record, it is believed Mr. Granger who has investigated their situation, will discuss their plight with Naval officials.

Admiral Bars Jim Crow At Navy Swimming Pool

Chicago, Ill., Defender

WASHINGTON — The United States Navy wiped out another stronghold of discrimination against Negroes at Anacostia Naval Receiving station with the opening of the swimming pool on the post to colored service men on orders from Rear Admiral William M. Fechteler. 11-18-45

In September, Electricians Mate, first class, James E. Wright was a student at the Navy's Electrical Inter-Communication school at the Receiving station. He advised the D. C. branch of the NAACP that he had been denied admittance when he went to the pool at a time designated for the students.

George E. C. Hayes, president of the branch, wrote the Navy Department, inquiring into the circumstances of Wright's experience and received the reply that "the navy is desirous of preventing discrimination against any of its personnel."

When Wright subsequently met a second refusal at the swimming pool, the NAACP again wrote asking for a clear statement of policy with regard to the pool.

Rear Admiral William M. Fechteler, assistant chief of Naval Personnel, replied on Oct. 24, stating:

"Instructions have been issued that all facilities at the Receiving Station, Navy Yard, Washington, D. C., shall be available on the same basis to all authorized personnel regardless of race or color.

"The term 'authorized personnel' includes Naval personnel who are temporarily at the station in a transit status as well as those permanently assigned."

Wright, with a record of more than three years' war-time service, was honorably discharged from the navy on Oct. 12, being the first Negro to graduate from the Electrical Inter-Communication school where he was an outstanding student. 11-18-45

After his discharge he visited his family in Detroit but returned to Washington again this week. He came to join the picket line at the home of Senator Theodore G. Bilbo of Mississippi where a Veterans' picket line to oust Bilbo has been maintained for several weeks.

Navy Jim Crow Worse Than Dixie's, Says Gob

the Chicago Defender
Chicago Ill.

Please allow me to take a few minutes of your time to express my deep dissatisfaction with the way we Negroes are being treated here on Okinawa.

To begin with, with the exception of boatswains our rates are almost completely ignored. Second class men in barges hooking up cranes. To bring the whole thing to a head, last night we opened a new theatre. A line was drawn here. The "Third Special See-Bee Battalion" (a white outfit) to which we are attached were in one section and the logistic support companies 61-64 in another section. It was simply a smooth and legal way of navy Jim Crow. 11-24-45

I am a MoMM 3-c and supposed to be a crane operator. But we are Jim Crowed on that. The white boys operate the heavy ones and we the little ones. I operate about five or six hours a week and the rest of the time I am in a barge hooking material on some other crane.

We were and are supposed to be supply outfits. If the See-Bees don't want us (which none of the five hundred of us wants) why not send us on to a supply depot? Or send us home. Personally, I don't think segregation and Jim Crow has any place in the navy. Everything here reeks with it.

We have been here since July 24 and do not have decks in all the tents. We do not have lights of any kind. We are working 12 hours a day and seven days a week. I heard some time back the war was over. The commanding officer is Lt. Comm. G. W. Taylor. The officer in charge of LSC L. W. Musick, Lt. Officer in charge of my section is Lt. C. W. Wilson. We even have segregated pay days, third special on the 10th and LSC on the 12th.

Being from Amherst, Va., I am used to segregation. But no segregation in civilian life is as bad as it is in the navy. I have been in the navy for 20 months but this is the first time I was Jim Crowed on the job in the navy. 11-24-45

Sorry to waste your time but I just had to blow off a little steam.—W. F. Kidd, MoMM 3-c.

Naval Racial Practice Lagging Behind Policy, Granger Reports

11-10-45

WASHINGTON

Observing that the Navy has greatly improved in its handling of colored service men in the last three years, Lester Granger, Urban League executive secretary, reported Thursday that generally the Navy's practice still lags behind its announced new policy.

The report, made to Secretary of the Navy James Forrestal, followed Granger's return from a 31-day tour of Navy bases in the Pacific.

His statement to the press made at a special conference called by Secretary Forrestal, was couched in generalities.

After the late Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox announced in April, 1942, that the Navy would accept colored volunteers for enlistment for general service in the reserve components of the Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard and all ratings in those two branches would be opened to them, two mistakes were made, Mr. Granger said. 11-10-45

Cites Mistakes

These mistakes, he stated, were the establishment of a separate training program and the large concentration of colored personnel in the ordnance service, which resulted in a disproportionate number of colored men being assigned to duty in ammunition depots.

In 1945, he said, the Navy actually began to admit colored inductees to all branches of the service and to remove the segregated features which were interfering with good morale and efficient service. But progress in the Pacific, he stated, "has lagged behind the standards on the mainland."

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Colored personnel still is not enrolled in the Regular Navy, nor accepted for training as pilots in the Naval Air Corps. Naval policy still restricts colored personnel to auxiliary craft aboard ships except as messmen, although Mr. Granger said a few colored men were serving in rated positions aboard battleships. He would not venture a guess as to the number. Colored women are still barred from the Women Marines.)

Mr. Granger said he found a few cases of exemplary leadership in the Pacific and many cases of "downright biased leadership." But, he added, the Navy is gradually improving.

Slects Wrong Officers

The most serious failure of the Navy, he said, was in its selection of officers to command colored personnel. Most officers found commanding colored personnel, he stated, were probably not capable of handling colored men to the full extent of their ability and effectiveness.

"The final answer to a democratic and completely efficient Navy," he said, "is going to be found in the abolition of all types of segregation" and "the abolition of any special approach to the service of colored men in the Navy." 11-10-45

He said he had run across a number of commissioned officers. He saw six or seven in the Philippines, the highest ranking being Lt. Edward Hope, he stated; three on Eniwetok, Martin Sublett and Nelson; three on Saipan, Lts. Philip Barnes and Reginald Goodwin, and one with a construction battalion, Ensign Joseph Williams.

Hits at Criticism

In reply to a question concerning criticism of him implying he was a tool of the Navy, Mr. Granger said the comment of Walter White, secretary, and Roy Wilkins, assistant secretary of the NAACP, boiled itself down to a question of the honesty of the Navy and his competency as a social worker.

He said he is sure the Navy is willing to meet the issue of its honesty and that his record as a social worker was open.

Mr. Granger and his party left this country on Sept. 27 and returned to Washington on Oct. 27. The party consisted of Mr. Granger, Lt. Robert Roper, Matthew W. Bullock, of Boston, chairman of the Massachusetts Parole Commission; Harry S. McAlpin, a newspaper man, and Lt. (j.g.) Sylvester White, who represented the Navy's Bureau of Public Information.

At Pearl Harbor the party was joined by Comm. Daniel W. Armstrong, former commanding officer of Camp Robert Smalls at Great Lakes.

Visited 9 Islands

On the tour which lasted 31 days, the party visited nine island bases and 47 different activities. Mr. Granger said they were informed there were in the Pacific area approximately 45,000 colored service men at shore bases; of that number, he added, about 30,000 were located at the activities they visited.

He said they found on the whole that the morale and performance of colored personnel in the Pacific generally corresponded to that of the whties. There are various irritating conditions existing, he said, which men feel they needlessly endure, resulting in a tendency to magnify grievances.

His party found, he said, several jungle situations of which charges or race discrimination aro-

There were several examples of commanding officers, he stated, who exhibited race prejudice themselves which prevented impartial and effective administration of their commands.

Base-wide and area-wide conditions which were beyond the control of officers themselves, he said, also were noted.

Highest Morale on Ships

The highest morale and the most praiseworthy performance were found among crew members of auxiliary ships. He rated air fields and bases next. Construction battalions, he said, were low-down on the morale scale, and somewhere between the best and the worst were the Marine outfits. 11-10-45

His party came across two colored combat Marine battalions which never had a chance to see service at the front.

Radarman Served on Carrier

Negro Wins Fight Against 'Yellow' Discharge

Daily Worker

By MILDRED McADORY and MICHAEL SINGER

Daniel Joseph Hardy beamed as we met him in his three-room apartment at 204 Lewis Ave., Brooklyn. He was happy for the first time since being mustered out of the Navy. He showed us why. It was a letter he had just received from the Navy Department:

"This board has decided that the undesirable discharge given you on Dec. 9, 1944, should be changed to Discharge Under Desirable Conditions by Order of the Board of Review." 12-28-45

Just one sentence, but to Hardy it means: "I can hold up my head again." The Negro vet looked at his twin daughters, six months old.

"It means that now my children won't have to face the disgrace of a Dishonorable Discharge to their father," he said. "I can meet my friends and not feel ashamed."

Hardy's fight against the "yellow" discharge was described in detail in Wednesday's Daily Worker.

Hardy has been a good sailor. He had performed his job faithfully and with patriotic devotion. He had worked himself into a Navy hospital loading ammunition at a naval base in California.

Daniel Joseph Hardy and His Wife Etheleen

Operated on for hernia, he had been released before recuperation and returned to the back-breaking loading assignment. Unable to carry heavy loads, he had requested a new assignment. His lieutenant replied:

"What good are you to the Navy? You ought to be shot."

For fighting racial discrimination in the Navy, for reporting this fascist remark of the lieutenant to his commanding officer, for protesting Jimcrow physical attacks upon himself and his buddies in Vallejo, Cal., for his audacity in speaking out against Jimcrow-incited "riots" at a Navy hearing, for proposing Negro chaplains in the Navy, for refusing to be humiliated, debased and insulted—for standing up as an American fighting for his country, fighting against fascism, Daniel Joseph Hardy was given a "yellow" discharge.

A "yellow" discharge is a brand; it means "other than honorable."

HEARING WON 12-28-45

Hardy went to Benjamin J. Davis, Jr., New York Councilman. Davis wrote to Congressman Adam Clayton Powell. Powell urged Hardy to file a petition with the Navy and ask for a hearing. Edward R. Dudley of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, helped Hardy fill out the forms. Milton Becker, of the veterans administration office of the International Labor Defense, filed the case with the Navy. The wheels began to turn. The Navy granted a hearing.

Hardy was both incensed and amazed at the questions the Navy Board asked him. "They were ridiculous," he said. "They wanted to know where I was when the Vallejo riots took place and whether I had Negro officers?" 12-28-45

"It seemed as if they wanted to prove I led the rioting. They knew we had no Negro officers, not even a Negro chaplain."

The Navy didn't bother to send a chaplain "to our men until after the riots," Hardy declared, a Chaplain Flowers. "They would have done better to send a Bilbo. At least he would have been an open fascist."

Hardy's mother came into the room. New York, N.Y.

"This is the happiest Christmas in my life," she said. "First this letter to Daniel from the Navy and then my other boy, Emmet, comes home from Guam—all on the same day. Now most of my prayers have been answered."

Daniel remarked how good it felt to be able to greet Emmet with an honorable discharge. Etheleen, Hardy's wife, said only one more prayer needed answering.

"If we could only find a place to live."

The Hardy family—Hardy, his wife and two children, Mrs. Hardy and Emmett—live in three rooms. For months, Hardy's mother and wife have been searching for an apartment in vain. With a "yellow" discharge it was even more difficult.

"But now," Mrs. Hardy explained, "we can apply at least for an apartment in a housing project."

There are other Negro and white veterans with "Blue and "yellow" discharge slips—blots on their names for refusing to resist prejudice and injustice.

"I hope other fellows in my position fight to clear their names," Hardy said. "Now I know it can be done."

Powell Protests Negro Transfer

P.M. N.Y.C. 12-6-45

The Paris bureau of the New York Herald Tribune reported yesterday that a Negro quartermaster truck company scheduled to sail from Le Havre aboard the U. S. aircraft carrier Croatan was transferred to a slower Victory ship because Navy officers ruled that there were no segregation facilities on the flight deck of the flattop. N.Y.

This news brought a sharp protest from Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, Jr. (R., N. Y.), who wired President Truman and Secretary of the Navy Forrestal demanding an investigation.

RALEIGH, N. C. — John H. Sampson, officers steward, first class, USN, of 1018 Manly street and veteran of six major invasion battles against the Nazis, is here visiting his mother. He has served aboard a destroyer, which for over two years has been in action in the Mediterranean Sea, protecting convoys, bombarding the shore lines of Africa, Sicily, Italy and France, and in spare moments transferring German prisoners.

Sampson enlisted in the Navy in 1939. Once while protecting a convoy, gunners brought down a German plane and his destroyer picked up two Nazi airmen. Sampson said he had to feed them until port was reached. 2-24-45

THE CALL

Navy Secretary Pledges a More Democratic Policy

AFRO-AMERICAN Balt. Mo.
2-10-45

WASHINGTON—(ANP) — Discussing his approach to Naval matters during a 45-minute interview with the Associated Negro Press, Secretary of the Navy James V. Forrestal announced his plans to assure a more democratic Naval policy.

Calling the job to be done a great "challenge to the white people and to the colored people," he said that in so far as he is able he will see that colored persons get the opportunity that all Americans want—to perform.

Already under consideration, he announced, is the appointment of a civilian aide, whose duties will be similar to those of Truman K. Gibson, Jr., civilian aide to the Secretary of War.

Others to Be Used

He also told of his early decision to have two or three colored men working in the Navy Department on legitimate Navy business who could also counsel him on matters affecting colored persons as an incidental task.

Mr. Forrestal, who says that the job is not to be "just a symbol," is reported to have talked with Ensign Reginald Goodwin, who at present is unassigned, and is scheduled to see Sylvester White, formerly public relations officer at Great Lakes.

Aware that colored persons want the chance to work and be upgraded on the same basis as anyone else, he said that he is considering their desire to advance and serve wherever their talents permit.

Mess Attendants Fight

At the same time, he attempted to correct certain erroneous impressions about the duties of mess attendants, explaining, "They are as much a part of the fighting unit as anybody else."

"Many are in gun crews, fire control and damage control units," continued the Secretary, to whom is attributed the acceptance of women in the WAVES and the assignment of sailors to other than mess duties.

To Step Up News Coverage

Furthermore, he said, he is taking measures to see that coverage of activities of colored Naval personnel in the various theatres of operations, in terms of news stories and pictures, is stepped up.

Unable to commit himself, he finally stated that the decisions in the trials involving colored seamen—the Port Chicago mutiny trial and that of the eighteen discharged Seabees — may be forthcoming soon.

A New Yorker, Mr. Forrestal attended Dartmouth College where he was a classmate of Lester Granger, executive director of the Urban League, for whom, with Paul Robeson, he expressed profound respect.

Education to Help

An opponent of moves for expediency's sake, he says that education is going to be tremendously helpful in doing the job properly, adding that "the higher you go in the scale of intelligence, the less intolerance you find."

Finally, the Secretary inquired about three books by and about colored people—Angelo Herndon's "Let Me Live," Roi Ottley's "New World A-Comin'," and Richard Wright's "Native Son," the last of which he asked his secretary to obtain.

Charges Jimcrow Persists in Pacific Navy

The Daily Worker New York N.Y. 11-3-45

FORRESTAL AIDE CITES SEGREGATION, SLOW PROMOTIONS

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2. — The United States Navy in the Pacific still indulges in Jimcrow practices regarding Negroes in its service, an aide to Secretary James Forrestal charged here.

Lester Granger, Negro special assistant to Forrestal, declared that the Navy in the Pacific followed a policy of slowing promotions of Negro personnel because of prejudice by commanding officers, and that slowness also resulted from the fact that Negroes were admitted to general duty too late in the conflict to acquire sufficient seniority. Granger's report was based upon a survey made among Negro Navy men.

Granger also charged the Navy with practising segregation, which he declared was "more frequent than on the mainland, and sometimes enforced with unusual stupidity." 11-3-45

On the other hand, Granger asserted, Fleet Admiral Nimitz assured him that Negroes in the Navy had performed excellent wartime duty and had proved their right to continued admission to the service in peacetime. Prior to the war, Negroes were only taken into steward work aboard ships.

GREAT LAKES, Ill. — "What you have learned here at Camp Robert Smalls is only the beginning; it is merely preparation for your larger life in the Navy," William E. King, Chicago attorney, told graduates of the Camp Smalls Service School at exercises held January 2.

Continuing, Mr. King, member of the Illinois State Industrial Commission, warned his hearers that "wherever opportunity may be found there also lurks opposition, but it counts little if you are pursuing the right course," he declared, adding: 1-6-45

"Opposition then is inescapable, but capable men of true worth can and do rise above opposition. Destiny has chosen you as the standard bearers of America and you will and must rise above it."

Certificates of merit were presented to the three honor men.

One of them, William B. Flournoy, Detroit, graduate of Machinist's Mate School, received special commendation for earning the highest mark (92.74) made since the school was opened in July, 1943.

He was advanced from fireman, second class to fireman, first class.

The other two honor men, Leonard E. Benson, Greenville, S.C., graduated from the Cooks' and Bakers' School with an average of 86.70, and Ulysses Jones, Detroit, of the Gunner's Mate School who had an average of 95.00.

Both men were advanced from seaman, second class to seaman, first class.

During the Revolutionary War the number of seamen employed ranged from 5,000 to 10,000, with an average of about 6,000 and a total of about 15,000, of which 1,800 were colored.

During the War of 1812 there was an average of about 7,500 seamen and a total of 15,000, of which over 1,500 were colored.

During the Mexican War there was a total of 12,000, of which 1,000 were colored.

During the Civil War the total was 118,044, of which 30,000 were colored.

During the Spanish-American War the total was 24,123, of which 2,000 were colored.

During World War I enlistments in the Navy totaled 435,398, of which 5,328 were colored. These were divided as follows: U.S. Navy, 3,203; U.S. Naval Reserve, 2,099, and National Naval Volunteers, 26.

During the present war over 160,000 colored seamen are serving in the Navy, with only thirty-four colored. officers.

Navy Racial Policy 'Successful'—Granger

The Pittsburgh Courier Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 10-20-45

HONOLULU—(ANP)—Captains and other executive officers aboard ships that have applied the Navy's non-discrimination policy toward Negro sailors have reported the results as successful, said Lester B. Granger, National Urban League official and a traveling representative for Secretary Forrestal.

Granger, a World War I artillery officer, said that Washington is sincerely and honestly trying to execute the race code that gives Negro sailors the same chance for ratings as other sailors have. But the farther he has traveled from Washington in his tour for the Navy, the more evidence he has found of violations and ignorance of the policy.

"This policy, which opposes that of segregated service, had to be worked out cautiously and skillfully to overcome the widespread prejudice that Negroes would make only good messmen aboard ship," he said, "and not good machinists, electricians and other technical rates. Nearly all the skippers reported the policy successful after it was given a fair trial."

The Navy's traveling race relation expert remarked that "the whole thing is largely a matter of convincing officers of the fairness and workability of the policy. The hardest to deal with is the well-meaning but timid officer."

Says Navy Policy Is Improved

Journal & Guide Norfolk, Va. 11-10-45

Biased Leadership Found To Exist At Some Installations

By LOUIS LAUTIER
For NNPA News Service

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Conditions under which colored personnel were serving at naval bases in the Pacific in which he and members of his party visited at the invitation of Secretary of the Navy James Forrestal, were described at a press conference last Thursday by Lester B. Granger, special assistant to the Secretary of the Navy and executive secretary of the National Urban League.

His statements to the press were couched in generalities. He said the Navy has greatly improved in its handling of colored service men in the last three years. This conclusion was reached by a comparison with conditions which existed in 1942 when the Navy permitted colored men to enlist only in the messmen's branch. 11-10-45

SEES MISTAKES MADE

After the late Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox announced in April, 1942, that the Navy would accept colored volunteers for enlistment for general service in the reserve components of the Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard, and all ratings in those two branches would be opened to them, two mistakes were made, Mr. Granger said.

These mistakes, he stated, were the establishment of a separate training program and the large concentration of colored personnel in the ordnance service, which resulted in a disproportionate number of colored men being assigned to duty in ammunition depots.

In 1945, he said, the Navy actually began to admit colored inductees to all branches of the service and to remove the segregated features which were interfering with good morale and efficient serivce. But progress in the Pacific, he stated, "has lagged behind the standards on the mainland."

(Editor's note: Colored personnel is not enrolled in the Regular Navy, nor accepted for training as pilots in the Naval Air Corps. Naval policy still restricts colored personnel to auxiliary craft aboard ships except as messmen, although Mr. Granger said a few colored men were serving in rated positions aboard battleships. He would not venture a guess as to the number. Colored women are still barred from the Women Marines.) 11-10-45

SEES IMPROVEMENT

Mr. Granger said he found a few cases of exemplary leadership in the Pacific and many cases of "downright biased leadership." But he added, the Navy is gradually improving.

The most serious failure of the Navy, he said, was in its selections of officers to command colored personnel. Most officers found commanding colored personnel, he stated, were palpably not capable of handling colored men to the full extent of their ability and effectiveness. 11-10-45

"The final answer to a democratic and completely efficient Navy," he said, "is going to be found in the abolition of all types of segregation" and "the abolition of any special approach to the service of colored men in the Navy."

He said he had run across a number of commissioned officers. He saw six or seven in the Philippines, the highest ranking being Lieutenant Edward Hope, he stated; two on Eingwetok, Martin, Sublett and Nelson; three on Saipan, Lieutenants Philip Barnes and Reginald Goodwin, and Ensign Joseph Williams who was with a construction battalion.

REPLIES TO CRITICISM

In reply to a question concerning criticism of him implying he was a tool of the Navy Mr. Granger said the comment of Walter White, secretary, and Roy Wilkins, assistant secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People , boiled itself down to a question of the honesty of the Navy and his competency as a social worker.

He said he is sure the Navy is willing to meet the issue of its honesty and that his record as a social worker was open.

Navy

Mr. Granger and his party left this country on September 27 and returned to Washington on October 27. The party consisted of Mr. Granger, Lieutenant Robert Roper, Matthew W. Bullock, of Boston, chairman of the Massachusetts Parole Commission, Harry S. McAlpin, a newspaper man, and Lieutenant (junior grade) Sylvester White, who represented the Navy's Bureau of Public Information. 11-10-45

At Pearl Harbor the party joined by Commander Daniel W. Armstrong, formerly commanding officer of Camp Robert Smalls at Great Lakes.

On the tour which lasted thirty-one days, the party visited nine island bases and forty-seven different activities. Mr Granger said they were informed there were in the Pacific area approximately 45,000 colored service men shored base. Of that number, he added, about 30,000 were located at the activities they visited.

IRRITATING CONDITIONS

He said they found on the whole that the morale and performance of colored naval personnel in the Pacific generally corresponded to that of the whites. There are various irritating conditions existing, he said, which the men feel they needlessly endure, resulting in a tendency to magnify grievances.

His party found, he said, several general situations out of which charges of race discrimination arose. There were several examples of commanding officers, he stated, who exhibited race prejudice themselves which prevented impartial and effective administration of their commands.

Base-wide and area-wide conditions which were beyound the control of officers themselves, he said, also were noted.

The higest morale and the most praiseworthy performance were found among crew members of auxiliary ships. He rated air fialds and bases next. Construction battalions, he said were low-down on the morale scale, and somewhere between the best and the worst were the Marine outfits.

His party came across two colored combat Marine battalions which never had a chance to see service at the front.

The text of Mr. Granger's prepared statement follows: statedenoor ehoftelea.ueeTat

STATEMENT

I ave just finished reportingt Secretary of the Navy on my observation and findings compiled during four weeks tours of the Naval activities in the Pacific area. Without committing the members of my party, I believe that I can say that they concur generally in my conclusions.

During our tour we visited nine Island bases and 47 separate Naval activities. The personnel of the activities included approximately 30,000 of the 45,00 shore based Negro Naval personnel in the Pacific. I brought away with me several vivid impressions. One is the attitudes of the Negro servicemen with whom I talked regarding their conditions of the service and their hope for peacetime future. Most of all Negro servicemen in the Pacific like their white fellows, want two things from their country at this time: they want to get home as quickly as possible, they are tired of the Pacific, and they want an early start at rebuilding their civilian life. 11-10-45

DEMAND FAIR CHANCE

With almost equal intensity, they want and they demand a fair chance at decent living when they return. They want equal job opportunities, a chance to make and save money, and to develop family living. They expect the American population of all races to show real appreciation of the sacrifices they have made by putting into practice our democratic professions of eqpaul opportunity for all regardless of race or creed. After talking with these men, I am convinced that the state of race relations into post war America will be determined by the spirit in which we meet these returned veterans.

Regrading the conditions under which they are serving, I have these comments to make: progress toward actual practice of the Navy's officials racial policy in the Pacific lags far behind standards set on the mainland. We found examples of both excellent and deplorable policies in the command of Negro personnel. We found that where serious trouble-spots were discovered, they were the result of inept or racially prejudiced officer leadership. We found that the morale and the performance of Negro servicemen compared favorably with that of whites except in situations where racial discrimination invariably affecter the job performance and the spirit of Negro personnel. 11-10-45

HANDLED SUPPLIES

From the base commandants whom we interviewed we received glowing reports of the contribution which Negro outfits made in keeping the stream of supplies moving steadily up to the battle areas. In many cases Negro Seabees and supply companies were actually in the fighting, landing with the Marines, helping to establish the beachhead. High praise was given of the record of the 34th Seabees Battalion and the 17th Special Seabees. Admiral Nimitz called the work of these Negro service troops part of his "secret weapon."

The complaint most persistently received from Negro servicemen was slowness of promotion, sometimes because of prejudice on the part of the commanding officers, and at other times because Negroes admitted to general service late in the war and therefore lacked the seniority of many of their white fellows.

second frequent complaint was concerning racial segregation, which exists more frequent in the Pacific area than on the mainland and which is sometimes enforced with unusual stupidity. Our party investigated the causes of the racial conflict on Guam and the handling of the court martial that resulted in sentences of 45 Negro sailors. Representatives regarding these trials have been made to the Secretary of the Navy.

VISITS BRING COMFORT

Traveling thousands of miles a day on several occasions, spending from eight in the morning to nine and ten at night interviewing Negro personnel and their officers, studying reports and base facilities our party could not be expected to have covered thoroughly every phase of the various situations which we encountered. We found however that our visits brought comfort as well as information to the Negro personnel. We served as a corrective and advisory influence in dealing with our officers. We found intense interest of the part of whites and Negroes alike in developments here on the mainland They are impatient over the slowness of Congress in settling many issues important to reconversion, and over the inability of management and labor to work out a basis for peaceful cooperation. Homesickness and boredom accentuate their distaste for the onerous conditions of island life. They tend to magnify existing difficulties which are serious enough at best. 11-10-45

I have indicated to the Secretary my strengthened conviction that there is need for further improvement of racial practices in the Navy, and I have indicated some ways in which I believe improvements can be brought about on a permanent basis for an enlarged peacetime Navy. The members of the party accompanying me were: Matthew W. Bullock of Boston, Massachusetts, Chairman of the Massachussets State Parole Commission; Harry S. McAlpin, Whitehouse correspondent for the Negro Press; Lieutenant (junion grade) Sylvester White of the Navy's Bureau of Public Information; Commander Daniel Armstrong, Liason Officer for Negro Personnel in the Pacific, and Lieutenant R. P. Roper of the Bureau of Naval Personnel.

Peacetime Navy To Have Full Quota Of Negro Volunteers

The Chicago Defender Chicago, Illinois

11-17-45

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Negroes with ratings and commissions are in the navy for keeps—and that goes for the coast guard and the marine corps.

The Associated Negro Press has just completed a survey of the plans of the several branches that comprise the navy as to the future role of Negroes in the service. Unequivocal statements made by top-ranking officials of the branches attest to the fact that experience growing out of World War II in the utilization of Negro personnel has substantially justified their inclusion in the respective post-war organizations.

This is in sharp contrast to things which happened following World War I when Negroes in the navy were demobilized, and those coming in later were confined to the steward's branch of the service.

Whereas experience is justifying this position, much of the credit for this straightforward position is stemming from the office of Navy Secretary James V. Forrestal who, in the short time that he has headed up the department, has shown a greater insistence upon fullest utilization of Negro personnel than any previous secretary.

Vice Adm. Louis E. Denfeld since September 11 chief of the bureau of naval personnel, was quite frank in his statement. "I believe we will use Negroes more extensively as their training and experience would indicate," he said. "As they get to be chief petty officers we will use them to the fullest extent of their capabilities."

Reminded of what had happened after the last war, Adm. Denfeld said, "I don't think we will ever go back to that. Certainly," he added, "I have no feeling about it."

Seek Negro Volunteers

Denfeld said that the future navy will be a volunteer organization, and that Negro volunteers will be accepted with no holds barred. Re-enlistments are now coming in at the rate of 500 a day, he said, but no breakdown was available on Negro re-enlistments. The service will continue to adhere to the 10 per cent of complement quota set in 1943, but will show no hesitance about going over that if enlistments warrant. Congress is authorizing a peacetime strength of 500,000 men for the navy.

Negroes were admitted to general service in the navy in April, 1942, for the first time since World War I. On V-J day there was a peak strength of 165,000 enlisted Negroes serving with the navy. On Nov. 6 there were 53 commissioned officers, four nurses and 23 officer candidates. Those figures are exclusive of the marine corps and coast guard.

This personnel was assigned to shore establishments in continental United States, at Pacific bases, aboard auxiliary vessels and on sub-chasers, PC, DE, minesweepers and district craft.

Coast Guard Record Cited

Speaking for the coast guard, Rear Adm. Joseph F. Farley, chief personnel officer, said that the branch would be returned to the authority and jurisdiction of the treasury department six months after the peace proclamation. He stated that "there will be absolute fairness" in the handling of Negro personnel. "Our past record has shown that."

The coast guard, he said, has been tied up with demobilization plans—and this is true of most of the services—but the "problem is being studied."

"We have no intention of discharging," Adm. Farley declared.

Discussing performance of Negro personnel, Adm. Farley said "they were just about average of what you would expect of any personnel—good and bad. Whenever you get personnel together you have to expect a certain amount of adverse criticism. But we got that on the white boys as well as on the colored. Much depends upon the individual."

ships, which are not needed to transport war weapons, are now bringing athletic gear, photographic equipment, radios, radio-phonographs, musical instuments, books and educational materials to replace and enlarge stocks which have been on hand throughout the war.

OKINAWA — It's "M-Day" on Okinawa!

War-hardened veterans of General Stilwell's tough Tenth Army, courageous conquerors of Jap-held Okinawa, and members of the first and second marine divisions who are stationed at Chimu Wan, Tengan, Okinawa have begun a large scale war on monotony.

Rapid expansion of recreational, educational and athletic programs are underway, designed to help fleet bluejackets and those stationed at island bases use profitably their duty-off hours.

Discrimination Is Wiped Out At Anacostia

11-16-45

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — The United States navy wiped out another stronghold of discrimination against Negroes at Anacosta Naval Receiving station with the opening of the swimming pool on the post to colored service men on orders from Rear Adm. William M. Fochteler.

In September, Electrician's Mate 1st Class James E. Wright was a student at the navy's electrical inter-communication school at the receiving station. He advised the D. C. branch of the N.A.A.C.P. that he had been denied admittance when he went to the pool at a time designated for the students.

George E. C. Hayes, president of the N.A.A.C.P branch, wrote the navy department, inquiring into the circumstances of Wright's experience and received the reply that "the navy is desirous of preventing discrimination against any of its personnel."

When Wright subsequently met a second refusal at the swimming pool, the N.A.A.C.P again wrote asking for a clear statement of policy with regard to the pool.

Rear Adm. William M. Fochteler, assistant chief of naval personnel replied on Oct. 24 saying: "Instructions have been issued that all facilities at the receiving station, navy yard, Washington, D. C., shall be available on the same basis to all authorized personnel regardless of race or color.

"The term 'authorized personnel' includes naval personnel who are temporarily at the station in a transit status as well as those permanently assigned."

Mr. Wright, with a record of more than three years' war-time service, was honorably discharged from the navy on Oct. 12 being the first Negro to graduate from the electrical inter-communication school where he was an outstanding student.

After his discharge he visited his family in Detroit but returned to Washington again this week. He came back to join the picket line at the home of Sen. Theo G. Bilbo of Mississippi where a veterans' picket to oust Bilbo has been maintained for several weeks.

Messmen Watch Surrender on Deck of Battleship Missouri

(Defender War Correspondent)

ABOARD THE USS MISSOURI IN TOKYO BAY — Surrounded by a hushed and impressive audience of the military leaders of nine nations which had aided in her vanquishment, Japan officially confirmed her defeat Sunday (Saturday U.S. time).

The end came officially after invalided Foreign Minister Mamoru Shigemitsu and Army Chief of Staff Gen. Yoshijiro Umezo, affixed their signatures to the surrender document laid before them by the conquerers.

The drama, signifying the conclusion of the world's greatest war, was enacted on the USS Missouri, flagship of the 3rd Fleet, which was battering the innermost defenses of Japan when the end came.

Negro Sailors Watch 9-8-45

Against a backdrop of thousands of white and khaki-clad marines, standing firmly and in an unwavering line, were scores of Negro messmen who, before the surrender, had come closer to Tokyo than any of their racial brothers in the military service. Their presence on deck recalled to the minds of the four Negro correspondents, covering the ceremony with other representatives of the world press, the sacrifices made and the services rendered by Negro servicemen to bring this day to pass.

These sailors, many of whom have been serving on the Missouri in the double capacity of messmen and anti-aircraft gunners since its launching, were fit representatives of the legions of heroic Negro combat and service troops that could not be present. If Sunday was a red-letter day for these men because it marked the official end of hostilities, then it was also memorable because it brought into sharper focus the recommencement of their lives as civilians to which they are looking forward with a hope for peace and justice for themselves and all their fellowmen.

This fervent hope for a better life in a better America which I have heard from the lips of fighting men from Australia to Japan can be expressed no better than it was by a youthful Washingtonian I met when I visited the messmen of this ship several days before the ceremony. 9-8-45

Want a Better World

Thomas Hilliard of Washington personal steward to Capt. Stuart Murray who commands this mighty man-o-war, told me as I watched him at work in his tiny galley: "I have put everything I have into this job because I feel it is my business to help make this a better world for all people. I hope I can count on all those who have been helped by my efforts in the navy to help me just as hard in my fight for a better life as a civilian."

The efforts of Hilliard and his mates has meant months of labor in the steaming galleys below deck, waiting in the ship's wardrooms and the rendering of extra personal services for officers occupied by important matters.

It has meant manning guns against a foe intent upon destruction on such memorable occasions as Task Force 58's first raid on Tokyo in February 1945; the attack on Okinawa a month before our troops landed there; the battle of April 11 when a Kamikaze crashed

UAW Asks Pardon For Sailors

The Savannah Tribune
Savannah, Georgia
9-27-45

Detroit, Mich.—Local No. 15 of the United Automobile Workers of America has passed a unanimous resolution asking President Truman to grant a "full and unconditional pardon" to the 50 Negro sailors convicted of "mutiny" as an aftermath of the fatal ammunition explosion at Port Chicago, California, in July, 1944, which claimed a total of more than 327 lives.

The CIO resolution said: "We call upon the CIO to cooperate with the NAACP in mobilizing all labor, liberal, Negro and working class fraternal organizations in a campaign for the pardon of these sailors."

The testimony of the men at the original courts-martial was not handled by the NAACP but the appeal of their sentences was handled before the Navy Board of Review by Thurgood Marshall and other NAACP lawyers. The Judge Advocate General of the Navy has approved the legal form of the courts-martial, but according to a letter dated August 15 from Secretatry Forrestal to the NAACP, the sentences "have not been affirmed" and "have not yet come to me for final review."

Navy man with white unit first Negro in Japan

The Los Angles Tribune Los Angeles, California
9-24-45

WASHINGTON — Possibly the first Negro to set foot on Japanese soil, following the cessation of hostilities, was Lowell L. Davis, Navy hospital apprentice who got into a white Marine division by mistake and remained there because his white buddies wanted him.

Davis, according to Charles H. Loeb, correspondent in Japan for the National Negro Publishers' association, said Davis was ordered from New Orleans to the Fourth Marine division at Guadacanal, as a result of a clerical error. After the first week, his mates wouldn't have him shifted to a Negro division.

Davis' landing, Loeb reported, recalled the fact that when Commodore Matthew C. Perry, with an armada of four ships, pulled into Tokyo Bay 92 years ago to carry out the commission of President Millard Fillmore to effect commercial and diplomatic relations with Japan, two Negro bodyguards marched alongside him.

Eight service companies, numbering 1,500 men, comprised the first Negro troops to set foot on Japanese soil shortly after the recent signing of the peace treaty aboard the U. S. S. Missouri in Tokyo Harbor. According to Loeb some 92,000 service troops, attached to the 6th and 8th armies, will participate in the occupation of Japan.

ELKTON, Md. — Harry Noble Simms, a former teacher in the Elkton school system, now music director of the colored school of music at Great Lakes Naval Training Station, was recently commended by Capt. R. J. Penney, commanding officer of the Recruit Training Command.

The citation read as follows:

"As director of the Negro School of Music at the U.S. Naval Training Center, Great Lakes, Ill., you have trained and sent out over 100 band units which are now playing for and entertaining Navy personnel all over the world. 9-22-45

"In your personal contacts you have proved yourself to be capable, diligent, of excellent character, sincere in your work and always co-operative. Reports have consistently contained the high level of your achievements."

Navy Veteran Holds Two Congressional Medals

Though none have been awarded the nation's highest honor in World War II, Chief Gunner's Mate Dick Turpin, USN (retired), offers living proof that colored men have received the coveted Congressional Medal of Honor. In fact he holds two. Pictured in the Turpin Center, named in his honor at Los Angeles, Chief Turpin holds the dedicatory plaque which tells how he saved the Captain of the USS Maine when it blew up in Havana Harbor and saved 29 enlisted men and two officers aboard the USS Bennington when her boilers blew up, the exploits that won him the awards. He has served in every campaign between the Civil War and World War II and has invented an acetylene torch that can be operated beneath water.

Group Makes Sea History In War; 4 Captain Ships

Hard Struggle Overcome After Mulzac Named To "Washington"

NEW YORK— (ANP) — Negro sailors have made sea history in World War 11 and four of them have emerged as captains of their ships.

All of this has happened since 1942 and is dramatically told in John Beecher's book, "All Brave Sailors," which features the struggles of Capt. Hugh Mulzac, the first of the four Negro sailors to win a ship's captaincy.

Although born in the British West Indies, Capt Mulzac has been an American citizen since World War 1. He came here after completing his nautical training in Wales, which is said to have been financed by his white father, but discovered that his chances were blocked by the color of his skin and racial heritage. He could not find employment on the deck of any ship and soon became stranded in this country.

CALLED 'N——' HERE

He held a second mate's ticket in England at 25 but when he came here in search of work he was called a "n——" for the first time in his life.

"If this is the land of freedom they talk about, I never want to come back," he remarked sadly.

His break came during World War 1. He was granted an American second mate's license and a job. He passed his master's examination with the highest grade ever known in Baltimore in 1920, according to merchant marine records. Even though he held a master's ticket, he couldn't get a master's berth. He worked as ship steward, as a painter and for Marcus Garvey's Black Star line. He was one of the founders of the National Maritime union.

VICTORY FINALLY WON

Capt. Mulzac faced the same race handicap during the early months of the present war. His application was rejected by the War Shipping administration, although the call had been made for qualified officers. The combined efforts of the National Negro congress, the NMU the CIO, the Negro press, the F. E. P. C. and President Roosevelt were necessary to place Mulzac in charge of the Booker T. Washington, which was commissioned in October, 1942, as the first of the famous liberty ships to be named in honor of American Negro leaders.

John Beecher, author of "All Brave Sailors," is a descendant of Henry Ward Beecher, the noted anti-slavery orator, and Harriet Beecher Stowe, author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Beecher, who brings out in his story that Mulzac had a white father and black mother, served as purser under Mulzac for two years.

Granger Says Mutiny Case Of Bad Handling

Port Chicago Situation Gets New Inspection

Atlanta, Ga.

By HARRY McCALPIN

WASHINGTON, D. C. —(NNPA) —While there was no indication that justice had not been served in the actual trial of the 50 sailors convicted of mutiny several months ago following the Port Chicago explosion, it appeared that mistakes in personnel had helped to precipitate the mutiny, according to Lester Granger, executive secretary of the National Urban League, who recently returned from an inspection tour of naval installations on the West Coast.

7-21-45

Mr. Granger pointed out that immediately after the explosion which killed several hundred enlisted men and officers, survivors who had seen the tragedy were picked and sent to other bases to continue loading ammunition because of the great need.

BAD FEELING

According to men left at Port Chicago, with whom he talked, there was a feeling that these young men should not have been picked up and dropped into another job of doing the same thing after having had their relatively peaceful existence shockingly disturbed by seeing their buddies blown out of existence in a twinkling of an eye.

The men involved in the mutiny, Granger said, felt they had been discriminated against. They noted that their detachment was an all-Negro unit. They felt this was so because the work was dangerous. In that situation, he said, someone should have used better judgment.

NO BIAS FEELING

Among the men left at Port Chicago, Granger said he did not find any feeling that there had been discrimination. However, he said he feels there is plenty of ground for reconsideration of the severity of the sentence in view of the fact the Navy is not entirely without blame for the situation arising. Ten of the men were sentenced to 15 years, 24 were sentenced to 12 years, 11 were sentenced to 10 years and 5 were sentenced to 8 years.

7-21-45

Mr. Granger revealed that since the Port Chicago incident, the Navy has adopted a policy of reducing the complement of Negroes in ammunition depots to not more than 30 per cent of the total.

Says Fleet Arm Is Far Ahead Of Army

Atlanta Daily World

Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — The navy is sincerely administering its new policy to integrate Negroes in all phases of the services.

That was the essence of the report made here Friday to Navy Secy. James V. Forrestal by Lester B. Granger executive secretary of the National Urban League, after a naval inspetion tour that took him to 12 naval stations, bases and depots on the west coast, the Great Lakes Naval training school in four naval districts.

7-21-45

The navy's policy of integrating Negroes in all phases of the services is "admirably sound" and is being "honestly and intelligently administered" in the headquarters of all naval districts, he said. He added that 'the further down in the ranks of command the administration of this policy descended, the more instances there were of deviation from it or violation of its spirit.'

REASONS FOR TRIP

Granger said he made the trip for two reasons. One was to observe the actual administration of the navy's policy of integrating Negroes, and the other to discuss with Negro enlisted men and their officers the practical results of the racial policy as it affects the performance and morale of Negro personnel.

He talked with 80 Negro and white enlisted men, he said.

"In spite of these not infrequent violations of the policy," he remarked, "is is evident that the navy made remarkable strides during the past two years toward the complete equality of expression in the service."

It is a progress "which reflects great credit upon the integrity and intelligence of the navy's leaders, and which should evoke a warm spirit of cooperation from the Negro and white public which is anxious to see our armed services more completely democratized," Granger declared.

AHEAD OF ARMY

Asked how navy policy in practice compared with that of the war department, he said he had no expert knowledge of the latter. He observed, however, that "the navy is far ahead of the army. The navy is doing things which the army insists would be bad for morale.

"The war department," he continued, "is still trying to build two armies whereas the navy had realized that is insanity."

Granger noted specific instances where the integrated pattern is working successfully, listed gains made in the service and revealed that he plans to make a similar tour of Pacific installations sometime during the fall.

He denied reports that he will be named civilian aide to the secretary of the navy. He has urged such an appointment and expressed confidence it will be done, but he will not be the appointee, he added.

LAST ALL-NEGRO RECRUIT COMPANY IS GRADUATED FROM GREAT LAKES

The Iowa Bystander, Des Moines Iowa
8-30-45

Great Lakes, Ill.—The last all-Negro recruit company was graduated from the U. S. Naval Training Center at Great Lakes, Illinois, last week, after winning almost every Recruit Training Award.

The company, commanded by Fritz Weller, Boatswain's Mate, second class, 208 W. 151st street, New York City, in battalion competition won the "Rooster" flag for military proficiency for six successive weeks, the athletic "A" award for three successive weeks and set twelve new Center track records. Harry David Bray, Apprentice Seaman, 180½ North street, Rochester, N. Y., was selected honor man of the company.

Captain R. J. Penny, commanding officer of the Recruit Training Command, addressing the company at the graduation review said: "You men have done an excellent job. If you do your work in the Fleet as well as you have done in training, you will be a credit to your country as well as your race." 8-30-45

Negro recruits entering the Navy since July 1, have been assigned to the same companies as whites and the policy of maintaining a special training program and camp at Great Lakes for Negroes for general service has been discontinued.

Negro Seamen Mark First Year At New Orleans Hotel

Chicago Defender
Chicago, Ill.
9-8-45

By JOHN LeFLORE
(Defender Staff Correspondent)

NEW ORLEANS, La.—The valor of the nation's white and black merchant seamen was lauded by Archbishop Joseph H. Rommell of New Orleans, who was principal speaker at a banquet held on last Saturday evening commemorating the first anniversary of the George Washington Carver Hotel-Club for Negro seamen.

The first anniversary of the hostelry was celebrated with a three-day program, beginning on Friday with an inspection by prominent guests of the residential, dining and recreational facilities and closing on Sunday night with a formal dance. Archbishop Rommell's address was one of the feature events of the occasion.

Speaking before a number of leading citizens of both races who were present at the dinner party, the archbishop paid tribute to the important role played by the boys in dungaree to help win the war, and also to the late Dr. George W. Carver of Tuskegee Institute, for whom the hotel-club was named.

USS Jim-Crow in South

Other speakers at the banquet included Rabbi Julian B. Feibelman, Rev. L. L. Haynes, Frank C. Bancroft, Gulf Coast regional director of USS; A. P. Tureaud, prominent attorney and chairman of the Carver advisory committee, USS, and J. L. LeFlore, chairman of the Dorrie Miller advisory committee, USS, Mobile.

The Carver Hotel-Club is operated by the United Seamen's Service, with headquarters in New York, which provides sleeping and club facilities throughout the world for merchant seamen. Only in the South does the organization have separate units for white and Negro seamen. This policy has been forced upon the agency by so-called southern custom and perhaps law in one or two instances.

The hostelry here for Negro seamen is one of five so far opened for them in southern ports. The USS is the only seamen's welfare group which has established sleeping and recreation accommodations for Negroes in the South. Since it was founded to meet contingencies confronting seamen during the war it is not known at this time as to whether it will be made a permanent post-war service. It seems to be the opinion of many citizens throughout the nation and a large percentage of merchant seamen that it should continue to function as a peace-time organization.

20 Per cent Negroes

Negro seamen, who comprise about 20 per cent of the American merchant mariners who enter southern ports, were without decent housing accommodations and wholesome recreation before the USS was organized.

Negro, Whites in Same Building

The Carver and the Senator, the latter is a USS-operated facility for white seamen here, provide the rather unique experience of Negro and white seamen being housed in the same building in the South. Both groups have living and recreation quarters in the old Senator Hotel, in the heart of the French section. The Senator was previously a hotel for the white public, and included all of the space occupied now by the Carver-Senator seamen's hostelries.

To acquire the property for merchant seamen the War Shipping Administration had to institute condemnation proceedings.

Race-baiting whites, led by Cong. F. Edward Hebert, of this district, and strongly supported by Mayor Robert H. Maestri, attempted to block the utilization of the old Senator Hotel as a seamen's facility. They were willing for whites to occupy the building but were opposed to Negro seamen, who were sharing the same war tragedies as their white shipmates, being housed there.

Hebert, who proved himself as another example of the poor representation with which the South continues to plague the Congress in this enlightened day, took to the radio to spread his race-hate campaign against the occupancy of any part of the old Senator Hotel by Negro seamen. He viciously attacked the War Shipping Administration and exerted pressure on one of New Orleans' leading white citizens, George H. Terriberry, who was chairman of the New Orleans Port Area Committee of the USS at the time.

The New Orleans political demagogues brought out the red-herring of social equality to conveniently meet their designs. However, the will of the people who believe that America must eventually afford us a realistic democracy prevailed.

The doorway to the foyer of the colored section of the building is on Iberville street and the entrance to the lobby of the white seamen's hotel is on Dauphine street; a drug store which occupies the corner space forms the exterior separation between the white and colored units.

During its first year of operation the Carver served 2,277 seamen, had a total number of 7,884 beds used, and its recreational programs attracted a total attendance of 70,155. A volunteer corps of 217 workers has contributed 6,800 hours of service toward making the seamen's stay in port pleasant and comfortable.

"Story Being Investigated" Say Officials; 123 Kept Off Ship

WASHINGTON (NNPA)—As an avalanche of protests rolled in, the Navy Department declined last Wednesday to comment on the action of the commander of the aircraft carrier Croatan in barring 123 colored combat soldiers from sailing aboard the vessel.

12-15-45

As the result of the action of Capt. Charles D. Griffin of Virginia Beach, Va., the men were forced to sail from Le Havre on a much slower vessel.

In reply to a request to comment on reports concerning the conduct of Captain Griffin, the Navy issued the following statement:

"Until full facts are ascertained, the Navy Department cannot comment on this story. Navy policy, however, is one of no segregation. Ships of the "Magic Carpet," including carriers, have brought home colored and white officers and colored and white enlisted men, quartered together and messed together.

In Line with Policy

"This is in line with the Navy's policy of non-discrimination under which colored men are currently trained and assigned as other personnel without reference to race. Colored officers and enlisted men are serving aboard Navy ships in mixed crews. 12-15-45

"The story is being investigated and appropriate action will be taken."

The 123 veterans, members of a quartermaster truck unit, were scheduled to sail for the United States on the Croatan from Le Havre on Dec. 4. But, over protests of Army officers, their names were stricken from the sailing list.

Navy officers argued that the Navy's policy was not to mix the races and pointed out that the facilities on the aircraft carrier would not permit segregation inasmuch as all troops would have to be quartered in the ship's hangar.

Demands Investigation

Rep. Adam C. Powell (Dem., N.Y.) in telegrams to President Truman and Secretary of the Navy James Forrestal, demanded an investigation of the case.

The NAACP telegraphed Secretary Forrestal that it wished "to lodge its protest against such treatment of colored personnel by officers of the Navy and urgently request proper investigation be held and proper disciplinary action be taken against officers of the USS Croatan immediately for this un-American action on their part."

Army officers who bowed after vigorous protests to the Navy said they refused to remove six high point colored casuals who were already on board the ship when the Navy raised its protest.

They added that difficulties over redeployment of colored veterans began as soon as naval vessels were pressed into service as troop transports.

To Ask Clarification

Col. Conrad H. Pederson of Hoboken, N.J., director of movement for the port of Le Havre, was quoted as saying he would ask the Headquarters of the U.S. forces in Europe for clarification on what to do if a similar case arose.

The U.S.S. Croatan, one of the first aircraft carriers to enter the port of Le Havre under the accelerated "Magic Carpet" program to get troops home in a hurry, is only one of such carriers performing this duty.

Captain Griffin, commander of the Croatan, is a graduate of the Naval Academy at Annapolis of June, 1927, and was on duty as a lieutenant at Anacostia near Washington when the Japs struck at Pearl Harbor.

Climbing rapidly, in July, 1942, he was made commander of a Replacement Group which operated with both Atlantic and Pacific fleets, and on Sept. 1 of that year was promoted to commander.

Appointed to duty as Commander-in-Chief of U.S. Fleet in Washington, in April, 1944, the Annapolis graduate held that post until he was made captain on Nov. 10, last, and ordered to sea as commanding officers of the Croaton.

ABOARD PACIFIC FLEET WARSHIP SOMEWHERE IN NANSEI SHOTO, April 26 (UP). — A 6-foot, 3-inch, 212-pound Negro, who was a waiter at the New Yorker Hotel or nine years, performed super-human physical feats when his ship was hit by a Japanese suicide plane on April 16 off Okinawa

4-27-45

He is Steward's Mate Second Class Samuel C. Dixon, 29, of 92 W 18 St., Bayonne, N. J.

Ensign William C. Word, Jr., Silver City, N. M., assistant gunnery officer. told of Dixon's work:

"He carried a case of three-inch ammunition under each arm and they weigh about 150 pounds each. Sometimes he would have a case of ammunition in one arm and be carrying a wounded man in the other.

4-27-45

"He would place a man in a stretcher on one deck and alone carry the litter and patient down a ladder to the deck below."

The husky former waiter said: "We all had to work hard and fast, the executive officer told me 'let's keep fighting'."

Young Seaman Wins Commendation For Action With Navy

Memphis World

1-19-45

A young Memphis seaman came home last month, after 19 months of sea duty, bearing two letters of Presidential Commendation, an Oak Leaf Cluster, and other ribbons and stripes to indicate the part he has already played in the global conflict.

Petty Officer Third Class Walter Lee Robinson Jr., 19-year old son of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Robinson, Sr., 651 North Decatur, is the youthful Memphian who made his first trip home in almost two years, arriving around the middle of last month. He is returning for another assignment this week-end.

Young Robinson, volunteering for the Navy 23 months ago has seen action in several theaters of war. Serving on a Landing Ship Tank (LST) vessel, he manned an anti-aircraft gun among other duties. He saw battle action in Sicily, Oran, and Bizerte.

The youth said his most exciting action was seen at Bizerte, where he and his colleagues took part in an all night battle against enemy planes. After trips to overseas ports in Africa, England, Sicily, Italy, and France. . .he was under fire at Salerno. . .Robinson returned to this country without a scratch

4-9-45

A graduate of Booker T. Washington High School, the youth is also devoutly religious. He said, "I believe my good fortune in coming through those experiences unhurt so far, has been due to the fact that I prayed constantly . . .and have done so every night since going away." He is a member of Bethlehem Baptist Church.

4-9-45

He said he plans to enter college following the close of the war, and study to become a radio technician. While in Memphis on his leave he visited relatives and friends, among them Miss Lou Ethel Hines, 1111-B Mosby Street.

LOS ANGELES, March 4—(AP)—The two-day hunger strike of a Negro navy construction battalion at Port Hueneme, near Oxnard, Calif., ended today when the men reported for breakfast, naval officials said.

The navy public relations office here reported that no known change had occurred in the conditions of which the men complained, but added that "apparently they just got good and hungry."

3-5-45

The number affected was estimated at approximately 1,000 men by Norman O. Houston, member of the Los Angeles directorate, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Houston said practically the entire personnel of the Thirty-fourth Construction Battalion, veterans of 21 months' service in the South Pacific, participated. Their complaint, he declared, was against the alleged addition of white enlisted men to the battalion for ultimate rating as chief petty officers, whereas the Negroes feel entitled to these ratings because of their experience overseas.

The public relations office said that provision for elevation of Negro battalion members to chief petty officer ratings is now pending in Washington. Their demonstration, a spokesman added, does not constitute meeting, because they cannot be ordered to eat. No discrimination against members of the battalion has been practiced, their commander declared.

Navy Department Ready To Take Positive Action In Integrating Negroes In All Service Branches

New York Age

3-17-45

The Navy Department under Secretary James Forrestal, intends to pursue vigorous steps toward the integration of Negroes in all branches of the Navy Service. This assurance was the result of a conference held in Washington Tuesday, between Lester B. Granger, executive secretary of the National Urban League, and Secretary Forrestal on the status of Negroes in the naval forces, and attitudes of the Negro public regarding recent racial incidents that have occurred.

3-17-45

The Urban League official emphasized the need for a thorough investigation of the real conditions under which Negroes live and serve in the Navy, so as to uncover those factors responsible for such outbreaks as the "Hunger Strike" carried on recently by Negro Seabees at Port Hueneme, California. Other recommendations called for wide assignment of Negro nurses to duty in naval hospitals; programs for training and commissioning of additional officer personnel and their assignment to a broad spread of naval responsibility; correcting unsatisfactory employment conditions in many shipyards and other naval establishments, and wider publicity for Negroes engaged in combat in other naval services.

3-17-45

The question of the post-war status of Negroes in the Navy was raised by Mr. Granger, who pointed out that except for mess attendants, stewards, and the like, practically all present Negro personnel are in the Navy's reserves rather than in the regular service.

These and other racial problems Mr. Forrestal was told, cannot be solved by the simple process of appointing a Negro as civilian aide to the Secretary. Mr. Granger emphasized the need for wider use of Negro commissioned personnel as specialists and technicians througsout the whole department; promotion of some to the ranks above that of ensigns and lieutenants; creation of a formal public relations machinery to publicize in the Negro and white press, the achievements of colored sailors and marines and coast guard members and setting up advisory machinery which will establish sound racial policy and actually put it into effect in the various branches and divisions of the Department. All of this, it was pointed out, call for a good deal more than simply the appointment of a civilian aide.

Youngsters Prove Alert, Efficient

3-10-45

KANOHE BAY, OAHU, Hawaii—Manning the complex instruments of radio communication throughout the Pacific areas are men who have found their talents best suited for this branch of the Navy's great fighting machine.

Among these men are many alert young Negroes who have come from all kinds of civilian jobs to find their positions in winning the war. One such man is Seaman First Class Roosevelt Smith Jr., 19 years old, who less than eleven months ago was a corn and cotton farmer in Jackson, Miss.

ATTENDED RADIO SCHOOL

When he enlisted Seaman Smith was sent to the United States Naval Training Center at Great Lakes, Ill. There he went through recruit training and during that time was examined and found qualified for the radioman service school. After completion of his training there he was sent to Navy Air Station here for duty.

Another talented Smith, although no relation to this shipmate of the same name, is on duty in radio communications at this station. He is seaman First Class Jessie Smith of Philadelphia, Pa.

SEES PERMANENT WORK

3-10-45

Also 19 years old this seaman Smith was a student in a school for radio work, having developed an interest in this field before he enlisted in the Navy. He too went through recruit training and radioman service school at Great Lakes. He plans to make radio his occupation after the war.

Erase All Fears Of Abilities

3-10-45

KANEOHE BAY, OAHU, Hawii—Many skilled Negro technicians are applying their talents to the maintenance and repair of airplane engines at the Naval Air Station here.

"Not so long ago a number of the Navy men and civilians working in the section that handles such work were voicing concern over the forthcoming debut of Negroes in the shop," one of the supervisors at this air station said.

FEARS WERE GROUNDLESS

"These Navy men and civilians pride themselves on the quality of their work and some felt that the new men might not be able to hold up the standards. They quickly found that their fears were groundless. Now the men work side by side in a spirit of friendly competition and with the greatest of harmony."

Among those responsible for the record of the new men are Seaman First Class Fadis Jones, 26, of 205 Lenwood avenue, Dublin, Ga., and Seaman First Class Joseph T. Kilpatrick, 33, of Tallahassee, Fla. Both men were mechanics before they enlisted in the Navy and both are now striking for the rating of aviation machinist's mate, third class.

TRIBUTE FROM OFFICER

The leading chief petty officer of the department in which they work, Aviation Chief Machinist's Mate Vernie E. Sigler, USN, of Winslow, Ind., pays high tribute to both men for the quality of their work, the interest and willingness with which they approach it and for their ability to get along well with their shipmates.

Navy Secretary Names Committee on Negro

Philadelphia Tribune

5-19-45

WASHINGTON (ANP)—Navy Sec'y. James V. Forrestal has appointed a departmental representative of the Marine corps, the Coast Guard and the Navy itself to advise him on problems arising in connection with the recruitment training and assignment of Negro personnel, the Associated Negro Press learns exclusively.

This committee was authorized in a circular letter dated April 30. The personnel has not yet been formally announced but it is known that there are nine persons on the committee. It held its organizing meeting last Monday and met again Friday afternoon to further its program of action. It was expecting shortly to sit with Asst. Navy Sec'y Ralph Bard who, from present indications, will be responsible for the work of the committee out of the office of the secretary.

The plan that is now being followed is one that had been advanced both from within the department and outside. Lester Granger, executive secretary, National Urban league, talked with Forrestal on the subject and on March 19, is understood to have submitted a memorandum covering the conversations and embodying the departmental committee ideas.

The memorandum, however, is understood to have gone further and carried the proposal that instead of appointing a civilian aide, much as the war department enjoys in the services of Truman K. Gibson, that a Negro be made assistant secretary for the department. This approach, it is thought, would serve to dignify the position and the work both in the minds of Negroes and members of Navy department.

Navy Ships Four Medical Officers To Pearl Harbor

Philadelphia Tribune

2-17-45 P2

HONOLULU—(ANP)— The first 4 Negro medical and dental officers commissioned in the United States navy are expected here shortly. Thousands of Negro seamen are gradually being assembled at this point where it is expected the ultimate in permitting Negroes to progress upward in naval ratings will be inaugurated.

Comdr. Daniel W. Armstrong, under whose aegis the training school for Negroes at Great Lakes was launched, is stationed temporarily in this area under the immediate command of Adm. Nimitz, his current duty being to see to it that Negro personnel is properly and effectively integrated into advanced naval operations here in this area.

2-17-45

The four officers, two physicians and two dentists have been stationed at Great Lakes for several months. The men are Lts. Ulysses Wharton and Arthur Thompson, physicians, and Lts. Frazier and Watkins, dentists. Lt. Wharton is from Washington and a Howard graduate. Lt. Thompson is from Detroit and Meharry. Lt. Watkins is a graduate of the dental school at the University of Pennsylvania.

Navy Backs Shore Patrol in Clash with Va. Police

Afro-American 4-14

Special to the AFRO

PORTSMOUTH, Va.—As a result of a clash here last week in which a white policeman sought to arrest a shore patrolman for "jaywalking," Navy authorities, on Saturday, put a senior grade lieutenant in charge.

The action of the Navy makes it clear that it has no intention of removing its shore patrolmen as requested by O. B. Dunn, local chief of police. The patrol was formerly headed by a chief petty officer.

Guns Drawn in Dispute

Last Monday, Herman Beale, owner of the New Horseshoe Grill in the 800 block of High Street, called the shore patrol to stop a disturbance in his establishment.

Two shore patrolmen, A. McWilliams and R. Barco, started across the street in answer to his call when V. L. Davis, white traffic officer, ordered them back to the curb.

When they ignored his request, Davis is reported to have grabbed Barco. Both drew their guns but did not fire.

Police Strikes Patrol

Davis then left the scene but returned with a car of other city policemen, guns drawn, bent upon making the arrest. Shore Patrolmen Points and Ross, hearing the altercation, came on the run and ordered the city policemen to put away their guns.

One of the officers struck at Barco with a blackjack but was quickly disarmed. Chief Petty Officer Joseph Ross, white, in charge of the patrol, came upon the scene and told the city police that he was in charge of the men and would handle the matter.

Warrants for the arrest of McWilliams and Barco were issued on charges of violating the city traffic ordinance and resisting arrest, but the Navy refused to let the men appear in police court the following day.

Officials in Conference

Police Chief Dunn reportedly said: "I am not going to allow the Navy shore patrol to run things here," and on Wednesday the shore patrol was removed. Interested citizens appealed to the mayor for an immediate adjustment, pointing out that the Navy provided the only police protection given colored citizens.

On Friday city officials met with high ranking Navy officials of the Fifth Naval District, among them Rear Admiral C. H. Jones, Capt. C. E. Olsen, representing Rear Admiral David LeBreton, commandant of the district, and Lt. Com. J. M. Bain, in charge of the shore patrol.

The Navy officials cited to the city authorities the ruling of the U.S. Supreme Court on the arrest of military personnel for misdemeanors. The police and other city officials admitted that they were ignorant of the ruling. The patrol was then brought back.

Patrol Rating High

Portsmouth has been the scene of many interracial clashes, most of the "incidents" taking place on public conveyances. In each case, colored defendants have been fined by the judge and also lectured on their "place" in the South.

4-14-45

Colored shore patrolmen are now serving also in Norfolk and Newport News. Their record is excellent, although they work under the handicap, unlike white shore patrolmen, of being empowered to arrest Navy offenders only.

Pardon Us, Your Cullud Navy Is Showing 11-10-45

"WOMEN," said Lester Granger, "cause most of the trouble between colored and white navy boys in the Pacific." The boys get along pretty well at work, but there is fierce competition for what little recreation there is. The island women who will associate with the sailors are far too few, and not very attractive, but if it has a skirt on it, there's a fight over it. The boys are starved, some of them for months and years, and it is just as well Negro WAVES didn't show up.

Lester, back from his naval tour of the Pacific, reported to Secretary of Navy Forrestal, and didn't pull his punches. He told him that best race relations exists aboard ships, next best at air bases, and God help the rest. Most of the discrimination and prejudice exists because the officers in charge are prejudiced. When they are removed and decent officers substituted, race discrimination and race friction vanish.

He said the Marines are no damn good as far as race is concerned, and that none of the five Negroes admitted for Marine officer training had been "allowed" to graduate. He said more Negro navy officers are needed, Negroes should be allowed to act as shore patrolmen in the Pacific, and there should be a helluva lot more recreation provided for both white and colored boys. He didn't think much of Commander Armstrong as the liaison personnel officer for Negroes, as he is doing nothing much in his Pearl Harbor office. He said some improvement is being made by the navy, but there is room for more. He added for NAACP's benefit, when navy officers, and that he (Lester) is no damn "tool for the navy." The colored newsmen who talked to him felt pretty good afterwards, and went to see a special preview of the navy film, "The Sailor." The boys weren't too happy over the film (which they had) and complained it made 'em dizzy the way it jumped from segregation to semi-integration and back again.

NEGRO GRADUATES FROM GREAT LAKES NOW SCATTERED ALL OVER PACIFIC FIGHTING ZONE

The Black Dispatch

Trained Radiomen and Many Other Technicians Can Be Found Along Battle Front

Okla. City - Okla.

WORK ALONG SIDE WHITES

HONOLULU.—(ANP)—It can now be told where the great mass of Negro graduates from Great Lakes Service schools are functioning. The slight haze of mystery which had been thrown around it is disappearing as Negro sailors and craftsmen are being flung into regular navy jobs and having their ups and downs like the rest of the sailors.

Comdr. Daniel W. Armstrong, too, whom everybody remembers as the man who tackled the job of the special service units at Great Lakes in order to get Negroes started into the navy in the early days, is right out here with his boys. He's now attached to the staff of the commander, service force, U. S. Pacific fleet, and that's where most of the colored sailors are functioning. 7-21-45

The story of the participation of Negro units in the naval operations of the Pacific war has followed a normal American pattern. In the earlier stages of development of plans and the execution of them there have been strengths and weaknesses, excellent performances and poor performances. There is no boubt today, however, that the record of Negro naval units in swinging to strength and excellent performances. Many factors account for this trend. Seasoning and experience of the men themselves, some of whom now have from two to three years of nabal service to their credit, have been a great factor.

Form the Pacific coast, where they operated patrol ships and harbor craft as well as men shore facilities, to the beaches and hills of Okinawa and on the high seas between, Negro man of the navy are shouldering their assignments with confidence and ability.

In Hawaiian Island

In the Hawaiian islands, particularly at the many stations surrounding Pearl Harbor, many thousands perform inumerable duties in the operations which carry the war forward. These include naval air stations, naval ammunition depots, and the vast naval supuly depot.

Negro officers carry a large share of the administrative load at Manana Naval barracks where one is the first lieutenant and maintenance officer, another the disbursing officer, another the commissary officer, and others doctors and dentists.

Negro petty officers at many stations are carrying out duties in administration, military leadership and skilled specialties such as work on aviation engines, communiciations and transfer of high explosives. Yeoman handle office management duties, storekeepers concern themselves with the vast quantities of supplies passing through to the fleet, gunner's mate supervise ammunition activities; and machinist's mates keep mechanical devices in operation.

Logistics Support Companies

At Iroquois Points, on the island of Oahu, there is a major training activity through which many now logistic support companies are passing for training on the way to duty in combat areas. Both Negro and white companies are being trained identically and will perform iidentical duties side by side when they reach their destination.

Logistics support companies are among the most versatile organization in service today. They must be able to land with an assault echolon, establish their own field facilities, repel the enemy, operate many kinds of equipment on land and water, and mobe equipment and supplies frim ship to shore. They must be familiar with rifles, sub-machine guns, grenades, booby-traps, gas mask, and decontamination equipment; they learn sentry duty, scouting and patrolling, combat signals and hand-to-hand combat techniques as well as operation of cranes, winches, boats, distillation and refrigeration machinery.

All of this training, including a period of bivouac where they actually practice field conditions, is conducted by the advance base section of service force, U. S. Pacific Fleet.

On High Seas

On the sea, many of the great fleet auxiliaries carry substantial numbers of Negroes in their deck engineering forces. It is no rarity to find a Negro quartermaster or seaman standing a steersman watch on the bridge, or a Negro signalman at the blinkers or flagbag on the signal bridge, or a Negro gunner's mate readying the ship's heavy guns for action.

In numerous "shacks," the hubs of radio communication aboard ship, can be found trained Negro radiomen, carphones over their heads, concentrating on the messages coming in from far over the sea. 7-21-45

In Marianas

In the Marianas islands, at Guam, Saipan and Tinian, units of navy Negroes are carrying on activities of vital importance to the fleet in harrying the enemy. Some of these activities are less dramatic and perhaps less glamorous than those of many of their shipmates mentioned, but they are nevertheless performing essential military duties at the supply depots, ammunition depots and operating bases of that area.

On Okinawa

On Okinawa, nearing the end of the long westward march to the heart of the Japanese empire, American forces include sime Negro navy legistics support companies. Detailed accounts of these units must be withheld until operations can be more completely revealed and details obtained, but early reports give clear indication that they have performed remarkably well under difficult operational circumstances. 7-21-45

The signs of newness, the uncertainty of the recruit, have worn off now and many Negroes, seasoned to the wavs of the navy, are taking their positions beside their white shipmates in the victory drive of our forces in the far Pacific.

NAACP CHARGES HALF STORY NOT TOLD; NO PUNISHMENT METED OUT WHITE SOLDIERS

Omaha Nebraska World Herald

New Orleans Louisiana.

New York, July 19. — NAACP Secretary, Walter White, charged Guam authorities today with conspicuously failing to reveal the long series of unprovoked and unpunished attacks which led up to the courts-martial of 43 Negroes attached to the United States Naval Depot, convicted of charges including rioting and unlawful assembly. Announcement of the sentences, ranging from four months to four years, came on the heels of Mr. White's radio report Saturday over the Columbia Broadcasting System in which he told of what had taken place on a Navy Board of Inquiry on which he served as defense counsel, investigating a clash between white Marine and Negro Navy Base Company personnel. In describing the details leading up to the incidents which occurred December 25 and 26, 1944, Mr. White said: 7-21-45

"For weeks a few Marines had been throwing bricks, empty beer bottles, and upon three occasions, hand grenades and smoke bombs into camps occupied by Negro Navy men. When no attempt was made by the authorities to stop the attacks or punish the attackers, the colored men, in despair, determined to defend themselves when next attacked.

"The next assault took place a few days later on Christmas Eve when a group of white servicemen fired upon colored servicemen and ran them out of the main town on the island. Shortly after midnight, a truck load of white Marines went to the Negro camp charging that one of their number had been hit by a stone thrown by a Negro Navy man. The Marines threatened to 'take the matter into their own hands.' On Christmas Day one Negro serviceman was shot and killed and another shot by white servicemen. These and other assaults infuriated the men who had been attacked to the point that twice they went into town to take vengeance. On one occasion they were turned back; on the second they were arrested, charged with rioting and unlawful assemblage." 7-21-45

When the NAACP request for a copy of the transcript of testimony and findings by the Board of Inquiry was turned down by both the Island Commander in Guam and Secretary of the Navy Forrestal, White took the matter up personally with President Truman in his White House conference on May 25th. At that time the President promised, the NAACP would be given the desired information. The first official knowledge however came in a wire service release, July 11. Accordingly the Association has announced renewal of its original request for a full report of the testimony and findings in order that the Legal Committee can determine procedure to be taken in behalf of the 43 convicted Negro sailors. Mr. White declared in commenting on the entire situation that, "while the NAACP makes no defense for any illegal acts which the defendants may have committed, we do charge that these men were goaded by attacks and failure of island authorities to check repeated physical and verbal attacks on Negro sailors or to punish these attackers."

The lone New Orleans sailor involved in the riot was Seaman First Class Joseph Lee Breston, 2916½ LaSalle Street, who was sentenced to 24 months confinement with a bad conduct discharge. 7-31-45

NAACP Takes Issue With Navy in Conviction of 50 In Port Chicago Tragedy

Kansas City, Mo.

Assooiation Asks Permission to File Additional Briefs for Men Who Feared To Load Ammunition After Explosion

The Call

NEW YORK. — The N.A.A.C.P. was advised Friday, July 13, by the Navy department that the sentences of the 50 Negro seamen convicted in October, 1944, for mutiny at Yerba Buena Island, Cal., have been held legal.

Ralph A. Bard, acting secretary of the Navy declared, "the trials were conducted fairly and impartially." He stated further that, "racial discrimination was guarded against."

Through Special Counsel Thurgood Marshall, the N.A.A.C.P. has made a formal request to Secretary of the Navy Forrestal for permission to file additional briefs and for opportunity to present the case personally before him.

The Negro seamen were originally charged with mutiny in August, 1944, for refusal to load ammunition at Port Chicago, Cal., where investigation revealed more than 300 of their number had been killed in an explosion the month before.

Under the supervision of white officers the men had received no previous training in the handling of ammunition prior to the disaster. 7-20-45

Prejudice At Proceedings

Race and race prejudice was continuously injected into the proceedings by Lieutenant Commander William F. Coakley, Trial Judge Advocate, during the trial from September 14 to October 24, 1944.

Testimony in the case revealed two of the men were suffering from the effects of broken arms when the alleged order was given to load ammunition. Another, weighing only 104 pounds had a Navy doctor's certificate stating he should not be given hard work.

Despite a Navy psychiatrist's testimony at the trial substantiating certain definite fear reactions which men experiencing an explosion of this kind would have, and despite the testimony of the 50 accused, the Court followed the demands of the Trial Judge Advocate, finding the men guilty of mutiny and sentencing each of them to 50 years imprisonment. Sentences were pronounced after 85 minutes deliberation. Reductions were made later by the Navy.

N.A.A.C.P. Presents Brief

At the request of the men, N.A.A.C.P. Special Counsel Thurgood Marshall presented a memorandum brief and argued the case personally before the assistant judge advocate general of the United States Navy. The brief pointed out there was no legal evidence whatsoever to sustain the charge of mutiny and that the evidence on the charge of a refusal to obey an order was in dispute and grave doubt.

The obvious prejudicial conduct of Lieutenant Commander Coakley, prosecutor, in emphasizing the question of race during the trial, was pointed out in many instances. In addition it was also claimed. had the men been white, the case would not have merited a trial.

Because conviction of these men tends to discredit other Negro seamen, the N.A.A.C.P. urges all persons interested in justice for seamen in general to make their views known to the Secretary of the Navy at once.

This case is the largest mutiny trial in the history of the United States Navy and is the first of its kind during the present war.

Pictures and releases attesting the fact that the largest mutiny trial in history involves Negroes, have been released by the Navy department.

Granger Says Mutiny Case Badly Handled

Kansas City The Call

By HARRY McALPIN Mo.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(ANP) —While there was no indication that justice had not been served in the actual trial of the 50 sailors convicted of mutiny several months ago following the Port Chicago explosion, it appeared that mistakes in personnel had helped to precipitate the mutiny, according to Lester Granger, executive secretary of the National Urban League, who recently returned from an inspection tour of naval installations on the west coast. 7-21-45

Mr. Granger pointed out that immediately after the explosion which killed several hundred enlisted men and officers, survivors who had seen the tragedy were picked up and sent to other bases to continue loading ammunition because of the great need.

According to men left at Port Chicago, with whom he talked, there was a feeling that these young men should not have been picked up and dropped into another job of doing the same thing after having had their relatively peaceful existence shockingly disturbed by seeing their buddies blown out of existence in a twinkling of an eye.

The men involved in the mutiny, Granger said, felt they had been discriminated against. They noted that their detachment was an all-Negro unit. They felt this was so because the work was dangerous. In that situation, he said, someone should have used better judgment. 7-20-45

Among the men left at Port Chicago, Granger said he did not find any feeling that there had been discrimination. However, he said, he feels there is plenty of ground for reconsideration of the severity of the sentence in view of the fact the navy is not entirely without blame for the situation arising. Ten of the men were sentenced to 15 years, 24 were sentenced to 12 years, 11 were sentenced to 10 years, and 5 were sentenced to eight years.

Mr. Granger revealed that since the Port Chicago incident, the navy has adopted a policy of reducing the complement of Negroes in ammunition depots to not more than 30 per cent of the total.

Granger Confirms New Navy Policy

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON

The application of the Navy policy of complete integration, adopted more than a year ago without fuss or fanfare, was confirmed Friday by Lester B. Granger, executive secretary of the National Urban League.

Mr. Granger, who recently completed a tour of Navy installations made at the request of Secretary of the Navy Forrestall, told newsmen at the Navy Department that the new program had progressed to the point where "It's no longer the same Navy." 7-21-45

Reporting on the tour which covered 12 Navy installations in all parts of the country where more than 3,000 colored Navy men are stationed, he said that the Navy was far ahead of the Army in its racial policy.

Stated Policy Sound

Crediting the service with "a sincere and honest effort" to achieve full integration in all of its phases, he described the new policy as "admirably sound as officially set forth."

"I found that to be honestly and intelligently administered in the headquarters of all the Naval districts I visited," he continued.

"I found no resistance to the policy, but rather a lively and sincere interest in making the policy successful," he said.

Contrasted with Army Setup

Commenting further on its soundness, he contrasted it with that of the War Department which, he said, is attempting to develop two armies—a white one and a black one.

Discussing its operation he said that the farther down in the ranks of command its administration descended, the more likely there were to be violations.

Personnel Officers Urged

In order to provide for the effective nforcement of the policy, he added, an officer whose duty would be that of checking upon and seeing to the disciplining of violators should be appointed to the Bureau of Personnel.

Despite the "not inferquent" violations, he asserted that the Navy has made "remarkable strides" during the past two years toward achievement of equality of service.

Navy Leaders Commended

"It is a progress," he said, "which reflects great credit upon the integrity and intelligence of the Navy's leaders."

Among specific gains cited by Mr. Granger were:

1. Admission of colored men to general service.

2. The rating of colored men in practically every category and their training as commissioned officers.

One-Tenth of Ship's Complement

3. Assignment of colored personnel to auxiliary craft up to 10% of a ship's complement.

4. Assignment of colored petty and commissioned officers to these vessels to serve in their duties without regard to race.

5. Important elimination of racial segregation in mess and in recreational facilities.

6. Beginning of assigning of colored personnel to combat duties on warships.

South Gets Anti-Jim Crow Lesson

Navy Attitude Not 'Ideal,' but Prober Is Encouraged

Jim Crow cities, like Corpus Christi, Tex., and New Orleans, La., are watching Negro and white Naval personnel, both civilian and military, working side by side without segregation.

This policy, said Lester B. Granger, executive secretary of the National Urban League, is contrary to the established social custom of the South and "must have an enduring result."

At a press conference at the organization's headquarters at 1133 Broadway, Granger revealed that Negroes overseas.

This trip will conclude a series of inspections begun by Granger last June as personal representative of Secretary Forrestal.

Among the violations of official policy which he reported were extreme racial segregation, emphasized by such signs as 'For Colored Enlisted Personnel'; segregation of Negro from white personnel in film shows, mess hall and canteen service; rough handling of Negro seamen by white shore police; and, in one case, segregation of Negro seamen in Navy buses transporting them to and from liberty leave.

"I do not want to paint the Navy as a little bit of heaven," Granger declared, "but the important thing is the way in which the Navy is headed."

Guam Officials Mum on Marine Attacks—White

NEW YORK—Guam authorities were charged this week with conspicuously failing to reveal the long series of unprovoked and unpunished attacks which led up to the courts-martial of 43 sailors convicted of rioting and unlawful assembly.

The charge was made by Walter White, NAACP secretary, who served as defense counsel during the trials.

Says Navy Hides Important Facts

Chicago Defender

Chicago Tribune

By VENICE T. SPRAGGS
(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, D. C.—N.A.A.C.P. Secretary Walter White this week charged navy authorities with "conspiciously failing" to reveal the long series of unprovoked and unpunished attacks which led up to the courts-martial and conviction of 43 Negroes attached to the United States Naval Depot at Guam on charges including rioting and unlawful assembly.

White served notice that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People will not relinquish its efforts to get at the bottom of the convictions in which the men were given sentences ranging from four months to four years. 7-21-45

Maj. Gen. Henry Larsen, Island commander, said the convictions growing out of incidents of last Christmas night have been confirmed and are final.

One Negro who is now hospitalized will face trial on one or more of the charges preferred against the other defendants.

These charges, Guam officials say, are based on findings of a board of inquiry which investigated two incidents on the night of December 25, and 26, 1944.

The navy version of the affair attest that from December 25-30 Negroes left the depot without authorization in two trucks. The group was intercepted, the navy goes on to say, by Negro masters-at-arms and white military police who found 15 pistols and an amount of ammunition in the vehicles.

Later in the night, according to the navy version, M.P.'s patrolling men near the base company's area were fired on and one white military policeman was wounded in the leg. 7-21-45

A search of the area, uncovered a store of weapons which were said to have been stolen three days earlier from the naval warehouse.

What Guam navy officials did not say White remonstrated is, that "for weeks a few marines had been throwing bricks, empty beer bottles, and upon three occasions hand grenades and smoke bombs into camps occupied by Negro navy men. When no attempt was made by the authorities to stop the attacks or punish the attackers, the colored men in despair determined to defend themselves when next attacked.

Fire On Negroes

"The next assault took place a few days later on Christmas eve," White said, "when a group of white servicemen fired upon colored servicemen and ran them out of the main town on the island. Shortly after midnight, a truckload of white marines went to the Negro camp charging that one of their number had been hit by a stone thrown by a Negro navy man. The marines threatened to 'take the matter into their own hands.'

"On Christmas day one Negro serviceman was shot and killed and andother shot by white servicemen," White continued. "These and other assaults infuriated the men who had been attacked to the point that twice they went into town to take vengeance. On one occasion they were turned back; on the second they were arrested, charged with rioting and unlawful assemblage," the N.A.A.C.P. executive declared.

No public notice of the fracas had been released by the navy until Mr. White, who recently completed a tour of the Pacific theatre of war, reported the incident over the Columbia Broadcasting System last Saturday night. The navy's announcement followed on the heels of White's report.

The N.A.A.C.P. has made every effort to secure a transcript of the testimony and findings by the board of inquiry, to no avail, White said.

Confers With Truman

Both Major General Larsen and Secretary of the Navy Forrestal have been requested to provide this information. White took the matter up personally with President Truman in his White House conference on May 25. At that time the President promised the N.A.A.C.P. would be given the desired information. But, the only official knowledge which the N.A.A.C.P. has received to date, White said, came in a wire service release, July 11.

Accordingly, the association has announced a renewal of its original request for a report of the testimony and findings in order that the legal committee, which is headed by Judge William H. Hastie, can determine the procedure to be taken on behalf of the 43 convicted Negro sailors.

Goading Blamed

7-21-45

Commenting on the entire situation,, White declared, "While the N.A.A.C.P. makes no defense for any illegal acts which the defendants may have committed, we do charge that these men were goaded by attacks and failure of island authorities to check repeated physical and verbal attacks on Negro sailors or to punish these attackers."

Six In Crew On Destroyed Ingram

ON THE DESTROYER TRANSPORT GEORGE W. INGRAM IN JAPANESE WATERS — Six Negro Navy men were among the crewmen who took part in a double celebration on this ship when surrender of the Japanese was announced.

The dual celebration was occasioned by the fact that the surrender came on the second anniversary of the ship's commissioning. In her two years of action, the INGRAM has figured in operations in the Atlantic, the Mediterranean and the Pacific, traveling 125,000 miles, or the equivalent of five times around the world.

The six men are: Worthy McCargo, cook, second class, USNR, of Scottsburg, Va.; Louie H. Webster, steward, third class, USNR, Route 1 Bullard, Texas; Louie G. Gardner, steward's mate, first class, USNR, Route 2, Prospect, Tenn.; Willie Brown, steward's mate, second class, USNR, Beaufort, S. C.; Raymond Hall, steward's mate, first class, USNR, Route 1, Ayden, S. C.; and Johnnie Williams, steward's mate, first class, USNR, 609 Young's Alley, Mobile, Ala.

Navy Court Says Men Stole Guns, Trucks To Attack Island Marines

Charge Leathernecks Carried On Unprovoked Sniping On Navy Camp Not Considered In Christmas Day Outburst

By Associated Negro Press

GUAM—Firty-five Negro sailors have been convicted by court martial in the Christmas night uprisings between them and white troops, according to an announcement made here last week by Maj. Gen. Henry Larsen, island commander.

7-21-45

Larsen did not involve white troops, although Walter White, NAACP executive secretary, reported in a radio address from the United States that whites were involved. The commander confirmed the sentences against the Negro sailors, varying from four months to four years.

Between 25 and 30 Negro Navy men, atached to the naval supply base companies here, took two trucks without leave from the Naval supply depot and drove toward Agana, court-martial testimony established. White said that they had previously been chased from there by white marines.

NEGROES AID ARREST

These men, court records show, were apprehended in the truck by white military police and Negro masters-at-arms assigned to the depot law enforcement detail. Maj. Gen. Larson did not reveal that any testimony had been introduced to involve the whites in the uprisings.

The NAACP secretary, who served as a war correspondent for a New York newspaper, reported the reason the Negro sailors were in the trucks in serving as a defense counsel for the accused men. Testimony revealed that 14 .45 calibre pistols, a .38-calibre revolver and 18 loaded clips of .45 calibre bullets were found in the trucks.

White reported that the white marines harassed the Negro sailors into a state of desperation. A group of them threw hand grenades and smoke bombs into camps of Negro Navy men in a series of incidents that resulted in a clash, he said. These attacks went on for weeks, he disclosed, and when no attempt was made by the authorities to stop them or punish the attackers, the colored men "in despair determined to defend themselves."

The slaying of one Negro sailor on Christmas Day is said to have been the final torch that infuriated the men to action. They attempted to go into town to seek vengeance, White disclosed. Maj. Gen. Larson, however, did not reveal whether the court martial had admitted this evidence in sentencing the men or whether any effort had been made to arrest the white marines.

7-21-45

SAILOR WOUNDED

Beside the dead Negro sailor, White reported that one was wounded by the Marines in the fracas. A white MP was also wounded in the leg during an exchange of shots between them and the angry Negro sailors.

Further evidence submitted at the court martial hearings revealed that the men had hidden a store of weapons in anticipation of trouble with the white marines. The accused men were charged with rioting and unlawful assemblage, White said.

Maj. Gen. Larson reported that the sentences were final; but did not say that any efforts

Granger Reports On Inspection

Says Navy Far Ahead of Army In Racial Integration

Norfolk, Virginia

Special to Journal and Guide

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Navy is far out in front on the Army in the matter of racial integration declared Lester B. Granger, executive secretary of the National Urban League, in a report made to Navy Secretary James V. Forrestal last Friday after a three-week inspection tour of naval installations as a special representative of the Navy Department.

The Navy is now doing things which the Army insists would be bad for morale, Mr. Granger declared. He accused the Army of trying to build two armies, one black and one white, whereas the Navy has realized that is impractical.

Mr. Granger reported that his tour included twelve naval stations, bases and depots in four Naval Districts, where he found about 3,000 Negroes in the total naval personnel.

He left Washington on June 18 and returned on July 6. The trip took him over a stretch of naval establishments from San Diego to Seattle and across to the Great Lakes Training School and back to New York. He was accompanied by Lieutenant R. P. Roper of the Navy.

Commenting on his impression of the execution of the Navy's policy toward integration of Negroes, he said he considered the policy "adequately sound." His impressions, he stated, were the result of talking to Negro petty officers and seamen, and to their commanding officers.

Said Mr. Granger: "I found that the policy itself, while being formulated and promulgated in Washington, is being accepted in good spirit by the various naval districts. It is being intelligently and honestly administered in the headquarters of the Districts I visited," he declared. "In no instance did I have reason to suspect resistance to the policy. There was an evident pride in the signs of success."

MUST GUARD POLICY

Everything he found was not rosy, however, Mr. Granger admitted. He said the further down in the ranks of command the policy decended, the more instances there were of deviation from it. He said this was to be expected, for people in the Navy are Americans, and there are many prejudices on racial questions among Americans.

This emphasizes, he said, the need for policing the policy. "Only when such policing is developed will we find adherence to racial policy the same as to other naval policies," he pointed out.

Wherever violations of the policy were found on his tour, Mr. Granger said, he reported them to the commanding officers and to Washington. But despite these violations, he stated that he found the Navy has made tremendous strides in the past few years. This, he said reflects a great deal of credit upon the intelligence of the Navy leadership and upon the strength of public opinion which undoubtedly led the Navy leadership to revise and strengthen its racial policies.

"I don't think any of us is prepared to give the Navy a blank check of confidence," he declared. "But any reasonable person who has been around the country must give it credit for not being the same Navy so far as the Negro is concerned."

LISTS GAINS

Listing the gains Negroes have made in the Navy, Granger pointed to: 7-21-45

(1) Negroes are now admitted to general service assignments. Two or three years ago, only the stewards branch was open. At present, he pointed out, there are two important fields which remain closed to Negroes — aviation pilots and combat posts in the submarine service. These points, he stated, have been called to the attention of the proper officials of the Navy Department.

(2) Negroes are now being rated as petty officers in practically every category. They are being trained at Hampton Institute, which he said is on its way out as a separate training center. In this same connection, he said the training of Negro commissioned officers has been a gain. The twelve Negroes commissioned several month ago have been promoted to lieutenants (junior grade).

(3) Negro personnel is now being assigned to auxiliary craft up to ten percent of the ship's complement. They are no longer confined to one or two ships. He said he has been assured that Negroes not only will be assigned to vessels, but that petty officers will be assigned according to their duties on such ships.

(4) Progressive elimination of racial segregation in the Navy. The Navy has realized that you can't run a Navy and keep Negroes and whites separate.

SOME SEGREGATION

On this last point, Granger said there is still segregation in barracks at some places, but a few where there is none whatsoever. There is no enforced segregation in the mess halls and recreation activities.

In some places, however, particularly where separation in barracks exists, a voluntary separation in the mess hall occurs. Negroes will eat at one end of the hall and whites at the other — but in the middle, even under these circumstances, a few tables will be mixed.

Concerning recreation, he said he would h te to have the Red Cross come into the Navy program with the Red Cross segregation programs set up for the Army. Recreational needs are taken care of by the Navy with the assistance of the USO, he declared. "It demonstrates again how far wrong some of the other agencies are in saying Negroes and whites cannot amuse themselves together without riots and friction." 7-21-45

TO TOUR PACIFIC

(5) Assignment of Negroes to war ships. For a long time, he declared, Negroes were resentful of being assigned to shore duties. They felt humiliated at being assigned to loading ammunition instead of being put on ships for which they had been trained. There is every hope, he said, that this program will be expanded.

Mr. Granger, who has had two conferences with Secretary Forrestal since his return from his continental inspection tour, said in the fall he will make a similar tour of naval bases in the Pacific at request of the Secretary.

Mr. Granger returned to his office in New York over the weekend. He was notified of his election as first vice chairman of the New York chapter of the American Association of Social Workers.

NAACP Requests Further Review

Questions Legality of Mutiny Convictions

Balt. Md.

JUDGE'S BIAS CITED

Statements of Tars, Doctor Disregarded

NEW YORK — The NAACP was advised Friday by the Navy Department that the sentences of the 50 colored seamen convicted in October, 1944, for mutiny at Yerba Buena Island, Calif., have been held legal. 7-21-45

Ralph A. Bard, Acting Secretary of the Navy, declared, "the trials were conducted fairly and impartially," and that "racial discrimination was guarded against."

Appeal to Forrestal

Through special counsel, Thurgood Marshall, the NAACP has made a formal request to Secretary of the Navy Forrestal for permission to file additional briefs and for opportunity to present the case personally before him.

The seamen were originally charged with mutiny in August, 1944, for refusal to load ammunition at Port Chicago, Calif., where investigation revealed more than 300 of their number had been killed in an explosion the month before.

Under the supervision of white officers, the men had received no previous training in the handling of ammunition prior to the disaster.

Trial Judge Biased

Race and race prejudice was continuously injected into the proceedings by Lt. Com. William F. Coakley, trial judge advocate, during the trial from September 14 to October 24, 1944.

Testimony in the case revealed two of the men were suffering from the effects of broken arms when the alleged order was given to load ammunition.. Another, weighing only 104 pounds, had a Navy doctor's certificate stating he should not be given hard work.

Despite a Navy psychiatrist's testimony, substantiating certain definite fear reactions which men experiencing an explosion of this kind would have, and despite testimony of the seamen, the court followed the demands of the trial judge advocate, finding the men guilty. 7-21-45

Quick Action

Each was given 50 years' imprisonment, sentences being pronounced after 85 minutes' deliberation. Reductions were made later by the Navy. At the request of the men, Mr. Marshall presented a memorandum brief, and argued the case personally before the Assistant judge advocate general of the Navy.

Because conviction of these men tends to discredit other colored seamen, the NAACP urges all persons interested in justice for seamen in general to make their views known to the Secretary of the Navy at once.

Navy Refuses To Review Trials Of 50 Port Chicago Gobs

Chicago Ill.

Chicago Defender

(Defender New York Bureau)

NEW YORK—The navy rejected this week an appeal to review the trials of 50 Negro seamen convicted of mutiny after the famous Port Chicago explosion. 7-31-45

Now serving long prison sentences at Terminal Island, Calif., the Negro seamen were convicted in the largest mass trial in Navy history.

Through Special Counsel Thurgood Marshall the NAACP has made a formal request to Secretary of the Navy Forrestal for permission to file additional briefs and for opportunity to present the case personally before him. The Negro seamen were originally charged with mutiny in August, 1944, for refusal to load ammunition at Port Chicago, Calif., where investigation reevaled more than 300 of their number had been killed in an explosion the month before. Under the supervision of white officers the men had received no previous training in the handling of ammunition prior to the disaster.

Race Bias In Trial

Race and race prejudice was continuously injected into the proceedings by Lieut. Commander William F. Coakley, Trial Judge Advocate, during the trial from September 14 to October 24, 1944. Testimony in the case revealed two of the men were suffering from the effects of broken arms when the alleged order was given to load ammunition. Another, weighing only 104 pounds had a navy doctor's certificate stating he should not be given hard work.

Despite a navy psychiatrist's testimony at the trial substantiating certain definite fear reactions which men experiencing an explosion of this kind would have, and despite the testimony of the 50 accused, the court followed the demands of the Trial Judge Advocate, finding the men guilty of mutiny and sentencing each of them to 50 years imprisonment. Sentences were pronounced after 85 minutes deliberation. Reductions were made later by the navy.

At the request of the men, NAACP Special Counsel Thurgood Marshall presented a memorandum brief and argued the case personally before the Assistant Judge Advocate General of the United States Navy. The brief pointed out there was no legal evidence whatsoever to sustain the charge of mutiny and that the evidence on the charge of a refusal to obey an order was in dispute and grave doubt. The obvious prejudicial conduct of Lieutenant Commander Coakley, prosecutor, in emphasizing the question of race during the trial, was pointed out in many instances. In addition it was also claimed, had the men been white, the case would not have merited a trial.

Acting Secretary of the Navy Ralph A. Bard who rejected the NAACP demands, claimed that "the trials were conducted fairly and impartially," and that "racial discrimination was guarded against."

NAACP Asks Reversal Of Court-Martial

Thurgood Marshall, counsel for the NAACP (National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People) has appealed to Navy Secretary Forrestal to set aside court-martial proceedings which last October found 50 Negro seamen guilty of refusing to load ammunition ships at Mare Island Depot, Cal.

7-15-45

The 50 seamen were all survivors of an explosion at Port Chicago last July 17, in which at least 323 persons, mostly Naval and Coast Guard personnel, were killed.

Marshall said the NAACP had several legal grounds for requesting reversal of the conviction. He pointed out:

¶ There was never any evidence of mutiny, as charged by the Navy Dept. None of the 50 seamen had tried to "take over" Naval property.

More than 250 seamen were involved in the alleged refusal to obey orders, but only 50 were court-martialed, and that these were tried simultaneously, rather than separately, for individual charges.

Investigator Holds Program Far Ahead of Army's

N.Y.

WASHINGTON, July 14.—The Navy is trying sincerely and honestly to wipe out color lines in that branch of our armed forces, and its efforts, already have been so successful that "it's no longer the same Navy," Lester B. Granger, executive secretary of the National Urban League, reported here after a tour of 12 Navy installations from coast-to-coast.

The Navy's program to integrate Negroes with white personnel is "so far ahead of the Army's that it's not even funny," he added.

Granger said he made the trip at the request of Navy Secretary Forrestal to observe the actual administration of the Navy's non-discrimination policy and to talk with Negro enlisted men and their officers to see how the program is working out.

He emphasized that he talked with Negroes in the service away from official surveillance and on an off-the-record basis, so that the men could feel free to express any complaint or grievance.

Policy Sound

He reached these conclusions:

¶ The Navy's non-discrimination policy is "admirably sound as officially set forth."

¶ The policy was "honestly and intelligently administered" in the headquarters of all of the districts he visited. He found no sign of resistance to the policy "but rather a lively and sincere interest in making the policy successful." He found the top officers at each of the bases he visited "proud of what they have achieved" in eliminating racial prejudice.

¶ The further down in the ranks he went, "the more instances he found of deviation from the letter of the policy."

7-15-45

Granger said he wasn't surprised at violations of the policy down in the ranks, in view of the widespread racial prejudice in this country, but he added that wherever abuses were found and reported to higher officers, they were corrected.

Lists Gains

He listed six specific gains which have been made in the Navy in the last two years in abolishing racial discrimination:

¶ Admission of Negroes to all but two branches of the Navy. (The last holdouts are aviation pilots and combat posts in the submarine service.) Two years ago, Granger said, Negroes in the Navy were restricted to the stewards branch.

¶ The training of Negroes as commissioned officers. Previously a Negro, no matter what his training or qualifications, was barred from the rank of officer. Now he can go as high as his ability can carry him.

¶ Negro personnel in general service now are being assigned to auxiliary craft up to 10 per cent of the ships' complements. Previously Negroes in general service were restricted to one or two vessels.

¶ Progressive elimination of racial segregation. Granger said that in general Negroes and whites still have separate barracks but that segregation has been eliminated in mess halls and in recreational facilities.

7-15-45

¶ A beginning of assigning Negro personnel to combat duties on warships. He pointed out that prior to the new policy Negroes were pretty much restricted to shore duties. Their job was to load ammunition on a battleship, for example, but they never got to shoot it.

On the question of non-segregation, Granger said he talked to one white sailor "who had an accent as deep as Texas" and his feeling was:

"I'd rather stay with my own people. But I bunk next to a Negro; he leaves me alone and I leave him alone, and so it's all right."

Granger said that while there had been some "squawking" over the non-segregation policy, it was not serious and the general attitude of the men in the service was "we're all in the Navy together."

Asked if the Red Cross had anything to do with the Navy's recreation program, Granger replied:

"Thank God, no." He explained that while the Navy runs its program on a non-discrimination basis, the Red Cross encourages discrimination by providing separate white and Negro clubs overseas.

The National Urban League represented by Granger is an interracial social service organization with headquarters in New York.

Bars Down, Colored Tars Serve Throughout Pacific

Balt., Md.

Afro-American

HONOLULU — (ANP) — Following the normal American pattern, colored sailors and craftsmen are now serving through the Pacific from the Coast itself to the beaches and hills of Okinawa and on the high seas between.

Chiefly graduates of the Great Lakes Service Schools, they are still with the commander of the school, Comdr. Daniel W. Armstrong, who is now attached to the staff of the commander, services forces, U.S. Pacific fleet.

Seasoned and experienced as a result of two to three years of Naval service, the seamen, whose original performances evidenced both strengths and weaknesses, now show, according to their records, almost exclusively strength and excellence.

Colored Officers with Men

In the Hawaiian Islands, particularly at the many stations surrounding Pearl Harbor, thousands perform innumerable duties in the operations of the Naval air stations, Naval ammunition depots and the vast Naval supply depot.

Colored officers carry a large share of the administrative load at Manana Naval Barracks, where one is the first lieutenant and maintenance officer, another the commissary officer and still others doctors and dentists.

7-21-45

In addition, colored petty officers at many stations are carrying out duties in administration, military leadership and skilled specialities, such as work on aviation engines, communications and transfer of high explosives.

Trained with Whites

Yeoman handle office management duties, shorekeepers the vast quantities of supplies passing through to the fleet; gunner's mates supervise ammunition activities and machinist's mates keep mechanical devises in operation.

At Iroquois Point on the island of Oahu, others are being trained identically with white sailors for work with the many new logistic support companies being readied for duty in combat areas.

Among the most versatile organizations in service today, logistic support companies must be able to land with an assault echelon, establish their own field facilities, repel the enemy and move and operate many kinds of equipment.

Also Active on Ship

Moreover, they must be familiar with all kinds of weapons and gas and decontamination equipment, scouting and patrolling, hand-to-hand combat techniques, as well as the operation of their essential equipment.

Among those serving in the deck and engineering forces of auxiliaries are quartermasters or seamen who stand steersman watch, signal men who control the blinkers or flag-bag and the gunner's mates who ready the heavy guns for action.

In numerous radio "shacks," the hubs of radio communication aboard ship, can be found trained colored radiomen, earphones over their heads, concentrating on the messages comingin from far over the sea.

7-21-45

Unheralded but Important

While the activities of the units on Saipan and Tinian in the Marianas and at Guam are less dramatic, they are considered vital to the operation of the supply and ammunition depots and other operating bases in the area.

With American forces on Okinawa, nearing the end of the march to the heart of the Japanese empire, are several logistic support companies, incomplete reports of whose work already indicate good performance under difficult operational circumstances.

The signs of newness, the uncertainty of the recruit, have worn off, and many colored sailors, now seasoned, are taking their positions beside their white shipmates in the victory drive of American forces in the far Pacific.

Navy Beats Army In Wiping Out Race Rule Says Granger

Chicago Defender - Ill.

7-21-45

By VENICE SPRAGGS
(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON:—The Navy has outstripped the Army in wiping out racial discrimination, declared Lester B. Granger, executive secretary of the National Urban league this week.

Granger' report came after a tour of 12 naval installations made at the request of Secretary of Navy Forrestall.

After talking to Negro officers and enlisted men in all branches of the naval service in regards to the Navy's alleged policy of non-discrimination, Granger said:

"The Navy's policy for integrating Negroes is so far ahead of the Army's that it's not even funny. The Navy is now doing things which the Army still insists would ruin morale."

Granger told a press conference here that the "Army is still trying to build two armies—one white and the other black—and that's insanity."

Report Violations

"In spite of not infrequent violations of their policy," Granger said, "it is evident that the Navy has made remarkable strides during the past two years toward complete equality of expression in the service."

He exalted the progress observed and said "it reflects great credit upon the integrity and intelligence of the Navy's leaders which should evoke a warm spirit of co-operation from the Negro and white public which is anxious to see our armed services more completely democratized."

On a basis of off-record talks with Negroes in the service away from official surveillance, Granger reached the following conclusions:

1. The Navy's policy of non-discrimination in all phases of the service is "admirable sound as officially set forth."

2. The policy is "honesty and intelligently administered" in the headquarters of all the naval districts visited.

3. More instances of "deviation from the letter of the policy" were found the further down in the ranks he went. This Granger said was to be expected, and emphasized the need for greater effective means of policing that policy so that failure to conform on the part of commissioned officers and petty officers alike may be detected. He said he felt that discipline for such violations should be meted out as easy as would be the case in any other serious breach of regulations.

List Gains

As an outgrowth of the policy pursued by the Navy, Granger was able to list the following specific gains for Negroes.

1. Admission of Negroes to all except two branches of the service. The two fields which still remain closed to Negroes are those of aviation pilots and combat posts on submarines. Two years ago Negroes were restricted to the Setwards branch.

2. Rating of Negroes in practically every category, and training of Negroes as commissioned officers. Previously Negroes, no matter what their training or qualifications, were barred from the rank of officer. Now a Negro can go as high as his ability can carry him. Granger said that on July 1, 1945, the first 12 Negroes commissioned as ensigns were all promoted to the rank of lieutenant (j.g.)

7-21-45

3. Negro personnel are now being assigned to auxiliary craft up to ten per cent of a ship's compliment. Previously Negroes had been confined to demonstration vessels.

4. Negro commissioned and petty officers are assigned to vessels to serve in their duties without regard to rank.

5. Racial segregation in mess and recreational facilities has been eliminated. However, Granger said that in general Negroes and whites still have separate barracks.

6 A beginning of assignment of Negro personnel to combat duties on warships. Prior to the new Navy policy, Negroes were generally restricted to shore duties performing the bulk of menial duties.

On Treasure Island

Commenting on the question of non-segregation in the navy, Granger said that while there had been some "squaking" over the policy, it was not serious and the general attitude of the men in the service was "we're in the navy together." He referred to his observations at Treasure Island where there were 5,000 white and Negro seamen. He said 800 Negroes there are living in tremendous barracks without any regard to color. "We found a white barber cutting a Negro's hair, which some say can't be done, but it is."

Speaking of the integration of Negroes at the Great Lakes naval training station, he said:

"The report of integration at Great Lakes is over simplified."

Amplifying his remarks he said, "Negroes in companies now on their way to graduation have not been broken up. White companies and Negro companies are in the same regiment, but in separate companies. There is no segregation in the schools."

Hits Red Cross

At Camp Robert Smalls Negroes and whites will be assigned to the same companies, Granger said, and no segregation will be considered. "There is no reason why it won't work," he asserted.

Asked if the Red Cross had anything to do with the navy's recreation program, Granger replied: "Thank God, no." This emphatic reply stemmed from the Red Cross' policy of providing separate Negro clubs overseas, long a bone of contention in many quarters here.

The National Urban League executive took time out to scotch rumors that he was quitting the league to accept a position in the navy. Granger stated: "Secretary Forrestal was kind enough to invite me to join the staff of the Navy several months ago. While I felt honored to receive the invitation, I was compelled to decline because of the heavy responsibilities I am now carrying."

Mutiny Convictions Unfair

Afro-American

In upholding the October, 1944, court martial conviction of 50 colored seamen charged with mutiny at Yerba Buena Island, Calif., the Navy Department is establishing, what we believe to be, a dangerous precedent.

The men had been charged with mutiny in August of that year for refusal to load ammunition at Port Chicago, Calif., where more than 300 of their number had been killed in an explosion the month before.

Already, the NAACP has made a request of Secretary of the Navy Forrestal for permission to file additional briefs and for the opportunity to present the case personally before him.

Baltimore, Md.

We urge Secretary Forrestal to set the verdict aside.

We urge such a course of action because there is no evidence of mutiny anywhere in the record. Mutiny, as we know it, involves insurrection, usually accompanied by physical violence on the part of subordinates in taking over constituted authority.

7-21-45

What the evidence did show was that the men, their minds still seared by the terrifying spectacle of having seen their mates blown to bits, were prompted by fear to disobey an order which, to them, was viewed as an invitation to a similar fate.

This seems a normal reaction in view of the facts. Fear is fundamental in all of us. The men used no violence, merely passive resistance to an order which they felt jeopardized their personal safety.

In addition, testimony revealed that two of the men ordered to work were suffering from the effects of broken arms at the time and another, weighing but 104 pounds, had a Navy doctor's certificate stating that he should not be given hard work.

Here we have the largest mutiny trial in the history of the U.S. Navy and the first of its kind during the present war. This fact, plus the fact that all of the convicted men are colored, can only serve to discredit other colored seamen, casting an ugly reflection upon the patriotism and courage of an entire race.

We do not believe that Secretary Forrestal, in the light of the Navy's revised policy toward colored personnel, would want to have this blot remain upon the record. It is within his power to remove it.

Because of the lack of evidence to sustain a charge of mutiny and because there is still a degree of doubt even on the charge that the men refused to obey an order, we urge him to set the convictions aside.

Veteran Seaman Tells of Harrowing Experiences

Afro-American 8-4-45

Baltimore, Md.

By RICHARD R. DIER

NEW YORK—A veteran of 27 years at sea, Robert D. McKenzie, boatswain, has just returned to the Port of New York where, for the first time, he revealed his harrowing experiences in this war in an exclusive AFRO interview.

McKenzie, who served in both the British and American merchant marines, had his ships bombed, shelled and torpedoed, and even made the dreaded "suicide" run to Murmansk at the beginning of the war.

9 Ships in Convoy Sunk

It was during his trip to Murmansk that he witnessed the sinking of nine ships in his convoy.

Once, when his own vessel was torpedoed and lost, he took to a lifeboat and was at sea eight days before he was rescued.

He bitterly condemned the British merchant marine as being inferior to our own as far as working and living conditions are concerned.

In Service Since 1918

Born in Kingston, Jamaica, BWI, McKenzie served on American merchant ships from 1918 to 1930, on British ships from 1930 to 1939, and returned to our own merchant marine after Pearl Harbor.

In 1939, he was on a British ship en route to England when war was declared with Germany. Of the 95 ships in the convoy, 25 were lost when attacked by the enemy, he said.

Ship Catches Fire

The day before they reached the English Channel, McKenzie's own vessel caught on fire.

"We fought off the fire until we reached Le Havre," he explained, and just when we reached port, we had an air raid. It was terrific.

"All the workers in the locks ran for cover, leaving our ship at the mercy of the enemy. Four planes came over and machine-gunned us. Luckily, nobody was injured." 8-4-45

ROBERT D. McKENZIE

Drifted for 8 Days

On another trip from England to Buenos Aires, his ship was torpedoed by an enemy sub and seven men in the crew were lost.

"We took to lifeboats and were at sea eight days in the North Atlantic before the British destroyer, HMS Antonio, picked us up," McKenzie said.

"On the day we were returned to England and got paid off for the voyage, 16 other men and I were trapped in a house for four hours during an air attack.

"That night, I took a train to Cardiff and came back to United States where I went into a hospital for treatment and a rest."

Right after Pearl Harbor, he began making voyages again, this time on American merchant ships. On a "suicide" voyage to Murmansk (this run was called suicide at the beginning of the war because of heavy enemy concentration around that area) he saw nine ships in his convoy sunk by enemy action.

6-Day Attack Recalled

"We had close misses on our own vessell from bombs and torpodes," the veteran seaman added. "The attack lasted for six days and was constant both from the air and from subs below the surface.

"Later, we ran into a heavy storm and our ship was almost broken in half. We got lost from the convoy, too, but were lucky to find our way into port."

McKenzie also participated in the D-Day invasion, his ship landing on the Normandy beachhead.

He was in the last American convoy out of New York to the Mediterranean. 8-4-45

One thing that impressed him most was the difference in conditions for merchant seamen on British and American ships.

Disliked British Food

"Food on British ships is bad," he said. "They give you a whole meal in one dish. One tin of milk has to last three weeks. We had to serve ourselves, no messman. We got plenty of food, but sometimes it was not eatable."

Crew quarters were just as bad. They slept 10 to 12 in a room. The bedding was burlap sack mattresses with straw in them, no sheets, no pillow cases, no towels. They received one bar of brown soap every three weeks, no face soap.

"No shower has ever been seen on a British merchant ship for the crew," McKenzie said, "All we had was a bucket and a scrub-down bath. We had to wash with salt water."

He believes that as a result of frequent complaints, things have begun to improve somewhat in the British merchant marine since the war.

Colored Diver Edits Paper on Navy Salvage

Philadelphia Tribune 8-4-45

NEW YORK—The recent appointment of Carl H. Crawford, 26, SF2-c, only colored Salvage Diver in the Navy, to write the Navy Salvage Paper, "Descending Line," has met with the approval of officers and men. 8-4-45

A graduate of the Darcy School of Journalism, Crawford has made two Naval inventions and written two books for Naval use. He was the first colored shipfitter working on th BB buildingways in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and the first Negro placed in a technical position by all-white enlisted men and officers to serve in an executve capacity.

Crawford participated in the Mediterranean salvage operations last winter.

DARING NEGRO SEAMEN AIDED IN SAVING AIRCRAFT CARRIER

Pittsburgh Courier 5-26-45

A new line of Navy heroes is added this week to the U. S. Navy's Roll of Honor . . . Beneath the names of Dorie Miller, Marion Green, Leonard Roy Harmon, William Pinckney, Joseph Cross and Charles W. David Jr. are written those of daring Negro seamen assigned to the United States Aircraft Carrier Franklin, the big ship that wouldn't sink after going through America's most terrible sea disaster in this war, just sixty miles off Japan.

Heroes of Big Ben were Steward's Mate Willie Cogman of 1912 South Chadwick Street, Philadelphia; Amos N. Shields, cook, S/C, 98 Whiteside Road, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Wesley Tumblin, Steward's Mate, 1/C, Kenner, Ala.; Reuben L. Patton, Steward's Mate, 1/C, Cecil, Ala., and Alvin G. Millen, Steward's Mate, 1/C, 31 Eighteenth Street, Birmingham, Ala.

BELIEVE TWELVE MISSING

5-26-45

There may have been others, but their names have not been released. It is not known how many Negroes were on the giant carrier.

Among the unnamed heroes were at least a dozen Negroes, listed as casualties.

It happened on the morning of March 19, just an hour after dawn. A Japanese dive bomber swooped from a hanging cloud and dropped two 500-pound bombs on the Franklin, leaving a volcanic chaos of bursting bombs, flaming gasoline, exploding rockets and gun ammunition.

For fifteen hours in the bloody Pacific, Big Ben was a flaming funeral pyre. She left more than 1,000 casualties as the price of her survival. It was the heaviest price thus far paid by an American fighting ship in World War II. It was twice the cost of the entire battle of the Coral Sea.

LAUDS BRAVERY OF NEGRO CREW

Arriving in New York last week, Capt. Leslie E. Gehreas, skipper of the big carrier, repeatedly lauded the bravery displayed by Negro crew members in fighting fires and aiding in the evacuation of the wounded and injured.

Interviewed in New York City, Shields said he had just left his battle station, a 40-mm gun, and had started below decks for morning chow when the bombs hit. He was thrown against the bulkhead and for a moment thought he was trapped there by the fire and smoke. He finally found his way out and went to the hangar deck where the fire was a raging inferno. After doing what he could to help there he went to the flight deck where he worked for hours helping transfer wounded to the light cruiser, Santa Fe, which pulled along side the burning vessel during the hectic hours of disaster.

5-26-45

ONE OF LAST TO LEAVE

Shields, 20, was one of the last to be taken aboard the rescue vessel. The 20-year-old sailor is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Shields. His father is an elder of the Church of God on Webster Avenue in Pittsburgh and his sister, Betty, is a lieutenant in the Woman's Army Corps.

Tumblin, another 20-year-old youngster, was knocked unconscious by the first explosion, but regained his senses in three or four minutes and then made his way to the flight deck, where he aided in fighting fires and evacuating the wounded. He has two brothers in the Army, Sam Jr. and Regis. Their father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Tumblin Sr., reside in Kenner, La.

Steward's Mate Millen, operator of a 40-mm gun, was on his way to chow from his station when he was struck senseless by the concussion of the bombs hits. "I quickly regained my bearings," he said, "and made my way to the forecastle."

BATTLES FLAMES

Later he made his way to the flight deck and battled flames and removed casualties to the Santa Fe. His wife, Ineel, and two children, Alvin Jr., and Morris Edward, reside in Birmingham.

Steward's Mate Patton, 36, was on duty in the officers' wardroom pantry when the Japanese bombs hit the big vessel. "I held onto a dish I was carrying," he said "and didn't spill a drop."

He spied a seaman outside the wardroom who had been overcome by smoke and rushed to his aid. He gave him water and helped him to his feet. He then made his way to the flight deck where he joined his mates in battling flames. Later he transferred two men from the carrier to the cruiser and finally was removed himself.

HEROES TO RECEIVE AWARDS

Steward's Mate Cogman gave his account to a reporter Saturday in Philadelphia. He was singled out by Lieut. Comdr. David Berger, assistant air officer of the carrier, for special commendation. Other heroes also were cited.

"It started early in the morning," Cogman said, "and it was time for breakfast. I had pust left the wardroom and was going into the pantry when the ship shuddered from a tremendous explosion. A ball of flame streaked across the room within six inches of my face.

"For sometime after that I don't know what happened. I was in a daze. Time had lost meaning, so I can't figure how long this period lasted. Next thing I remember I was wanderoug around below deck with great, thick billows of black smoke around me.

"Along with some other men, I made my way up to the deck. All around up there explosions were going off. Our own 50-calibre machine guns, rockets and bombs were blasting away, touched off by the roaring flames that seemed to be everywhere. Men were jumping off the boat, but I elected to be among those who remained.

"The most serious damage to the ship was done by one of our own shells that fell off the side and exploded, blasting a huge hole in the port side of the ship. We began to list terribly, and every man on that ship who knew a prayer said a silent one.

"For hours after that last explosion we drifted toward Japan.

DRAMATIZED ON RADIO

In a dramatic broadcast Saturday on the Columbia Broadcasting System, Negro seamen were given high praise for the part they played at sea on the Franklin.

The commander was hoarse from yelling "heave-ho" and, according to the radio program, a Negro messboy stepped up and said "I think I have a little voice left, commander. Maybe I can do a little yelling."

"Okay. You yell then. And thanks," whispered the commander.

5-26-45

And away yelled the messboy: "All right boys. Let's heave together now. Heave that rope . . . heave that rope."

Big Ben is back in her berth. Unrecognizably seared and battered and mangled, the proud ship will undergo repairs and then be put to sea again. More than likely, the Negro heroes will be with her when she slips out once more.

The men are proud of another thing . . . They shot down the Japanese plane that dropped the bombs.

When we were first attacked, we were only sixty miles from the Japanese mainland. When the Cruiser Santa Fe finally reached us and began to tow us in, we were just a little over fifty miles from Japan."

All that time the men had fought fire and dodged their own bombs without let-up. The ship was taken to Pearl Harbor and is now in the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

Every man who remained at his post on the ship received a special Navy Award on Monday of this week.

WITNESSED PREVIOUS ATTACK

5-26-45

Cogman has been in the Navy since October 14, 1943. Following his boot training at Bainbridge, Md., he was transferred to Rhode Island and was assigned to the USS Franklin on January 30, 1944.

He served on the Franklin for six months of sea duty until the great carrier was hit by a Japanese suicide plane on October 30, 1944. After repairs on the West Coast, he was again assigned to the ship. He has not suffered a scratch in either engagement.

Cogman attended the Rosenwald High School in Florida, where he lived for ten years before going to Philadelphia. He has a sister, Willa Mae Mitchell, and a daughter, Catherine.

Navy Lists Aides on Color Problem

Afro American 5-19-45

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Secretary of the Navy James V. Forrestal has appointed a departmental representative of the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, and the Navy itself to advise him on problems arising in connection with the recruitment training and assignment of colored personnel.

This committee, authorized in a circular letter dated April 30, and consisting of nine persons, was organized Monday, May 7, and met again last Friday afternoon to further its program of action. Assistant Navy Secretary Ralph Bard is expected to meet soon with the committee.

May Still Name Colored Aide

The idea of a colored civilian aide to the Secretary has not been completely abandoned, but such an appointment is unlikely until the departmental committee evolves a pattern of policy and work which might then be handled by the aide.

5-19-45

As one source explained, the group will attempt to "co-ordinate and unify the over-all policy for the various officers and bureas of the Navy Department."

Mr. Forrestal told the ANP last February that he favors the civilian aide idea but was anxious to "fit the man to the job." Lester Granger of the National Urban League recommended the committee idea last March, and appointment of a colored Assistant Navy Secretary.

NAVY HITS JIM CROW THEORIES

Chicago Defender 6-2-45

WASHINGTON—(ANP)—Indicative of the efforts being made by the navy department to win wider recognition for Negroes in the service is the pamphlet now being distributed titled "Guide to Command of Negro Naval Personnel," it is learned.

Issued by the bureau of naval personnel, the pamphlet was released within the department on Feb. 12, 1944 over the signature of Adm. Randall Jacobs, chief of the bureau.

Intended as an indoctrinator and guide to white officers, the pamphlet discusses the history of Negroes in the navy, "racial theories as a waste of manpower," and takes up ticklish questions such as segregation, promotions, utilization of skills, and sea duty.

Unequivocally it says "ultimate responsibility for working out solutions for specific questions must and does rest with local commanding officers."

"The Navy accepts no theories of racial differences in inborn ability, but expects that every man wearing its uniform be trained and used in accordance with his maximum individual capacity determined on the basis of individual performance," the document says at the outset. 6-2-45

Hit Jim Crow Signs

Poohpoohing the time-worn expression of "separate but equal facilities," the pamphlet makes this forthright statement on racial separation:

"The accomplishment of the assigned mission through the harmonious and efficient use of existing equipment and facilities should always be the objective of the commanding officer. Joint use of facilities is frequently possible and desirable, particularly where the ratio of Negro to white personnel is not high.

"Signs restricting the use of facilities to one or the other of the races are especially offensive to Negroes and under no circumstances should they be used in the naval establishment. . . . If the policy laid down by the commanding officer is impartial, fair, and reasonable, the men, white and Negro alike, are quick to realize it and to accept the situation providing it is clear that the policy will be enforced."

Pointing out the earlier initiation of assigning Negro seamen to sea duty on 25 auxiliary ships of the fleet up to 10 per cent of the general service complement of each ship, and in all ratings, the pamphlet concludes: "This procedure has produced no apparent ill effects and will be continued and expanded."

Crowe, 2216 Massachusetts street, Gary, Indiana, in classrooms, chow halls, and sleeping quarters, have been completely integrated with the rest of the students.

At Navy Pier the men are taking the last of a series of three courses which will qualify them to repair and maintain the intricate radar, sonar, and radio equipment now found aboard Navy ships. They successfully completed Pre-Radio Training at Theodore Herzl School, Chicago, Ill., and Elementary Electricity and Radio Material at Radio Chicago, 190 North State street, Chicago, Ill.

Navy Denies Time's Story; "Home Ec" Not Required

Afro-American Md.

WASHINGTON

The Navy Department's public relations office this week denied a story appearing in Time magazine to the effect that a colored applicant for the aerological branch at Corpus Christi Naval Air Station had been turned down because he hadn't studied "home economics." 2-3-45

Under the heading, "Struck Out," Time's story said:

"At Corpus Christi Naval Air Station, a colored seaman found out that color was a bar to advancement, no matter what the books said.

"The station's daily bulletin had announced a call for 'strickers' (person seeking higher rating) in the aerological branch. The requisite: a high school education. A dozen bluejackets applied for admittance to the aerological school. The colored seaman's interview with the personnel officer went like this:

College Graduate

"Personnel Officer: 'Have you had physics?' (Recommended but not required.) The bluejacket had.

"P.O.: 'Have you ever had any calculus?' (Not required.) He had.

"P.O.: 'How much schooling have you had?' He had a college degree. 2-3-45

"P.O.: 'Have you had home economics?' The applicant had to admit that he had not.

"Said the P.O. 'Well, I'm sorry, but that's required here. Rejected.' End of interview."

Says Time Ered

"It was a mistake on the part of Time," Lt. Commander John E. Conley told the AFRO.

Drop Race Barriers In Navy Training

Great Lakes, Ill., July 3 (A. P.).—Segregation of Negro naval recruits from white personnel in the naval special training program has been discontinued in execution of the Navy's policy of non-discrimination among all personnel, officials of the Ninth Naval District said yesterday.

Induction centers have been directed by the Bureau of Naval Personnel to assign Negroes, except illiterates, to the nearest recruit training command on the same basis as white personnel. Training commands were directed to assign Negro and white recruits to the same companies and make barracks, recreation halls and other training center facilities available to all personnel alike.

'Jim Crow' Torpedoed Again

STEADILY since the spring of 1942, when the Navy for the first time opened all ratings to Negroes, Uncle Sam's sea forces have removed barrier after barrier to equality. Each step benefited the service. Each augured well for the future of a functioning democracy. Although barriers still remain, another stride for democracy has just been taken at Great Lakes. That station was the first to receive Negro recruits. It has trained the great majority of them to date. But they were segregated in a special camp and in training programs. Now the Bureau of Naval Personnel has ended that segregation. Induction centers will assign Negroes to recruit training on the same basis as whites. Both will be assigned to the same companies. The same living quarters, recreation halls and other facilities will be available to all. This eradication of "Jim Crow barracks" is a truly American action.

Turkey Dinner Awaited Men Adrift At Sea 3 Days

Courier-Journal, Louisville

By DOROTHY ROSE.

What do men talk about when they've been drifting at sea for three days and three nights with no food and no water and very little hope?

"You don't say anything much—it's better that way," says Petty Officer John Louis Weathers, 20, Negro, son of Mrs. Margaret Weathers, 1613 Prentice, one of 13 who survived the recent sinking of the U.S.S. Hull in the south Pacific after a tropical typhoon.

PETTY OFFICER WEATHERS. Survived tropical typhoon.

Petty Officer Weathers, who was minus his life jacket when the ship went down, made his way to a raft with 12 others and clung on for dear life, in the most literal sense of the phrase.

Removed to Hospital Ship.

The third day most of the men were delirious but until then spirits were pretty high, according to Weathers, and on the fourth day the U.S.S. Brown arrived on the scene to pick them up and transport them, four days later, to the hospital ship U.S.S. Solace, approximately 13 miles from the Philippines. 3-4-45

The men, still weak from exposure, were taken aboard the Solace, and no turkey dinner ever tasted better than that that which was served aboard ship that evening while the band from a cruiser stationed near by, played seasonal music.

The final homecoming was still happier. Passed from ship to ship until he was finally put aboard a merchant marine vessel, Petty Officer Weathers reached the States February 18, and arrived in Louisville one week later.

Wanted Lots of Milk.

3-4-45

Contrary to popular belief, it wasn't a chicken dinner he wanted that first day back home—it was just milk—and lots of it.

Weathers, a steward in charge of officers' menus aboard the Hull, had been on overseas combat duty 18 months and in the Navy almost two years.

He reports to the Navy recruiting Station in Louisville on March 28 for reassignment, and is looking forward to a return to sea duty. But no more sinkings, please.

ATTY. BANKS FREES FOUR SEAMEN CHARGED WITH STRIKING OFFICER

The Guardian

Three colored sailors and a marine stand freed this week of Naval criminal charges which might have cost them their lives although two of them were convicted on charges lighter than the original charges. 4-28-45

Credit for the investigation and other legal victory in the cases goes to Walter J. Stevens, former New York State investigator, and Atty. Laurence H Banks to whom the cases had been given to try, without a fee by the NAACP. The four defendants were Henry Buffington, Jr. U. S. Marine Corps of Chicago William Chase, Brooklyn, N. Y.; James E. Bryan, New Bern, N. C and Walter Williams of California. 4-28-45

More than three weeks ago it was learned that the four men had been brutally beaten by guards at the Portsmouth Naval Prison and charged with disorder, striking another man in the Navy and striking a superior officer. 4-28-45

Before four courts-martial lasting 2 1-2 weeks, Banks beat down the efforts to paint the four men as bad characters, and in examining witnesses presented by the prosecution, he brought out the true facts in the cases.

Buffington was freed of the serious charges but found guilty of disorderly conduct; Chase was cleared of all charges; Bryan was likewise cleared; Williams was found guilty of striking another man in the navy, but not guilty of disorderly conduct and not guilty of striking an officer.

Portsmouth, N. H. Lined up one day having their shackles removed the men engaged in horseplay. A guard ordered them to stop, and followed his order with a blow of his club. The struck men put his arms around the guard to avoid additional blows. The guard dropped his club and blew the "riot" whistle. Scores of marines rushed in with drawn guns and slinging clubs. This continued until many men were bleeding on the floor. The men were then locked in their cells.

Late that night a dozen armed marines came in and removed the "smart n----rs." They were taken to a basement room and beaten until the skull of at least one of the men was shattered. Stevens states that three metal clamps had to be used to hold it together, in order that the man would not bleed to death. 5-15-45

COUNSEL AT TRIAL

After several days of intensive work Banks and Stevens represented the men at the trial. Charges were lodged against Henry Buffington, James E. Bryan, William Chase and Walter C. Williams, Jr. They were charged with striking one Frank Prusinewski, sentry, and William Garvin, sergeant, and with generally disorderly conduct. Banks succeeded in discounting the prosecution's attempts to prove the four men bad characters, and the true facts in the case developed.

Buffington was found guilty of disorderly conduct and freed of the other charges; Chase was cleared of all charges; Bryan was also freed. Williams was found guilty of striking another man, but not guilty on the other charges.

In the meantime it is understood that a federal investigation has been sought by Congressman Adam Powell and the National NAACP office. It is believed that Attys. Banks and Stevens have sufficient material on which to base a demand for a full investigation of conditions at the prison by the federal government.

Victims Of Naval Prison Brutalities Get Freedom

BOSTON — (ANP) — This week four Negro sailors have been freed of naval criminal charges which might have cost them their lives, and two have been convicted on charges far less than were originally lodged against them. The sailors were facing charges for striking a sentry and an officer. 5-15-45

The case background commences in January and according to Laurence Banks, Boston attorney, and Walter J. Stevens, former special investigator attacked to the New York state law department, the facts are that the four Negro boys were among the several hundred confined to the naval prison at

Hero of SS Franklin Catastrophe Local Man

Philadelphia Tribune

Battle-scared, bedraggled, and a wraith of her former self with a casualty list of 341 dead, 431 missing, and 300 wounded. the powerful aircraft carrier Franklin limped into her berth in the Brooklyn Navy Yard a few days ago.

The 27,000-ton Essex Class aircraft carrier is home because of the heroic deeds of a Philadelphia Steward's Mate, Willie Cogman who, in the course of the dramatic emergency, performed the difficult tasks that made possible the ship's return.

Operating just 66 miles off the coast of Japan on the morning of March 19, the Franklin was attacked without warning by a Japanese dive-bomber and within a few seconds was a mass of flames, smoke, and debris. Men were hurdled into the sea, burned beyond recognition, trapped below deck; en-

The captain ignored "aban don ship" order and Cogman who remained aboard, was in strumental in rigging the shi so that by the following after noon, the Franklin was ready t take in tow by the cruise Pittsburgh while a security pa trol of fighter planes constan ly circled overhead.

Cogman, whose family resides at 1412 south Chadwick street, was born in Quincy, Florida, and came to Philadelphia during the early part of 1943. Before his induction he was employed at the Frank's Soda Manufacturing Company.

For his heroic deeds, Cogman is scheduled to receive a Navy award.

CHICAGO.—The first graduate of the "Mulzac School of Seamanship" which Captain Hugh Mulzac conducted on the Liberty Ship SS Booker T. Washington, is Captain Clifton Lastic, fourth Negro to be named skipper on an American merchant ship during this war. The story of Captain Lastic, who quit his job as chief mate on a New York municipal tanker to join Mulzac's crew, then later to win a ship himself, the SS Bert Williams, is told by Thyra Edwards in Negro Digest for February.

81 Negroes Were Aboard Franklin

Journal and Guide

6-23-45

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Navy Department disclosed this week that two colored sailors were killed, one wounded, and that another is missing, as a result of the Japanese dive-bomber attack on the aircraft carrier, USS Franklin, 60 miles off the Japanese mainland on March 19.

The Navy also released at the same time the full list of 81 Negro crew members who survived the attack.

The two Negro sailors, who lost their lives during the epic battle, were Charles I. Ashhurst steward's mate, 1st class, whose mother, Mrs. Beatrice Ashurst, lives at 1426 New Orleans street, Fort Worth, Texas; and Harvard McDonald, steward's mate, 1st class, whose wife, Mrs. Mae F. McDonald, lives in Ridgeway, S. C.

JACKSON MISSING

Missing after the battle was Thomas Jackson, steward's mate, 1st class. This sailor's wife lives at 1931 McCulloh street, Baltimore, Md. The wounded sailor was Floyd L. Gammage, steward's mate, 1st class, whose mother, Mrs. Threacy A. Rakestraw, lives on Route 1 near Streetman, Texas.

After a complete check of the FRANKLIN'S records, the Navy Department listed 81 Negroes as members of the ship's crew at the time of the battle. These men, and their next of kin, are:

Four West Indian Ship Masters

Afro-American

Recent appointment of Captain Clifton Lastic to the command of the SS Bert Williams brings the number of Liberty ship masters to four.

Others are Captain John Godfrey, of the SS John H. Murphy, Captain Hugh Mulzac of the SS Booker T. Washington, and Captain Adrian Richardson of the SS Frederick Douglass.

1-16-45

All four are naturalized West Indians of whom we have a right to be exceedingly proud.

History repeats itself. When the Ark and the Dove set out from England to establish a colony in Maryland, it stopped in the West Indies in 1635 to pick up one Matthias Tousa, a mulatto, as a navigator, to bring the ships safely to the mainland and subsequently to do their trading with the Indians.

History and the early records of Maryland show Captain Tousa did a good job with both assignments.

West Indians have been expert seamen for centuries. Is it any wonder that in the emergency expansion of our merchant fleet we can turn to them again for men to command our ships?

Mixed Coast Guard Crew Is A Success

Atlanta World 4-28-45

WASHINGTON, D. C.— (NNPA —Lt. Carlton Skinner, former secretary of the Washington Newspaper Guild, is responsible for an experiment in the Coast Guard to combat racial discrimination at sea, according to an article appearing last week in the Guild Reporter.

Skinner, according to the article got permission from Admiral Waesche to take a mixed crew of Negro and white men and officers on a tour of duty to determine whether abandonment of the segregation policy would work out in actual operation.

4-28-45

GETS HIGH RATING

Commander Skinner took out a mixed crew with the Atlantic fleet on the Sea Cloud, a weather patrol ship. At the end of a year, his ship got a grade AA rating on every operation.

As a result of Skinner's experiment, the Guild Reporter says, the Coast Guard has concluded the experiment was a success and that the team work was first rate. The report was publicized by Drew Pearson in his syndicated column.

The Coast Guard reports the Sea Cloud's duty was unusually rough, and that the ship made every patrol on schedule. The report also stated that Negro members of the crew were like members of any other crew.

LIKE OTHER MEN

"It would be nice to be able to say that she was an outstanding ship and that the Negro members of the crew were all bursting with energy and could be seen at all hours of the day and night wiping and cleaning and studying," the report said.

4-28-45

"Actually, it wasn't so," the report concluded. "The Negroes were just like any other group of officers and enlisted men. Some were bright and quick and some were slow and lazy. Some wanted to advance and be promoted. Some didn't give a damn and wanted to turn in their sacks all the time."

Navy Eases Up On Negro Personnel

Navy Relaxes Rulings On Negro Personnel

Birmingham Age Post

WASHINGTON—(AP)—The Navy Friday relaxed further its restrictions on sea assignments of Negro personnel.

4-27-45

A circular letter from V. Adm. Randall Jacobs, chief of the Bureau of Personnel, said Negro personnel of all general service ratings now are eligible for duty on board all auxiliary vessels of the fleet up to 10 per cent of the vessels' total personnel.

4-27-45

Negroes first were assigned to 25 auxiliary vessels last August. The latest move broadens the plan to apply to all auxiliaries.

There are approximately 160,000 Negro officers and enlisted men in the Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard.

Four Negroes Command Ships

Pittsburgh Courier 1-13-45

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA)—Four Negroes are now in command of Liberty ships, according to the War Shipping Administration, with the appointment of Capt. Clifton Lastic to the command of the new Liberty ship SS Bert Williams. Captain Lastic is now somewhere at sea on the maiden voyage of his ship.

NAVY ACTS TOO

New York Age 1-13-45

ALMOST at the same time that the War Department was cleaning up the WAC court-martial "mess", the Secretary of the Navy announced his approval of the decision of the Navy Department's Board of Review that the discharges of 14 or 15 Negro seabees who were discharged by the commanding officer of the 80th Naval Construction Battalion for either unfitness or inaptitude. These men were sent from an advanced base at which this battalion was stationed to the receiving station in New York, where their discharges were effected.

Shortly after the enactment of the Service-men's Re-adjustment Act of 1944, which has "undesirable discharges" or "ordinary discharges" or "unfitness" or "inaptitude" be changed to discharges of "under honorable conditions."

4-7-45

In October, 1943, some 19 Negro seabees were discharged with unsatisfactory conditions by reason of Dec. by reason of a provision therein that discharged men could have their discharges reviewed, the Lynn Committee to Abolish Segregation in the Armed Forces demanded a hearing for the men. Attorneys representing the men were: Arthur Garfield Hayes, of New York City, acting for the American Civil Liberties Union and the Lynn Committee; Gerald Weatherly, of the Texas bar and of New York City, acting for the same two committees; Thurgood Marshall, of New York City, special counsel for the Legal Defense and Education Fund, Inc., of the NAACP; Herbert J. DeVarco, of the American Civil Liberties Union; Nat Klein, of the National CIO War Relief Committee, of New York City. 4-14-45

Of the 15 ex-seabees requesting a review, Clarence O. Clarke, Isaac Glenn McNatt, Robert L. Mims and Harvey Steele, appeared personally to give testimony. The cases of the remaining 11 ex-seabees were reviewed on available records in the Navy Department, documents submitted by the individual petitions and their counsels and on the testimony presented at the hearing.

The story behind the discharges is almost incredible. The seabees had been building an airport in Trinidad and had been jim crowed in many ways including promotions. No Negro seabee — and there were Ph.D.s and skilled machinists among them — could get a first-class rating; whites with far inferior qualifications rose easily in the ranks. There was so much grumbling among the men that the commanding officer called a meeting at which he requested a number of the men to come forward and tell their grievances as "man to man." The seabees stated their complaints and got expressions of sympathy from the commanding officer. A few days later, however, 19 of them were shipped back to the New York receiving station and given discharges which branded them.

Some time later the Lynn Committee took up their case and it has now been fought to a successful conclusion. Encouraged by the victory, the committee, through Wilfred H. Kerr, co-chairman, has issued the following statement: 4-14-45

"Our success in this case only confirms our opinion that militant struggle and publicity will bring results even in the teeth of military bureaucracy. We intend to carry on and redouble our efforts to abolish segregation in the Army and Navy, for we believe that segregation is the evil source from which all discrimination flows. We will continue to fight as many such cases of discrimination as come to our attention."

SAN DIEGO BLUEJACKET SIGNALMEN CITED FOR EFFICIENCY

Defender — Chicago, Ill. 4-21-45 L&K

The unit's duties consist of identification of ships entering or leaving the harbor, transmission of messages, maintenance of aircraft lookout and the making and repair of signal flags. QM 2-c Louis Harry of East Providence, R. I., reads a message through the signalman's telescope as Seaman 1-c Moses Taylor of Baton Rouge, La., takes down his observations.

Negro bluejackets manning the lookout station at the U. S. Naval Frontier base at San Diego, Calif., were recently commended by an admiral and a commodore for the efficient way in which they perform signalman duties. Signalman 3-c Thomas Cunningham of Richmond, Va., demonstrates their technique with a "V" flag signal while Seaman 1-c Lawrence Grimes of Detroit records the message.

The majority of the lookout station personnel consists of men who have seen overseas duty and so well have they carried out assignments that they have been ordered by several high-ranking naval officers to make flags for their ships. Signalman 3-c Karl Long of Cleveland sends a searchlight message and Seaman 1-c Manuel R. Justin of New Orleans makes a record of the procedure.—U. S. Navy photos.

Navy- Submarine Crews

Skilled Race Crews Handle Deadliest 'Fish' In Ocean

Atlanta World — Ga. 3-8-45

Feed Mighty Torpedoes Into Our Submarines

OAHY, T. H. — The deadliest "fish" in the ocean is entrusted to the care of skilled Negro crews at a naval ammunition depot on this island in the Pacific.

The mighty torpedo feeds on big game, such as enemy warships, and require skill and delicacy in handling during its travels by land and sea to its short career in the water. To qualify for this work takes time, training and practice, but the men at this station are no novices. Most of them have worked with ammunition for along time and were trained in it before coming here. 3-8-45

Among these men are: Gunner's Mate Second Class Robert L. Wells whose home is at 2001 N. 22nd St., Philadelphia; Torpedoman Third Class Isaiah Murry, 3852 Sylvan St., Detroit; Seaman First Class Edward Burchell, 10 Arcadia Place Vauxhall, N. J.; Seaman First Class Carlton R. Brown, 1608 N. Bouvier St., Philadelphia and Seaman Frist Class Stanley A. Vivens 96 Hull St., Columbus, O.

All of these men, after enlisting in the Navy, went to the U. S Naval Training Center, Great Lakes Ill., for recruit training. After that some of them went to service schools, while others went on to different stations to get their training while working. 3-8-45

After serving at other stations in various parts of the United States they were transferred for duty outside the continental limits and are now applying their skills to vital ammunition work for the fleets at sea.

All-Negro Warship Docks Here, Crew Lauded for Record

Daily Worker New York, New York 10-26-45

By EUGENE GORDON

Submarine chaser PC-1264, whose entire enlisted personnel of 61 men is Negro, docked yesterday at Pier 80 foot of W. 40 St. She was scheduled to leave almost immediately, however, for a midstream berth in the Hudson until after Navy Day, Saturday, when she will go to New London.

In addition to having a full complement of Negro enlisted men, including seven petty officers, first class, and one chief machinist's mate, the PC-1264 has one Negro commissioned officer, 23-year-old, six-foot-two Ensign Samuel L. Gravely, Jr., USNR, of Richmond, Va., the sub-chaser's communications and athletic officer.

The crew, representing men from all parts of the country and in no sense a "picked" or "selected" one, is described by their white officers as being among the best in the U.S. Navy. In individual interviews the men spoke highly of their officers and praised the spirit behind the experiment of an all-Negro crew.

PREFERS MIXED CREW

Jarvis E. Guice, of Birmingham, Ala., who enlisted in 1942 while a student at Tuskegee Institute, said that as far as demonstrations in race relations are concerned, he would prefer a mixed crew.

"It has been quite an experience and I've learned a great deal in this chance to associate with white men as their equal," he said. He explained that the ship had white petty officers until recently.

Associations have been pleasant, Guice declared, adding that he knew from experience on both an all-Negro and on a mixed ship that the PC-1264 is as eficiently operated as any.

The 173-foot, trim and compact little sub-chaser was commissioned at Pier 42 on April 25, last year. Assigned to the Eastern seacoast as escort vessel for convoys and for patrol duty, the ship never ranged more than 80 miles off shore, usually operating with two or three

The white commissioned officers aboard, who also are from all sections of the country, get along splendidly with the men, according both to their own and the crew's testimony. Ensign Gravely shares one of the four small staterooms with another officer.

Here is a typical day's bill of fare for the sub-chaser's crew. Breakfast, hot cakes, fried bacon, jam and butter, milk and fruit. Dinner, roast beef, fresh stringbeans, pickled beets, chilled fruit. Supper, spaghetti and meat sauce, buttered spinach, chilled fruit.

Home From the Wars: The PC-1264, assigned here for the Navy Day demonstration, is a 173-foot submarine chaser manned by an all-Negro crew. Its complement of six officers are all white except one, Ensign Samuel L. Gravely, the ship's communications and athletic officer.

Ensign Samuel L. Gravely, 23, of Richmond, Va., six-foot-two communications officer of the submarine chaser PC-1264, is the only Negro commissioned officer among the six aboard. The 173-foot grey-hulled vessel tied up at Pier 80, end of W. 40 St., last Thursday noon and was scheduled to leave the next day. 10-30-45

"If it weren't for the fact that I intend to go back to UCLA to major in physical ed.," the handsome young giant said, smiling, "I'd be willing to stay in the Navy for the rest of my life."

Gravely's father is a postoffice clerk in Richmond. His mother is dead. His two brothers and two sisters are all younger than he.

"How did you happen to go to the University of California at Los Angeles, Mr. Gravely?"

REGULAR ON BOARD

"I went there to study for my commission. Got my boot training at Great Lakes, Ill."

The concensus of opinion, as I was able to gather it, was that Ensign Gravely is well liked both by the crew and by fellow officers. One of the officers referred to their Negro colleague as having "a good personality and good character." They pointed out that as athletic officer he had organized sports activities aboard the ship, "a definite help to the men's morale, especially in ports where there are inadequate liberty facilities for Negro personnel." I learned that he has been recommended for promotion. N.Y.

N.Y., N.Y.

ENSIGN GRAVELY

Gravely is not due to be discharged for perhaps a year. He feels that he will enjoy being in the Navy in the meantime.

He introduced me to the chief engineering officer, Ensign Donald George Morman. Morman is from Michigan, where he has a farm, a wife and a two-year-old son. Morman was an engineer with the Chevrolet company when he entered the Navy 20 months ago. He plans to return to that work.

"What do you think of the PC-1264, with its all-Negro crew, Mr. Morman?" 10-30-45

He thought it "one of the hottest ships running."

"They do as fine a job as could be expected of anybody," he said.

LIKE THEIR WORK

Morman agreed with Gravely that this ship proved that the system of discrimination would crumble if it were not maintained by authorities at the top.

The enlisted men to whom I spoke all liked their jobs aboard ship. All, however, were eager to return to civilian life. Thomas Perdue, of Birmingham, Ala., wants to go to Morehouse College, Atlanta. He was in charge of a Navy tug with an eight-man crew before he was transferred recently to the PC-1264.

Louis T. Ellison, who entered the Navy from Chicago in 1942, when he was 17, expects to enroll in an engineering school. He thinks Negroes manning ships or working in mixed crews is nothing to get excited about, although it is all very fine, "considering the things we were fighting for."

Jervis E. Guice, from Birmingham, will go back to Tuskegee Institute, Ala., where he was studying vocational agriculture when he was inducted. The white men and the colored men on the PC-1264, he said, have learned valuable lessons to take back to civilian life.

Warship Was on Duty Along Atlantic Coast

NEW YORK — Among the 51 ships which took part in the Navy Day celebration in New York was the sub chaser PC-1264, with a personnel of 54 enlisted colored men and one colored officer aboard. Smallest of all the ships, she is only 173 feet long and weighs 275 tons.

Anchored in mid-stream off the Dyckman St. pier, the PC-1264 was moored ther all day Saturday and moved to Pier 80, downtown New York, on Sunday where she was available for visitors.

Ensign Samuel L. Gravely Jr., the only colored officer of six on ship, lives at 819 Nicholson St., Richmond, Va. Among the crew, there are four men from New York City, three from Baltimore, four from Philadelphia, one from Newark, one from Washington, D.C., and another from Richmond.

In Navy 3 Years

Gravely told the AFRO he has been in the Navy 3 years and 2 months. He took a V-12 course at U.C.L.A. and later attended the Columbia University Midshipmen's School where he was commissioned on Dev. 14, 1944. He has been on duty with the ship since last May.

"I'm crazy about being on this ship," he explained. "Actually, this is the only one I've ever been on, and I'm very happy about it."

He plans to return to U.C.L.A. after he leaves the service and resume his courses in physical education. "I want to get a football coach's job," he said.

Lt. Ernest V. Hardman, white, is the skipper of the ship. He sated that the ship was commissioned in New York City April 25, 1944.

"I've been on the ship right from the beginning," Lt. Hardman pointed out, "and I want to say we have a very good crew and I'm proud of them.

Operated on Coast

"We've been operating along the Atlantic Coast and have made convoy trips to Coast cities and also to Cuba. We were in Key West, Florida, undergoing a pre-Pacific shakedown, en route to the Pacific, when the news of victory over Japan came. That changed our plans."

The sub chaser has not been engaged in any actual action with the enemy. She did establish contact with enemy subs several times in the Atlantic and dropped depth charges . . . but never was able to confirm news of damage to the enemy.

This is not her first trip to New York since she has operated out of this port before. She is now assigned to the active fleet and may be used for training purposes.

The crew has a ship's dog whom they named "Grismo." He is 16 months old and has spent all of his life aboard ship.

Pup Held Up Ship

"We've had him since he was a pup," Ensign Gravely said. "Once, when we were anchored off Key West, the skipper refused to put out until the dog, which had disappeared on the dock, was found two hours later."

Miss Chartotle Moton Sponsors SS Tuskegee Victory At Launching

Journal & Guide Va.

Special to Journal and Guide

PORTLAND, Ore. — Miss Charlotte Moton, daughter of the late Dr. R. R. Moton, sponsored the S.S Tuskegee Victory, launched at the Kaiser shipyards here Tuesday, May 8, with a Negro school child as maid of honor and an overall-clad colored girl shipyard worker as second attendant.

Eight Negro returned veterans were guests on the launching stand. Miss Moton gave fragments of the launching bottle to one of them.

The customary gift to the sponsor was a large onyx and ebony cigarette humidor with sterling silver mountings and an engraved silver inscription plate.

INVITED TO CHRISTEN

Miss Moton was invited to christen the ship as a tribute to her father, who in 1915, succeeded Dr. Booker T. Washington as the president of famed Tuskegee Institute.

She has been in San Francisco for some weeks making a study of the Negro community for the San Francisco Community Chest. She is a field representative of the Federal Security Administration. This is the first time a member of the federal agency has been made available to a private agency for such purpose. 5-19-45

Miss Moton is a graduate of Tuskegee Institute, and Boston University and taught at Hampton Institute, Va., before joining the Federal Security Administration.

Instead of taking a maid of honor with her from San Francisco, as the Kaiser Company suggested, she proposed that a maid of honor be selected from the schools of Portland, awarding the honor to a Negro child with the highest scholastic record.

The Maritime Commission was delighted with the suggestion. Miss Moton spoke briefly during the launching ceremonies, recalling her life at Tuskegee as a student from kindergarten through college. 5-18-45

Miss Moton is considered one of the outstanding recreation field workers in Government service She plans to complete her survey during May and then return to Washington.

Victory Ship R. S. Abbott Given To Soviet Russia

Chicago Defender 5-19-45

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON—The Victory ship, SS Robert S. Abbott, named in honor of the late founder of the Chicago Defender, has been turned over to our Russian allies under a lend-lease agreement, the War Shipping Administration revealed this week. 5-19-45

The Robert S. Abbott is one of 18 Liberty ships named for outstanding Negro Americans and seamen who have lost their lives in this war. Four additional ships named for Negro colleges will be commissioned this month.

Thousands of Negro merchant seamen will be honored on May 22 when Maritime Day is celebrated throughout the country, sponsored by the Maritime Commission and WSA.

For the first time since the outbreak of the war WSA has lifted the veil of military security on the itinerary of each of the vessels named for Negroes which has been in service for more than 60 days.

In addition to the Robert S. Abbott the SS Paul Laurence Dunbar was also turned over to the Russians. 5-19-45

The first of these Negro-named ships, the SS Booker T. Washington, mastered by Captain Hugh Mulzac of Brooklyn, N.Y., has been in active service continuously since the fall of 1942 and has carried numerous cargoes to Italy, France and the British Isles.

During its nearly three years of active service, the Booker T. Washington has made stops at 28 different ports. These include: Los Angeles, Calif.; Balboa, Panama Canal; Preston, Cuba; Guantanamo Bay, Cuba; New York, N.Y.; Halifax, Nova Scotia; Belfast, Ireland; Cardiff, Barry and Swansea, Wales; Oran, Algeria; Casablanca; Newport News, Va.; Baltimore, Md.; Cape Henry, Hampton Roads and Norfolk, Va.; Naples, Bari and Brandisi, Italy; Palermo an dAugusta, Sicily; Philadelphia, Pa.; Marseilles and Cherbourg, Frances, and Ajaccio, Corsica.

The SS George Washington Carver was sold to the Army after it had made trips to Tasmania, Arabia, Egypt, Malta, Italy, Sicily, Tunis and Algeria.

Two of the other Liberty ships were lost through enemy action. They were the SS Frederick Douglass and the SS Robert L. Vann.

Perhaps the greatest territory has been covered by the SS John Hope, which has been operating in the Pacific. This ship has put in at the following Pacific ports: San Francisco, San Pedro Hueneme and Los Angeles, Calif.; Honolulu, Hawaii; Espiritu Santo, New Hebrides, Guadalcanal, Russell and Pacific Islands; Green Island, New Zealand; Treasury Island, Solomons; Noumea, New Caledonia;

Vila, New Hebrides; Langemak, New Guinea; Gremantle, Australia; Colomo, Ceylon, Calcutta, India; Sydney and Cairns, Australia; Jacquinot Bay, Bismarck, Archipelago; Biak, New Guinea; and Morotai, Eastern Archipelago, one of Moluccas northeast of Halmahera.

The SS James Weldon Johnson has been operating in both the Atlantic and Pacific, having made port at Los Angeles, Calif.; Fremantle, Australia; Colombo, Ceylon, Calcutta, India; Lourenco Marques, Portuguese East Africa; Aden, Arabia; Suez and Port Said, Egypt; Augusta and Palermo, Sicily; Naples, Italy; 5-19-45

Bizerte, Tunisia; Liverpool, Portland, The Downs and Southend, England; Belfast, Ireland; New York, N.Y.; Philadelphia, Pa., and Norfolk, Va.

The SS John Merrick has made port at Port Said and Suez, Egypt; Aden, Arabia; Shatt al Arab and Khorramshahr, Persian Gulf; Abadan and Hormuz, Iran; Cochin and Bombay, India; Glasgow, Oban and Clyde, Scotland; Barry, Cardiff and Swansea, Wales; The Downs, Southampton and Liverpool, England; as well as most Atlantic Coast ports in the United States; also Augusta, Sicily; Bari and Ancona, Italy; Oran, Algeria; Santiago and Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and Antwerp, Belgium.

Others in the group include the SS Toussaint L'Ouverture, which has been operating largely in the Pacific, Central and South America; the S. S. Harriet Tubman, which has made several crossings of the Atlantic; the SS Bert Williams, also operating in the Atlantic; and the SS Edward A. Savoy, which includes a trip to Russia in her itinerary.

The four Victory ships to be commissioned are the SS Fisk Victory, the SS Edward Victory, the SS Lane Victory and the SS Tuskegee Victory.

Pittsburgh Courier 6-9-45

WILMINGTON, Calif.—The S. S. Lane Victory, a 10,500-ton Victory Ship, was launched here Thursday night of last week by the California Shipbuilding Corporation. The 455-foot cargo vessell was named in honor of Lane College of Jackson, Tenn., a non-sectarian Negro college founded in 1883 by Bishop Isaac Lane. The co-educational liberal arts institution annually awards $7,000 to men preparing for the ministry. The S. S. Lane Victory is the 444th ship to be launched by Calship.

MRS. EVANS SPONSOR

Mrs. Florence E. Evans, 2740 Glassell Avenue, Los Angeles, granddaughter of Bishop Lane, christened the ship. Her brother, the Rev. Lane C. Cleaves, pastor of Phillips Temple, CME Church of Los Angeles, officially represented Lane College. He is a grandson of the school's founder.

Miss Mildred Blount, 2041½ West Thirty-first Street, Los Angeles, was maid of honor at the launching. Master of ceremonies was John D. Burton, Calship director of public relations. 6-9-45

After her outfitting at the California Shipbuilding Corporation outfitting dock, the S. S. Lane Victory will be delivered to the United States Maritime Commission for service on world sealines. The Victory Ship is the Maritime Commission's standard wartime and post-war cargo carrier, backbone of America's post-war Merchant Marine.

TWO OF 18 NEGRO-NAMED SHIPS LOST BY SINKING

Memphis World

WASHINGTON — (SNS) — Only two out of the 18 Liberty ships named for outstanding Negro Americans and Negro seamen who have lost their lives in this war were among the 570 United States flag merchant ships lost from direct war causes between September 1, 1939, and May 8, 1945, the War Shipping Administration announced this week.

Two ships sunk by direct enemy action were the SS FREDERICK DOUGLASS, named for the famed abolitionist leader and editor, and lost in the northwest Atlantic September 20, 1943, and the SS ROBERT L. VANN, designated in honor of the founder and publisher of THE PITTSBURG COURIER, and sunk in the northeast Atlantic on March 1, 1944.

UNDER FOREIGN FLAGS

The WSA report did not include American-owned vessels under foreign flags. Two of the Negro-named vessels are in this category. They were the SS PAUL LAURENSE DUNBAR, bearing the name of the famous Negro poet, and the SS ROBERT S. ABBOTT, the Liberty ship, which honored the founder and publisher of THE CHICAGO DEFENDER.

6-26-45

The 570 vessels were parts of 1,554 United States flag merchant ships of 6,277,077 deadweight tons lost from war causes and marine casualties largely due to war conditions between 1939 and 1945.

The destruction of ships by the enemy was accompanied by heavy loss of life. The latest Merchant Marine casualty list reports 5,579 merchant seamen dead and missing and 487 prisoners of war, a total of 6,066 as of May 1, 1945.

An overwhelming percentage of the merchant vessels were destroyed by German or Italian submarines, air attacks and mines, with 68 lost in Japanese areas. The most extensive destruction was in the north Atlantic, where wolfpacks of U-boats prowled against convoys to the British Isles and north Russia until curbed by fast-expanding Allied naval and air power, including the use of escort carriers, such as the 50 designed and built by the United States Maritime Commission for the Navy.

Scenes From Launching of S. S. William Cox

Savannah Tribune Ga. 1-11-45

Here are scenes from the launching Saturday night, Dec. 30th, of the S. S. William Cox, the first Liberty ship built by the J. A. Jones Construction company at its Brunswick shipyards and named in honor of a Negro. The launching was largely attended and was highligted by the epochal and interesting christening by Mrs. Arlee Cox of Savannah. wife of the late seaman whose name the ship will bear, an address by Dr. Milton S. J. Wright, Ph. D., of Wilberforce university, and music by the military band from Camp Gordon Johnstone, Florida. The ceremonies were witnessed by a number of Savannahians, led by Undertaker Toland J. Edwards, who motored down to the launching.

The pictures show:

Negro Seamen, Liberty Ships And Victory Ships To Be Honored On National Maritime Day, May 22nd

New York Age 5-19-45

WASHINGTON, S. C. Thousands of Negro merchant seamen—many of whom have served with mixed crews under Negro masters in all parts of the world—18 Liberty ships named for outstanding Negro Americans and seamen who have lost their lives in this war, and four Victory ships named for Negro colleges, will be honored on May 22 when Maritime Day is celebrated throughout the country, the United States Maritime Commission and the War Shipping Administration said this week.

The nation-wide celebration sponsered by the Maritime Commission and WSA, will pay tribute to more than 200,000 merchant seamen operating more than 2,000 Liberty ships, 450 C-type cargo vessels, 500 fast ocean tankers, 100 Victory cargo ships, and large number of coastal tankers, dry cargo vessels, ocean tugs, and a variety of special and smaller craft. 5-19-45

For the first time since the outbreak of the war, WSA has lifted the veil of military security on the itinerary of each of the vessels named for Negroes which has been in service for more than 60 days, and this information indicates somewhat the contribution Liberty ships have made to the war effort.

The first of these Negro-manned ships, the SS BOOKER T. WASSHINGTON, mastered by Captain Hugh Mulzac of Brooklyn N. Y., has been in active service continuously since the fall of 1942 and has carried numerous cargoes to Italy, France and the British Isles. During its nearly three years of active service, the BOOKER T. WASHINGTON has made stops at 28 different ports. These include Los Angeles, Calif.; Balboa, Panama Canal; Preston, Cuba; Guantanamo Bay, Cuba; New York, N. SS John Hope Heads List

Perhaps the greatest territory has been covered by the SS JOHN HOPE, which has been operating in the Pacific. This ship has put in at the following Pacific ports: San Francisco, San Pedro Hueneme and Los Angeles, Calif.; Honolulu Hawaii, Espiritu Santo, New Hebrides, Guadalcanal, Russel and Pacific Islands; Green Islands, New Zealand, Treasury Island, Solomons; Noumea, New Caledonia; Vila, New Hebrides; Langemak, New Guinea; Gremantle, Australia; Colombo, Ceylon, Calcutta, India; Sydney and Cairns, Australia; Jacquinot Bay, Bismark, Archipegiago; Biak, New Guinea; and Morotai, Eastern Archipelago; one of Moluccas northeast of Halmahera.

The SS JAMES WELDON JOHNSON has been operating in both the Atlantic and Pacific, having made port at Los Angeles, Calif.; Fremantle, Australia; Colomboo, Ceylon, Calcutta, India; Lourenco Marques, Portugues East Africa; Aden, Arabia; Suez and Port Said, Egypt; Augusta and Palermo, Sicily; Naples, Italy; Bizerte, Tunisia; Liverpool, Portland, The Downs and Southbend, England; Belfast, Ireland; Antwerp, Belgium; and Mumbles, Wales and such Atlantic American ports as New York, N. Y., Philadelphia, Pa., and Norfolk, Va. 5-19-45

The SS JOHN MERRICK has made port at Port Said and Suez Egypt; Aden Arabia; Shat al Arab and Khorramshahr, Persian Gulf; Abadan and Hormuz, Iran; Cochin and Bombay, India; Glasgow, Oban and Clyde, Scotland; Barry, Cardiff and Swansea, Wales; The Downs, Southhampton and Liverpool, England; as well as most Atlantic coast port in the United States; also Augusta, Sicily; Bari and Ancona, Italy; Oran, Algeria; Santiago and Guantanamo Bay, Cuba; and Aantwerp, Belgium.

Others in the group include the SS TOUSSAINT LOUVERTURE, which ha been operating largely in the Pacific, Central and South America, the SS HARRIET TUBMAN, which has made several crossings of the Atlantic; the SS BERT WILLIAMS, also operating in Atantic; and the SS EDWARD SAVOY, which includes a trip to Russit in her itinery.

The four Victory, none of which have been yet commissioned, are the SS FISK VICTORY, the SS HOWARD VICTORY and the SS TUSKEGEE VICTORY.

The following Liberty Ships named for Negro seamen who lost their lives in action have not been commissioned 60 days: SS ROBERT J. BANKS, WILLIAM COX, GEORGE A. LAWSON and JAMES KYRON WALKER.

Commander of Seabees Who Staged Strike Moved

AFRO-AMERICAN
Baltimore, Md.

NEW YORK—Commande J. P. McBean, who was in charge of the 1000 members of the 34th Seabee Construction Battalion, who staged a hunger strike in March in protest against discrimination has been officially replaced, the NAACP announced Monday.

Command of the unit based at Port Hueneme, Calif., has been assigned to Commander Lester Marks, the AFRO was informed by Roy Wilkins, assistant secretary of the NAACP, which on March 8 asked Secretary of the Navy Forrestal to investigate the situation. 4-21-45

White Petty Officers Moved

At the same time, Mr. Wilkins declared that the unit's executive officer, Lt. Commander C. D. White, had been replaced and that he had learned unofficially that 20 per cent of the white chief petty officers have been transferred.

The request for the removal of the two officers by the NAACP had followed an investigation of conditions leading to the strike by Nrman O. Houston of the Los Angeles branch of the association.

According to Mr. Houston, the Seabees had charged that both Commander McBean and Lt. Commander White manifested their belief that no colored man has any rights that a white man is bound to respect. 4-21-45

Had Prohibited Mixing

Specifiically, they charged that McBean, while they were overseas, had prohibited them from accepting invitation from white units to compete in athletic contests and had ordered white business places not to serve them.

The transfer of the white chief petty officers, it is believed, will bring promotions for some of the men whose chief complaint was that they had been denied opportunity for advancement and that whites had been brought in over them.

17th Seabees Feel Forgotten And Mistreated

Kansas City Sun 11-9-45

By HARRY S. McALPIN
(NNPA Correspondent)

LEYTE GULF, Philippine Islands (NNPA) — Over 400 of the men who with the first Marine division were responsible for victory in the blood battle of Peleliu island in September, 1944, are living today on an over-crowded house boat in the middle of Leyte gulf. They feel they have been forgotten, mistreated and ignored. The men are members of the second section of the 17th Seabee battalion—workhorses of the navy.

They are steve-dores and cargo handlers. Their story came to light during the course of the investigation tour of Lester B. Granger as personal representative of the Secretary of the Navy. Two hours after the marines hit the beach at Peleliu the men of the 17th Seabees were carrying ammunition and supplies to them. The battle line was only 25 yards from the water's edge. At one stage of the battle, the marines were driven back into the water, and were fighting knee deep in the ocean. Still the 17th seabees fed them the needed ammunition and supplies. 11-9-45

Some Killed In Action

Some of the seabees were killed in action. BM 2-c Sinclair King remembers seeing four of his buddies killed by mortar shells just 20 feet from him in the water.

As the fight progressed and defeat for the marines was staved off partially by the steady supply of ammunition, the seabees followed the action on to the island and carried ammunition across the air field under fire. They fought to bolster the dwindling ranks of the hero marines, though they had not been trained for such action.

No Citations Received

Deservedly, the first marine division was given a Presidential citation, their casualties were unusually heavy and their victory a costly one, but the 17th, who were as necessary to victory as were the courage, fighting hearts and "never-say-die" spirit of the marines, have heard no praises ringing in their ears, they have received no citations. They have been accorded no rest. While this situation is not peculiar to this unit and appears to have no racial implications the men are growing sour because of its existence.

Twenty-two months ago, on December 16, 1943, these men began their overseas service. They served four months on the island of Banika, five months on the island of Emerau in the Bismarck archipelago. After helping take and secure the island of Peleliu, they served five months there unloading ships, storing supplies then half of the organization was moved to the island of Guam and the other half sent to the Philippines. This second group is stationed in Leyte gulf. They are still doing stevedoring work and doing it well. Their schedule, though the war is over, calls for round-the-clock service, which they do without shirking. Their duties are performed on shore and on the ships that dock in the spaceous harbor of San Pedro Bay. But they live on a house boat, called by the navy an APL (auxiliary personnel lodging.)

A Tough Life

For eight months these men have lived on an APL twice a week. Sometimes only once, they are given "Liberty" to go ashore for recreation. The rest of their time off from work is spent in the sardine-can crowdness of an engineless ship. Parts of which, even have been declared out of bounds to them. They had completed their 18 months of overseas duty long before the war ended. But they were not accorded the rotation privilege and sent home.

On top of all this, we feel they are victims of racial discrimination. Their quarters on the boat are below deck where the generators hum and add to the stifling heat Over 400 of them live under these conditions top side is reserved for the headquarters and ship's companies—which are predominantly white. The few colored men who re-member of the headquarters company are never the less mehouse below deck with the hest of the Negroes for all Negroes, except those who service the officers quarters. Topside is out of bounds. 11-9-45

According to Mr. Granger, this kind of set up is in line with and descended from a practice common throughout all the seabees outfits he has observed. In his several tours of naval installations most seabees outfits he has visited contain both Negro and white personnel. This would seem to make them racially mixed units. Actually, however, he points out, all the white personnel have been assigned to head quarters and ship's companies which include the "white collar" and skilled duty assignments. The remaining companies in the unit which are responsible for the stevedore work are composed of Negro personnel.

Heavy Work Only

This arrangement puts the Negro in the position of doing the heavy laboring work, while the most sought-after jobs are held primarily by whites. "With this pattern established," said Mr. Granger, "the way is open for all racial different situations to be constructed as racial discrimination by Negro personnel "As an instance, in the movies shown on deck when the mess hall is converted into a move house, the 50 or 60 white enlisted men aboard invariably occupy the front tables and seats, the remaining tables and seats being occupied by the Negroes.

Lt. T. F. Gaffey, officer in charge of the 17th Seabees, told this correspondent that there have been no orders for such separation and segregation and that it is voluntary on the part of the whites. 11-9-45

But the men, because of the pattern cited, above are convinced in their minds that here is another evidence of racial segregation, another of their complaints is that in the eight months of this floating "Hotel," they have had no chaplain. No provision has been made for those who would like to attend and participate in religious services, or for the discussion of their personal problems, with a member of the clergy.

One Negro Officer

One bright spot which has perhaps most to do with maintenance of their minds and prevention of a total collapse on the part of these men, has been the presence of a lone Negro officer, Ensign J. B. Williams, of Annapolis, Md.

Ensign Williams has been with the men for nine months. He has spent the entire period with them since they have been marooned on an APL in the middle of the Leyte gulf. But eight months of such life, 22 months overseas and without rotation of rest, and racial discrimination both real and fancied to boot are dulling the edge of the wholesome effects of Williams' presence and rank. 11-9-45

Today, these 400-odd men, above all their grievances want only one thing—to come home. Their immediate commanding officers agree they deserve such consideration. Because of their exemplary record, it is believed Mr. Granger, who has investigated their situation will discuss their plight with naval officials.

Dr. Jernagin Finds Racial Harmony Is Best Among Seabees

Atsugi Airfield, Japan (Delayed) —There is less discrimination and better race relations among the Seabees than in any other service unit, according to Rev. William H. Jernagin, director of the Fraternal Council of Negro Churches.

The Rev. Jernagin, on his way back to the U. S., has just completed a series of visits among Negro troops in Hawaii, the Marianas, the Philippines, Okinawa and Japan.

Common Mess Helpful

He attributed the healthy relationship among races in the Seabees to better job opportunities and the common use of mess facilities which enable whites and Negroes to become better acquainted.

"This is not true of the sea going Navy," he said. 12-14-45

Declaring himself satisfied that conditions of Negro troops were better than he had anticipated, the clergyman, who is pastor of the Mt. Carmel Baptist church, Washington, D. C., stated: "The morale of Negro units is highest where they are commanded by Negro officers.

Protest Rank Race Discrimination

Petition To Be Sent Navy Sec'y Asking Changes

Four Points To Be Covered In Appeal Of Men

1-10-45

PORT HUENEME, Cal. — (ANP) —The secretary of the navy may soon have a petition from Negro members of the 34th U. S. Naval Construction unit, regardless of consequences to the signers, regarding jim crow practices against them.

That revelation was made last week to the Associated Negro Press by Negro members of the outfit who declared that four things must be done to alter the situation withing the ranks of the unit:

1. A new commanding officer should be assigned immediately. He should be a man without the race traditions of the south.

2. The assignment of northern white officers and Negro officers to the outfit. 1-10-45

3. All-Negro enlisted personnel including chief petty officers.

4. The assignment of Negro chaplains rather than white chaplains to the unit.

These four-points will be included in the petition to the secretary of the navy. Blame of the anti-Negro policies and practices against Negro members of the outfit may be placed upon the shoulders of their southern white commanding officer, whom they claim condones by sympathy the various types of racial discrimination and segregation directed by white seamen against Negro seamen.

Charges that the commanding officer violated his trust by his failure to select an all-Negro enlisted personnel were made. "He was supposed to have selected an all-Negro pesronnel but he chose southern white enlisted personnel as 'pushers' for the Negroes," one Negro sailor remarked. "He did this in order to keep any Negroes from becoming chief petty officers."

His staff is composed of all southern white officers, another seaman said, then added that "right now as we are re-organizing, he is getting all southern whites to replace those that have been lost from the battalion." 1-10-45

"The white enlisted personnel in our battalion is responsible for all the segregation and discrimination," the men said. "They get all the promotions which keeps the Negro from being advanced in rating. Not a single Negro has been made a chief petty officer."

Although there are qualified Negroes in the outfit that have been intentionally overlooked for chief petty officer ratings, only a few have been promoted as high as first class petty officer. "We have Negroes with good records in all ratings as low as first class seamen that have not received a single rating since this battalion was organized more than two years ago," the Negro seaman pointed out.

Navy Review Board Changes Status Of Ousted Seabees At Trinidad

New York Age

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Navy Review Board on Monday, with the approval of Secretary of the Navy Forrestal, changed the discharge status of fourteen of the nineteen seabees who were given discharges of inaptitude last December, to discharges "under honorable conditions." Status of a fifteenth Negro seabee who was not identified, remained unchanged on the grounds that he committed several infractions of naval rules and discipline before discharge, the Navy said. 4-7-45

These seabees who were attached to the 80th Naval Construction Battalion, composed of 800 Negroes and 200 whites, at Trinidad, B.W.I., were discharged by their commanding officer under either "undesirable discharges by reason of unfitness" or "ordinary discharges under satisfactory conditions by reason of inaptitude." The cases of the remaining four men were not considered.

A Navy attorney at a hearing last December, contended that the seabees as a body had been guilty of attending "seditious" meetings, refusal to obey orders, attempted sit-down strikes or threatened sabotage." He also mentioned that the charges did not apply to the men individually. 4-7-45

The lawyers for the defendants charged that all misdemeanors were brought about because the seabees were a better-educated group of Negroes.

COURT MARTIAL TRIAL HAD PREVIOUSLY Placed A Stigma On Their Dismissals

15th Man's Status Remains The Same

WASHINNTON, D. C. Apr 2 —A navy board of review today changed the discharges of 14 Negro Seabees who were let out of the navy because they were unfit for the service" to discharges "under honorable conditions" of the group, whose name was not mentioned did not fare so well at the hands of the board his discharge retaining the stigma, "undesirable," because he had committed several infractions of naval rules and discipline.

DISRSEhc FIE

These fifteen men along with four other Negro Seabees, were discharged by the commanding officer of the 80th Naval Construction Battalion at Trinidad, West Indies, under either "undesirable discharges by reason of unfitness" or "ordinary discharges under satisfactory conditions by reason of "inaptitude."

4-5-45

A navy attorney at a hearing held in December asserted that the records of the men as a group showed that they attended "seditions" meetings, refused to obey orders, attempted a sit down strike or threatened sabotage.

The defense attorneys, including NAACP lawyers and Arthur Garfield Hayes of the other man stayed with his stuck duck carrying an artillery piece while everyone else was in a foxhole. I could go on and on about the men's brave conduct. I am proud to belong to a colored duck company with the calibre of men that are in his outfit."

Sg. Larry Schulenburg, Marine corps combat correspondent, wrote of Lt. Grove's out-

"The Marines on Iwo Jima will never forget this company of colored boys. Japs on Mt. Suribachi were raking the beaches to plaster Marine units trying to dig in before nightfall on D Day There was no artillery ashore yet. Machine guns were no match for mortars and heavier Jap guns.

"Then early in the afternoon this Negro outfit started for the island in 50 bobbing, swaying ducks, bringing with them the 105mm howitzers, the long-muzzled guns which since swept Iwo with salvo after salvo.

"When the colored boys finished 48 hours later they had lost 29 out of their 50 ducks, but the guns were emplaced and working. In the face of huge odds only two guns were lost.

"One hour after they hit the beach the guns were set up and ammunition ready for firing. The drivers had to stand up, exposed, to unharness the howitzers. The Marines thought the colored boys were crazy, but those boys thought that if the Marines could land on the place, their duck company could give them the stuff to make the landing stick."

12,300 Negroes in the Seabees

Los Angeles Tribune 4-8-45

WASHINGTON — More than 12,300 Negroes joined with other Navy Seabees in celebration of their third birthday Dec. 23 G.I.

Only recently the first battalion of Negro Seabees to go overseas, the 34th Construction Battalion, returned home after 20 months of jungle fighting. They brought with them a unit commendation from Capt. Mark L. Halsey, Jr., commander of the Naval Base at Guadalcanal, for the splendid record they made.

Negro Seabees Hail 'Emancipation'

P.M. 4-19-45

PM's Bureau

PM Exclusive

WASHINGTON, Apr. 19. —The commanding officer of the 34th Construction Battalion (Seabees) and his first assistant have been removed following complaints from the all-Negro enlisted personnel that the battalion's two top officers had discriminated against them because of their color, PM was advised today by the NAACP (National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People), which had carried the fight direct to Secretary of Navy Forrestal.

'Emancipation'

4-18-45

In addition, the NAACP reported that 20 per cent of the battalion's all-white staff of petty officers had been transferred, thus making room for promotions from the ranks. One of the complaints had been that the commanding officer's Jim Crow policy had prevented any Negro, regardless of his experience and education, from attaining the status of a petty officer.

The removed chief officer, the NAACP said, was Cmdr. J. P. McBean, from Hattiesburg, Miss. With him went his first assistant, Lieut. Commander C. D. White. McBean has been succeeded by Cmdr. Lester M. Marks of New Jersey, White's successor was not given.

4-19-45

A letter from the NAACP's Oxnard, Calif., post, where the battalion's base is located, said that "servicemen are calling the replacement of McBean 'the new emancipation.' There is no doubt that it was a history-making affair."

All that the Navy here would say about the matter was that "the officer in question was detached on April 3 to a Pacific command."

However, NAACP headquarters in New York received a letter yesterday from Rear Adm. William M. Fechteler, assistant chief of naval personnel, which said:

"You are advised that representatives of the Navy Dept. made a thorough investigation of the conditions in the 34th Naval Construction battalion and corrective actions have been taken in accordance with their recommendations. No further changes are considered necessary at this time."

Case Was Pushed

4-19-45

The 34th Seabee battalion first came into the news about six weeks ago when its members went on a hunger strike in protest over alleged discrimination against them.

However, over a period of more than six months prior to that the NAACP offices here and in New York had received numerous letters from enlisted men in the battalion complaining of their treatment. Most of the letters placed the blame on Commander McBean.

The NAACP took up the complaints with Forrestal and assured corrective measures had been taken. When the hunger strike occurred, the NAACP renewed its efforts to obtain relief. Its Los Angeles office made a first-hand investigation and sent its damning report to Forrestal.

The Navy, it was learned, promptly sent an officer from here to Port Hueneme, Calif., where the battalion was quartered after returning from 21 months of distinguished service in the South Pacific.

4-19-45

Later NAACP headquarters in New York heard "by grapevine" that McBean was to be replaced by Marks—but nothing else. The NAACP thereupon wired Forrestal renewing its earlier requests that White also be removed, and that provision be made for the promotion of Negroes to the ranks of chief petty officers.

Roy Wilkins, of the NAACP's New York office, told PM that all three corrective measures urged by his organization had now been put into effect.

Striking Seabees Get New Commander; Ask More Changes

New York Age 4-14-45

Persistent reports from California that Commander J. P. McBean has been removed as commander of the 34th Seabee Battalion which went on a hunger strike March 2-3, led the NAACP to ask James V. Forrestal, Secretary of the Navy, for confirmation of the rumor that McBean is being replaced by Lt. Com. Lester M. Mars of New Jersey. McBean is from Mississippi.

4-14-45

"We suggest," said the NAACP wire, "that there are additional sore spots which ought to be erased in this veteran outfit before it is returned to overseas duty. First, the transfer of Executive Officer C. D. White characterized in all reports as "bad as McBean." Others who might be transferred with benefit to battalion are Lieutenants Wiggins, Quillon, Davis, Newsome, particularly Wiggins and Quillen.

We are informed Davis was refused by commander of 80th construction battalion but was assigned to 34th. Second, battalion as demoralized as 34th would seem to require more time to break in new men and infuse confidence into veterans that a new deal is on. Third, there remains uneasiness in battalion over fate of few men singled out for punishment at Port Hueneme. Our information indicates Navy Department has recognized situation fairly and taken corrective action which will go long way toward steering men and civilian population. If at all possible to act on suggestions herewith, especially with regard to White, Department will have done good job. Is it true and will it be announced that new commander is Lt. Com. Lester M. Mars? Will additional opportunities for promotion within the battalion, if any, also be announced?"

4-14-45

The NAACP said it had been informed that the 34th would be sent overseas by April 20.

Four Seabees Flogged; Navy Ousts Commander

Chicago Defender

By RICHARD DURHAM
(Defender Staff Correspondent)

PORT HUENEME, Calif.—A 20th Century Captain Bligh, who ordered the flogging of four Negro Seabees members of the famed 34th battalion, was ousted from his command this week, the Defender learned.

In a modern version of "Mutiny on the Bounty," the anti-Negro Dixie-bred battalion commander, C. McBean, who fondly referred to the Seabees as "my niggers," was responsible for one of the most brutal, sadistic floggings in modern naval history.

Pouring back into this race-embattled port after a battalion leave following their recent two-day hunger strike against discrimination, the 1,000 Seabees found their Dixie "boss man" missing.

Also missing, however, were the four alleged leaders of the mass protest, who, thrown in the brig charged with "failure to stand at attention," were thrashed, then released from the navy with "bad conduct discharges."

Beating Revealed

Carefully hidden within the confines of the camp, the story of the Gestapo-like persecution of the Rand and Jesse Pollard, who had been charged with "failure to stand at attention" and placed in the brig, were brought out just this week.

Stalking into the brig They were taken by the strike was Chief guards to the concrete-floored McClellan, attached shower room, had their hands carried out in- cuffed behind their backs and were ing in them smart slugged and beaten for more than 34th." an hour.

They were then forced to kneel d Class Sammie before the enraged white petty Taylor, Harold officers with hands extended Pollard, who had straight into the air, and were "failure to stand slugged whenever they dropped placed in the them.

So vicious and brutal was this attack that one sensitive white petty officer, attached to the brig, could stand it no longer and notified a higher officer, reported to have been Captain William Sihler, to end the beating.

Chief McLellan was himself temporarily locked in the brig, but was later released and placed back on duty as he had, he explained, simply carried out McBean's orders.

Miles, Taylor, Rand and Pollard were treated in the dispensary for body bruises and severely mutilated faces and were released from the navy with "bad conduct discharges."

This last order of the out-spoken anti-Negro commander who had canvinced the navy that his Dixie background gave him superior qualifications for handling Negro sailors, climaxed a three-year attempt to maintain a ceiling against Negro promotions in the 34th battalion, which he and apparently the navy department regarded as normal.

Admiral Whitewashed C.O.

Despite documented cases of three years of systematic race persecution leveled against the battalion by their commander; of near riots on the transport to the Pacific caused by jim crow mess halls and lavoratories; of discriminations which occurred in the midst of Japanese bombings and jim crow orders against the mixing of white and Negro sailors for recreational purposes, all of which were presented to the navy department before the hunger strike, Rear Admiral Louis E. Denfield, assistant chief of bureau, replied with an ivory-tower letter stating:

"The report shows there is no real basis for complaint by Negro members of the 34th Construction Battalion. It does not appear that their rights or privileges have in any way been restricted or prejudiced.

"The commanding officer is most reliable and excellently qualified for the discharge of his responsibility."

Commander L. M. Marx from New Jersey has been promoted from his 57th Seabee battalion to take over this ace unit composed of 800 Negroes and 200 whites which was on the verge of open rebellion one month ago.

Marx's new command is the result of the navy's probe into charges of race discrimination brought against McBean.

The 34th, the first Negro construction battalion and the first of any Negro unit to see action overseas, is now being geared for its second sojourn into the Pacific battleground.

Battalion Had Participated In Hunger Strike

Protest Lodged With Navy Sec'y James Forrestal

5-2-45

NEW YORK — (SNS) — Relying upon reports from its observers on the Pacific Coast, the NAACP charged April 27 in a wire to Secretar of the Navy James V. Forrestal, that the 34th Construction Battalion (Seabees), who went on a hunger strike March 2-3 in protest against discriminatory conditions, were herded on to their ship and bound for the Pacific by an "armed guard with drawn bayonets."

The 34th Battalion is a veteran outfit having already served 21 months in the South Pacific. Upon their return to the United States in the latter part of 1944, they flooded the Navy department, their friends, Negro organizations and the Negro press with protests over the treatment they had been accorded by Commander J. P. MacBean of Hattiesburg, Miss., and his executive officer, Lt. Commander C. D. White

CONDUCTS PROBE

Norman Houston of the Los Angeles branch of the NAACP conducted an investigation at the California post where the battalion was stationed on February 27 and recommended the removal of Commander MacBean

As a result of the pressure from all sides the Navy department removed MacBean, but apparently in retaliation for the just complaints of the men, the battalion is being re-shipped overseas was humiliated by being handled like prisoners or criminals. In the wire to Secretary Forrestal the NAACP, through Roy Wilkins, assistant secretary, said:

5-2-45

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is advised from West Coast that 34th Construction Battalion embarked under armed guard with drawn bayonets as though men were criminals or were reluctant to serve their country. This battalion has 21 months overseas service and has proved beyond doubt its ability and loyalty. We are also advised that last minute transfers out of battalion over and above usual replacements have left unit merely a shell of one which made excellent record in South Pacific.

ENTER PROTEST

"Feeling on the West Coast is that 34th is being humiliated and punished because vigorous protest of shabby treatment and discriminatory practices of former Commander J. P. MacBean resulted in MacBean's transfer. We enter vigorous protest against this action. If Navy investigation determined that MacBean should have been transferred men of battalion should not be penalized. If MacBean policies were not harmful to morale as charged he should never have been removed.

5-2-45

"Subsequent treatment of 34th battalion suggests strongly unworthy punitive action by Navy department which has sent battalion morale to a new low. This coupled with high percentage of inexperienced replacements presents battalion with tremendous job to maintain high standard of previous overseas service."

Commander Of Seabees Is Removed

Call-Kansas City

Was in Charge of Base When 1,000 Went on Strike

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA). — Removal of Commander J. P. McBean, of Hattiesburg, and his assistant, Lt. Comdr. C. D. White as commanding officers of the 34th Construction Battalion of Seabees (U. S. Navy) was revealed here last week. Comdr. McBean was in charge of the Port Hueneme Naval base where 1,000 Seabees went on a hunger strike in protest to discriminatory treatment and denial of promotion opportunities. He has been detached to a Pacific command, according to the Navy Department.

Removal of the two officers was demanded last month by the N.A.A.C.P. in a letter directed to Secretary of the Navy Forrestal. At that time the N.A.A.C.P. pointed out that the hunger strike brought to a head the trouble that had been brewing for a long time. Removal of the commander, said the N.A.A.C.P., seemed the only solution.

The Navy instituted a prompt investigation of the charges and complaints through the commanddant of the Eleventh Naval District at San Diego, Cal., Rear Admiral W. L. Friedell.

As a result, not only has the commander of the Seabees been removed, but 20 per cent of the battalions all-white staff of petty officers is reported to have been transferred, thus making roof for promotions of Negroes from the ranks.

4-27-45

Servicemen at the base have referred to McBean's removal as "the new emancipation."

Two Negro women recruits to the SPARS, Misses Olivia J. Hooker, of Columbus, Ohio, and Aileen A. Cooke, of Los Angeles are now taking "boot" training at the Manhattan Beach, N.Y. Coast Guard Training Station, U.S. Cosat Guard officials here announced this week.

Miss Hooker, a former public school teacher in Columbus, was born in Muskogee, Okla., and holds a B.S. in education from Ohio State University.

Miss Cooke is the daughter of a Navy man, Allen A. Cooke, steward first class, and attended the University of Southern California for three years, majoring in psychology. Before her induction, she was employed as a clerk-typist at an Army signal post in Los Angeles.

SPARS are women's reserve of the Coast Guard and their recruitment program was enlarged last fall along with other branches of the naval program to include Negro women. "Boot" training courses last six weeks. All SPARS who receive "boot" training at Manhattan Beach are assigned to district Coast Guard units or are sent to specialty schools. The SPAR Officer Training School was discontinued last summer.

Two Negro SPARS Recruits Begin Boot Training At Manhattan Beach

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Two Negro women recruits to the SPARS, Olivia J. Hooker, of Columbus, Ohio, and Aileen A. Cooke, of Los Angeles, Calif., are now taking "boot" training at the Manhattan Beach, N. Y., Coast Guard Training Station, United States Coast Guard officials in Washington announced this week.

Miss Hooker, a former public school teacher in Columbus, was born in Muskogee, Okla., attended Central High School in Columbus and graduated from Ohio State University in the class of June 1937, with a degree of B. S. in Education. She is a member of Colored Teachers Federation and the National Education Association.

Miss Cooke is the daughter of a Navy man, Allan A. Cooke, steward first class, and received her high school education at Pasadena Junior College and attended the University of Southern California for three years, majoring in psychology. Befo' her induction, she was employed as a clerk-typist at an Army Signal Depot in Los Angeles.

NEW YORK — All five of the colored Spars now stationed at the U.S. Guard Training Station for Spars in Manhattan Beach, told the AFRO this week that they are treated even better than they had expected to be.

Declaring that discrimination and segregation are nonexistant in any form, they said that they bunk together with whites, and enjoy all sports and recreational activities on a truly democratic basis.

All College Trained

The five Spars are:

Yvonne Cumberbatch, apprentice seaman of New York City; Olivia J. Hooker, seaman 1/c of Columbus, Ohio; Aileen A. Cooke, seaman 2/c of Los Angeles; Julia Mosley, apprentice seaman of Farmdale, Va., and D. Winifred Byrd, apprentice seaman of Little Plymouth, Va.

All are college trained, and three were school teachers before entering the service.

A member of the Spars since June 2, Seaman Cumberbatch is still in boot training. A graduate of Hunter College in New York, she formerly worked as an engineering draftsman for a Wall St. firm.

She plans to conduct a chorus and also study surgery after the war.

Among First in Service

One of the first colored Spars to arrive here for training in February, Seaman Hooker has completed her boot training and courses at yeoman school.

A graduate of Ohio State University, she has taught school in Columbus and plans to complete her master's degree in education after she leaves the service.

Daughter of Navy Officer

Seaman Cooke, the daughter of a Naval warrant officer, was the first colored Spar to be graduated from the training school here, completed the general office training course for Spars on June 22.

A former student at Pasadena Junior College and the University of Southern California, she worked in a Los Angeles post office, prior to her enlistment in February. 7-7-43

Declaring that her white bunkmates from Texas and Florida are among her best friends, she said that she would like to become an actress after the war and also complete her courses in college.

Seaman Mosley has been in the Spars since June 4, and is still in boot training. A graduate of Knoxville College, she taught in secondary school in Virginia prior to enlistment.

Has Brother in Army

The sister of Cpl. Archer Mosley, now in France; and Pvt. Coleman Mosley, now in the Pacific theater, she says she will study library science after the war.

Seaman Byrd, also a former secondary school teacher in Virginia, a graduate of Virginia State College, has been in the Spars four weeks.

Especially praising the entertainment given them as being of first-class calibre, she states that she will return to teaching school and also hopes to continue her education and get a master's degree.

Notes Progress Made Since Navy 'Lowered Bars' Three Years Ago

New York Amsterdam News 6-23-45

By CHARLES H. LOEB
(NNPA War Correspondent)

GUAM (Via Airmail)—Today marks the third anniversary of the admission of Negro enlistees into the General Service branches of the United States Navy. For the 22 years preceeding June 1, 1942, enlistments had been restricted to the Steward's branch, and except for a few "old timers" whose sleeves were covered with hash marks, Negro sailors were conspicuous by the absence of the prized right arm ratings.

No Formal Observance

That there was no formal observance of the "anniversary" out here in this forward area impressed this observer as a healthy sign of the acceptance of Negro personnel. The Navy is much too busy out here with its titanic job of clearing the sea lanes of Japanese fleet remnants; husbanding the enormous flow of men and supplies to the doorstep of the enemy, and maintaining the aquatic ladder over which our forces carry the fight to Hirohito's homeland, to engage in this sort of extra-curricular activity. The sight of brown-skins in blues is no longer a novelty.

6-23-45

Out here one can see what has happened to the 148,796 Negro seamen who entered such camps as Moffert, Lawrence, Robert Smalls and Hampton Institute since the lowering of the bars. Affecting the rolling swagger of the Navy, speaking the language that is so unintelligible to the landsman, living and working harmoniously with their white mates, they may be observed out here in every type of Navy installation.

Where They're Located

From New York to the Continent, from 'Frisco to Okinawa, at shore installations, on submarines, fleet auxiliary ships, the speedy little PT boats, as well as the destroyers, cruisers, aircraft carriers and battleships of our mighty Navy, they have learned to live, work and fight in accordance with the finest Navy traditions.

They've won their right arm ratings, and the increased pay and respect that accompanies, over the objections and fears of the racial alarmists, and more importantly, over the progress-hampering attitudes of many of their own Negro mates.

Cooperative Officers

In addition to the two Negro commissioned officers, Ensign Jesse Arbor, and Warrant Officer Charles Lear, hundreds of men wear proudly the right arm ratings that indicate the yeoman, coxswain, signalman, machinist mate, motor mechanic, gunners mate, torpedoman and electricians mate, among others. Here at Guam the seamen far outnumber the men in the Stewards branch, and cooperative white officers are enthusiastic in the formation of classes to prepare them for the examinations leading to higher rating.

It was gratifying to talk for several hours with handsome, young Lt. John F. Dille, USNR, who for three years has devoted himself to publicizing the activities of Negroes in the Navy. In addition to revealing that the Navy has enroute to this theatre five Negro enlisted men who will be assigned public relations jobs with Negro units, he passed on much valuable information on Negro units out here which I expect to cover.

6-23-45

A Good Deal

At Pearl Harbor, he revealed, are two Negro physicians, two dentists, a Negro supply officer, a disbursing officer, and many Negro petty officers. He spoke in high praise of Lt. Edward S. Hope, Atlanta, Ga., in the Civil Engineering Corps, who is maintenance officer at Manana Naval Barracks, and of Lt. (jg) Marron W. Fort, Newburyport, Mass., disbursing officer at Manana.

We talked of the "pressure" exerted by the Negro press; the formal opening of Camp Robert Smalls at Great Lakes, Ill., the decision to commission the first Negro officers, and finally of the inclusion of Negro women in the Waves.

We agreed it was a good deal.

Negro Begins Training At Naval Academy

Norfolk Journal 7-8-45

Washington, July 7 (AP)—The first Negro appointed to the U. S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., since 1937 reported to the institution June 30, the Navy said today.

He is Wesley A. Brown, New York City, and Washington, D. C. A former student at Howard University, Washington, he was appointed to the Academy by Representative Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., Negro member of Congress from New York City.

Five Negroes have been appointed to the academy in its history. There have been no Negro graduates.

Navy Abandons Segregation of Negro Trainees

Daily Worker 7-7-45

GREAT LAKES, Ill., July 6.—The Bureau of Naval Personnel has issued an order, as of July 1, discontinuing the policy of maintaining a special training program and camp here for Negro general service recruits, so that hereafter induction centers will assign Negroes to recruit training on the same basis as white personnel.

All recruits, except illiterates, will be assigned to the nearest recruit training command, which, for both Negro and white, is the Naval Training and Distribution Center, Camp Peary, Williamsburg, Va. All Negro general service recruits were previously sent to Great Lakes.

Negro and white enlisted personnel will be assimilated alike at the Naval Training Center here, recruits being assigned to the same companies and to use of the same barracks, recreation halls and other facilities indiscriminately.

7-7-45

The Bureau of Naval Personnel directive is intended to obtain the maximum use of Navy training and housing facilities and is said to be in line with "established policy" of non-discrimination and equal handing of all personnel wearing the Navy uniform.

Negro WAVES Pass Hunter Without Ripple

P.M. N.Y. 2-11-45

Now Assigned to Stations From Coast to Coast

The first contingent of Negro WAVES has completed "boot" training at Hunter College. There were no segregation, no incidents, no protests.

The 31 entered the Bronx training school of the Women's Naval Reserve on Dec. 28. They have now been scattered from coast to coast for further training and assignment, with the largest number, 10, going to San Diego. Four have been assigned to Bethesda, Md., where they will be trained for the Navy Hospital Corps. Five went to the Navy supply depot at Mechanicsburg, Pa.; three to mail school here in New York, and five to the Yeoman School at Cedar Falls, Iowa. Two are assigned to the Third Naval District, and one each was sent to Boston and to the International Business Machine School here. 2-11-45

Their preliminary training concluded, the Negro women will now study a wide variety of specialties, ranging from medical laboratory technique to aviation mechanics.

The 31 were in the last large class—1680—to enter the WAVES training school. Under the present curtailed recruiting quota, only 250 recruits enter the USS Hunter every two weeks.

The school, which is just starting its third year, has given preliminary training to 77,876 enlisted WAVES, 3380 Marines and 1958 SPARS. The latter two women's services now have their own schools.

The first contingent of Negro women was not segregated in the dormitories, mess halls, classrooms or drill grounds. Lt. Harriet Pickens, for example, has been regimental adjutant at reviews of the 5000 plus WAVES on the campus, and Ensign Frances Elizabeth Wills has been giving aptitude tests. 2-11-45

In the reorganization of the school now in progress, both Negro officers are in the training department. Lt. Pickens' most recent lecture was on fleet organization and task forces.

All went well for the first Negro Wave graduates who finished their training last week at Hunter College. The girls encountered no jim-crowism, their presence was not protested against and everyone who entered the Bronx training school on Dec. 28 finished up well satisfied with everything.

The girls are now scattered throughout the nation for further training and assignment. Ten have gone to San Diego, four to Bethesda, Md., to study for the Navy hospital corps; five went to the Navy supply depot at Mechanicsburg, Pa.; three to mail school here in New York and five to the yeoman school at Cedar Falls, Ia. Two entered the Third Naval district and one each was sent to Boston and to the International Business Machine school here. The girls now will specialize in some particular field. 3-3-45

The Negro Waves graduated along with the last of the large classes, this one numbering 1,680. According to a recent decree, only 250 recruits will enter the USS Hunter every two weeks.

Classmates Say Lt. (J.G.) Pickens, Ensign Wills Fine Navy Material

By MABLE ALSTON

NORTHHAMPTON, Mass. — White classmates training with the two colored WAVE candidates had highest praise for them, this week.

"Lt. (j.g.) Harriet Pickens is one of the best friends," said Ensign Nellie I. Renegar, white, of Florence, Ala., when asked how she liked training with the two colored officers at the Naval Reserve Midshipmen's School (WR), Thursday. 1-6-45

"I really did enjoy training with both Lt. (j.g) Pickens and Ensign Wills they are swell."

Third in Class

"Gee it was swell training with Pickens and Wills, and you bet I am proud of them. Did you know that Pickens stands third with honors in our class of 186?," said Ruth Rose of Chicago, Ill. "I am from a Navy family. My father is at present a captain and I know good Navy material when I see it. Both Pickens and Wills have just what it takes."

"Marvelous is the word to describe Lt. (j.g.) Pickens and Ensign Wills," said Paula Strain of Pittsburgh, Pa., "I most certainly did enjoy my training with the young women." "That goes double for us," said Daisy McClure and Frances Kelly of Chicago.

Brilliant Student

"Harriet is a very unique and brilliant person," said Nancy English, of New Haven, Conn., "and I not only enjoyed training with her but her friendship as well."

Lt. (j.g.) Pickens said:

"I have had to study very hard but when I find myself third on the honor roll of my class of 186, it has been worth every effort that I have put forth.

Engaged to Army Man

"There are many rules and regulations of the Navy that we don't understand. But to be a success one must obey them willingly and cheerfully. I am engaged to Sgt. John B. Horne, Lena Horne's uncle, who is stationed at Camp Lee. Wedding plans are indefinite because I have been assigned along with Ensign Wills to Hunter College. One must put the winning of the war above their own happiness nowadays." 1-6-45

"I enjoyed my training very much, and my only regret today is that my mother could not be here to see me graduate. I am not engaged but am very interested in my career in the Navy," said Ensign Frances E. Wills.

Not only did Lt. (j.g.) Harriet Ida Pickens, Ensign Frances Wills, and other students bid a fond farewell to each other but to the picturesque little town of Northhampton as well, Thursday.

This was the last graduation day for the Midshipmen's School established in August 1942. It has been he training school for almost every officer in the Women's Reserve.

Only a few of the staff and the student officers at the communications school will remain in Northhampton where in a little more than 9,000 midshipmen have been commissioned.

These have included three French girls who were commissioned in Les Services Feminins de la Flotte, the French Navy's women's reserve, and the first two colored women to be admitted to the WAVES.

First Race Waves Get Commissions; One Heads Class

NEW YORK — (ANP) — Despite the fact that two Negro girls, Harriet Ida Pickens and Frances Eliza Wills, suffered the handicap of entering the Waves school when more than one third of the eight weeks course was over, both were graduated December 21, and Miss Pickens, now lieutenant (jg- in the navy, went over the group. More than 200 were commissioned Wave officers at the exercises.

More than 200 were commissioned Wave officers at the exercises.

Taking the course at Naval Reserve Midshipmen's school (WR), Northampton, Mass., on the campus of Smith college, Lt. Pickens maintained stardom in basketball which she created during her four years at Smith college, as a regular college student.

Fellow Waves were amazed at the skill and precision with which she played the game; her intellect, personality and general background were so widely discussed that Life magazine sent a photographer to the school to make pictures of her. At least one of these photos will be used in a future edition of the magazine. 1-6-45

Present at the exercises was Dean William J. Pickens, the officer's proud father who afterwards commented:

"Hitler and Hirohito ought to have seen it all; they would despair of ever licking our navy, with 'females of the species of that calibre in it."

Lt. Pickens has been assigned to Hunter college, New York, where she will probably train enlisted recruits.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—July 24—with the great sea offensive under way in the Pacific, and with replacements necessitated for thousands of men whose services are urgently needed on the battlefronts, the Nevy Department this week urged qualified Negro women to join with the two colored commissioned officers and 54 enlisted Waves in playing an active part in a speedy victory. 7-27-45

The Navy is now seeking 20,000 Waves to help support the Pacific offensive and to help care for the increasing number of men being wounded on the battlefronts. Half of those who enlist in the current drive will be assigned to the Hospital Corps, and the rest to shore jobs in communications, supply, radio and aviation and other branches which are vital in winning final victory in the Pacific.

Negro WAVEs Celebrate Corps' Third Birthday

N.Y. Amsterdam News = N.Y.N.Y.

This year's celebration of the third anniversary of the founding of the WAVES, to be observed July 30, will be the first year Negro members of the Corps will join in the celebration over the 100,000, larger than the Women's Army Corps. 7-28-45

It was not until November of last year that the first Negro women were admitted to this branch of the service. Since that time, they along with the thousands of their white co-members have been working for the successful completion of the war.

Their record has been a good one since their admission, both in the ranks and among the officers, as the Navy, having broken the precedent of past bias, now becomes one of the most liberal of the armed forces.

With the observation of this year's birthday, the Corps is seeking 20,000 new members, many of whom will surely be Negro women, to bring the total enlistment well

Women Reserves are badly needed at this time in the field of medicine, and it is thought that at least half of the new women to be recruited for the corps will be used in medical detachments.

Training is being offered in this field with especial emphasis on rehabilitation, and women joining the corps at this time will receive invaluable training and experience in one of the professions which will be of paramount importance in the post war world. 7-28-45

Navy Stands Up on Inspection, No Segregation Among WAVES

AFRO-AMERICAN

By RICHARD DIER

NEW YORK — When the first group of colored Waves arrived at the U.S. Naval Training Station (WR), formerly Hunter College, in the Bronx, last December, there was much speculation as to whether they would be discriminated against or segregated.

The Navy has done right well for itself. The AFRO is happy to report that the 60-odd colored Waves who have already received their boot training here and been transferred to other assignments, and the 12 who are here at present have enjoyed complete equality. They have messed together, bunked togetherfi and attended classes together.

As far as the Navy policy is concerned, girls, white or colored, are Waves, and they have thoroughly stuck by it. 6-16-45

AFRO interviews with five colored Waves this week revealed that all were happy in having joined this branch of the service and in the work they were doing.

Seaman Anna Lou Markham, 20, an apprentice seaman from 1406 W. 62nd Street, Chicago, Ill., has

has been here six months foh mam worked in a defense plant, and joined the Waves because she was interested in the Navy.

"I love it here," she asid, "and I would like to get into aviation as a flight orderly in the Specialist V-Branch.

She has four cousins and one uncle in the Army.

Seaman Gloria E. Harris, 21, also an apprentice seaman, lives at 47 Chadwick Avenue, Newark, N.J., and is a regular reader of the AFRO. She also has been here six weeks, and formerly atended Commercial Art School, a course she intends to finish after the war is over.

"They have a wonderful reputation in the Waves," she explained, "and as a woman's organization in the war effort, I think it is tops. It's splendid here: good food, regular hours, and the calithenics and exercise are good for morale."

Has Hero Uncle

She wants to get a Specialist-X rating, doing public relations or advertising work in the Waves. Her uncle, Sgt. George Gordon, was a World War I hero. He rereceived the Croix-de-Guerre for capturing six carloads of German ammunition single-handed. She has three cousins in the service.

There are two colored Wave officers at the school who are doing a splendid job for which they have been praised by high-ranking officials. They are Lt. (jg) Harriet Pickens and Ensign Frances Wills who were among the first to arrive at this trainig school last December.

Lt. Pickens is assistant advanced training officer and lectures to Waves in training. She was graduated third in the last class of officers at the Naval Reserve Midshipmen School, Northampton, Mass. A graduate, cum laude, of Smith Colege, Lt. Pickens also attended Columbia University. She taught at Bennet College, Greensboro, N.C., and was executive secretary of the Harlem Committee of the N.Y. Tuberculosis and Health Association before joining the Waves.

"I lecture on communications and security, task forces in action, distribution of supplies by sea and air, and naval history," she told the AFRO. "I also give morale lessons."

Ensign Wills was one of the first three colored women to be sworn into the Waves, enlisting in New York City on November 13, 1944. She received officers' training at at Northampton, Mass., and was commissioned on December 21 of that year. A graduate of Hunter College, NYC, she has been with the Riverdale Children's Association and was a social worker at the time of her enlistment.

Assigned to the classification department here, Ensign Wills is under the supervision of Lt. Helen Strauss, (USNR), white. She gives new recruits aptitude tests.

"My job is to supervise the testing program," she explained. "and arrange interviews for them with special interviewers."

Ensign Wills lectures on the types of jobs in the Navy.

Segregation Not Practice In Navy Unit

All Goes Well For First Negro WAVE Graduates

NEW YORK — (A N P) — All went well for the first Negro Wave graduates who finished their training last week at Hunter college. The girls encountered no jimcrowism, their presence was not protested against and everyone who entered the Bronze training school on December 28 finished up well satisfied with everything.

The girls are now scattered throughout the nation for further training and assignment. Ten have gone to San Diego, four to Bethesda, Md., to study for the Navy hospital corps; five went to the Navy supply depot at Machinesburg, Pa.; three to mail school here in New York and five to the yeoman school at Cedar Fallas, Iowa. Two entered the third naval district and one each was sent to Boston and to the International Business Machine school here. The girls now will specialize in some particular field.

The Negro Waves graduated along with the last of the large classes, this one numbering 1,680. According to a recent decree, only 250 recruits will enter the USS Hunter every two weeks.

The public is all eyes, wondering if this unbiased policy toward Negro Waves will continue. Lt. Harriet Pickens, one of the first colored girls to enter this branch of the service, since her graduation has served as regimental adjutant at reviews of the more than 5,000 Waves on the campus and Ens. Francis Elizabeth Wills has been directing aptitude tests.

Both young officers are being assigned to the training department in the school's reorganization program. Lt. Pickens also has lectured since her entrance into the servcie. Her most recent speech was on fleet organization and task forces.

The 31 girls who just graduated were not segregated in the dormitories, mess halls, classrooms or drill grounds.

Lt. Harriet Pickens Says Life in WAVES

Kansas City Call Mo. 4-20-45

NEW YORK.—(ANP) — Life aboard the U.S.S. Hunter, as seen by the Wave Lt. Harriet L. Pickens, is not very different from her life in the Y.M.C.A. There is the same absence of race prejudice, the same stress on appreciating a viewpoint different from your own job, according to the lieutenant, bears a distinct resemblance to some Y.W.C.A. programs, in which she used to take part, notably that of the public affairs committee.

Lt. Pickens is an assistant in advanced training for Wave recruits, and her particular responsibility is indoctrination. It is her job to see that the recruits assimilate thoroughly the history, organization, recent exploits, ratings and personnel of the navy. They must learn to know the difference between a cruiser and a battleship and between military and naval insignia. Studying what the navy knows as the "documents in her group discussions with her fellow members of the Y.W.C.A. National Business and Professional council.

4-20-45

"The Y.W.C.A.," said the Wave officer, "got me interested in public questions, and it also got me the habit of stating my opinions simply and quietly on controversial issues. That has been of enormous help in my work."

There is one great point of difference between the Waves and the Y.W.C.A. according to Lt. Pickens. Whereas in the former, the discipline is of necessity imposed from outside, in the Y.W.C.A. it is self-imposed. So far as conduct is concerned, however, the net result is the same, in the lieutenant's opinion.

"Habit is great teacher, too," she said. "Military courtesy and consideration are the order of the day and become a habit with the Waves." 4-20-45

Lt. Pickens, who was born in Talladega, Ala., has spent most of her life in New York, which has been her home since 1920. She joined the Y.W.C.A. in 1923 and, thanks to the experience she got there in camping, swimming and other exercise, she found her strenuous officer's training easy.

"It seems to me," Lt. Pickens said, "that the Waves are setting new standards for women in physical health. They didn't happen to be new to me because of my camping and gym work, but I shouldn't be surprised to see a great increase in the Y.W. physical education classes, when the war is over and the former servicewoman return to their old sedentary occupations."

First Negro Women Finish Wave School

1-6-45

NEW YORK—(ANP)—Despite the fact that two Negro girls, Harriet Ida Pickens and Frances Eliza Wills, suffered the handicap of entering the Waves school when more than one-third of the eight weeks' course was over, both were graduated Dec. 21. Miss Pickens, now lieutenant (j-g) in the navy, went over the top by finishing as one of five honor students and ranking third in this small group. More than 200 were commissioned WAVE officers at the exercises.

Taking the course at Naval Reserve Midshipmen's school (WR), Northampton, Mass., on the campus of Smith college, Lt. Pickens maintained the standom in basketball which she won during her four years at Smith college, as a regular college student.

Present at the exercises was Dean William J. Pickens, the officer's proud father who afterwards commented: 1-6-45

"Hitler and Hirohito ought to have seen it all; they would despair of ever licking our navy, with 'females of the species' of that caliber in it."

Lt. Pickens has been assigned to Hunter college, New York, where she will probably train enlisted recruits.

Negro Officers Serve As Judges In Army Court Martial In Britain

Chicago, Ill.

Chicago Defender 1-6-45

By EDWARD B. TOLES
(Defender War Correspondent)

AT AN ARMY COURT MARTIAL IN BRITAIN—Watching an Army General Court Martial like any civilian criminal trial is not exactly a pleasant scene.

But to anyone who remembers the long U. S. Supreme Court battle to outlaw systematic exclusion of Negro jurors in criminal trials, witnessing an Army Court Martial with Negro officers sitting on foreign soil as members of a court trying white and black offenders becomes bearable.

An interview with able, pleasant Colonel E. J. Kotrich, former Minnesota lawyer, member of Judge Advocate Section, European Theatre of Operations, U. S. Army, revealed new methods of issuing Army justice.

"Negro officers are serving as members of army courts-martial in France and England," said Colonel Kotrich. "Following the Articles of War, basic American military code, all officers in military service of the United States are competent to serve on courts-martial for trial of any person lawfully brought before such court for trial."

GI's Go "Over The Hill"

It was a cold Thanksgiving morning when I reached this clapboarded frame building in the center of this Army Post to watch the quality of mercy meted out to recalcitrant GIs. Ushered into the courtroom, ten members of the court, including one Negro captain, faced me seated around a rectangular "U" shaped desk. Three trials awaited their disposal.

All involved the violation of the 61st Article of War; each accused had been AWOL "over the hill" for various lengths of time. Two Negro lads had been away for periods totalling collectively one year; the white lad was a nine-day AWOL but there was the serious charge of having deserted his package shipment detachment after having been alerted for the continent and the charge of having assaulted a taxi driver with intent to do bodily harm.

A hush falls over the courtroom as the prosecutor, a young lieutenant, member of the Judge Advocate General's staff, stands up. The accused took his seat by his appointed counsel, an army captain. 1-6-45

Plead Guilty

Two white-helmeted MPs with drawn guns stand guard at the only exit; one GI reporter takes down the testimony. They are the only other occupants in the courtroom besides myself.

The President opens the court. The prosecutor reads the charge. The accused is asked whether he is satisfied with his present counsel and whether he is satisfied with the members of the court to try his case.

With no objections the prosecution and the court swear themselves to uphold the law. The accused stands and without the trace of any emotion pleads guilty to charges of being absent without leave.

The President advises him that he is still subject to a life sentence and asks him whether he still wishes to plead guilty. The accused nods his head in assent.

Remains Silent

The prosecutor offers into evidence the length of time and circumstances of the absence and rests his case. The accused is asked whether he wishes to make a statement; three options are available to him. He could take the stand and testify under oath, in which event he would be open to cross examination; he could give an unsworn statement without any cross examination; or he could remain silent. The accused elected to remain silent.

The court is closed to all but the members of the court, then opened again to hear other evidences of convictions. This is the first time that the court hears of any other crimes of the accused—after he has been found guilty—and then only for the purpose of determining sentence!

The accused stands before the court, his face a ghost-like mask, almost as though he knew in advance what the sentence would be. The President's words came quickly ending with "fifteen years at hard labor, dishonorable discharge and forfeiture of all pay."

All Cases Reviewed

The second case was the same as the first and in the last case, the white lad was found guilty of all charges and his sentence was twenty-five years.

Contrary to popular notions, this is not the end of these cases for these sentences and the entire proceedings will be reviewed by a board of review composed of three senior officers acting as an appellate court. This is an automatic appeal that the convicted soldier receives without his voluntary action which reviews the matter for irregularities which may result in an order for execution of sentence, setting aside of sentence, or rehearing.

In one case tried recently where the accused received life for an AWOL charge, the automatic appeal won a remission of sentence to ten years and a suspension of the dishonorable discharge.

By the latter method the army is trying to reclaim men, and the soldier is given another chance at a rehabilitation center. Here, the soldier's reorientation proceeds in a setting of understanding and helpfulness; if the soldier makes good both his sentence and the dishonorable discharge are remitted and after in some instances, six months, the soldier goes to a new outfit with a clean slate. Some 600 men have been restored.

Some Returned To States

However, men convicted of felonies such as murder and rape are sent to Federal penitentiaries in the states; some 315 have been returned. The army tries hard to keep its valuable men that have cost taxpayers so much in equipment and training, to say nothing of allotments. In the three cases heard, their allotments to their families continued without interruption while they were AWOL. However, on conviction, they are discontinued.

The trial over, I talked to Captain Wilbur W. Sewell, 2147 East 24th street, Kansas City, Mo., who was the only Negro member of the court. The captain is the ranking Negro officer of an Engineering regiment and has had much experience in trying all types of courts-martial, summary, special, and general.

Military justice, while it lacks much of the time-worn aspects of the justice of civilian courts, however, is fair, impartial, and speedy. With Negro members acting as members of the court and as defense counsels, Negro GIs who are unfortunate enough to have to face a court, are meted justice.

Going through the Judge Advocate General's section I saw no Negro members of this staff. However, there are four Negro members of the Judge Advocate General's staff stationed elsewhere in the states. They are: Captains James A. McClendon, Lycurgus J. Connor and First Lieut. Robert W. Ming, all of Chicago, Ill. Second Lieut. William McClain of Cincinnati, Ohio, is the fourth member.

In connection with Negro offenders, a prosecutor told me that "the proportion of cases involving Negro soldiers aren't any greater than any other soldiers and the same applies to the types of offenses."

ARRESTED FOR REFUSAL TO SIGN JIM CROW ORDER

Chicago Defender 4-21-45

Six Big Transport Planes Take Pilots To Ky. Field

SEYMOUR, Ind.—Because they refused to sign a jim-crow order, 101 more Negro airmen were arrested at Freeman Field here this week. 4-21-45

The mass arrest came just one week after 61 colored officers of the 477th Bombardment Group were imprisoned for attempting to enter a "white only" Officers' club. All but three of the 61 were later released.

On Thursday 101 Negro officers were arrested and transferred to Godman Field Ky., after their refusal to sign a discrimination order released by base officials on Tuesday.

In an unprecedented mass arrest by air, six C-47 cargo planes swooped down on the field and pilots, navigators and bombardiers were bundled into them and flown to Godman Field on Friday. On arrival there they were placed in two barracks under armed guards.

Refused To Sign Order

Base regulation 85-2, by order of Col. Robert Selway, and signed by Lt. Col. David H. Thomas, director for maintenance and supply, designated separate recreational buildings, mess buildings, club buildings and tennis courts to be used by Negro and white personnel. 4-21-45

Maintaining that this order was a direct violation of army regulation 210-10, paragraph 19, which specifically bars discrimination in officers' clubs, the men bluntly refused to sign the jim crow order.

Eight men of the 619th squadron of the 477th signed with reservations after being intimidated. A board was created, which included two Negro officers, and one by one, the men were called up and ordered to sign.

Basing his authority on the 19th Article of War, Col. Selway ordered the men who refused to sign arrested and confined to quarters at Godman Field.

The jim crow setup at Freeman Field was apparently planned before the arrived on March 5 of the 477th Bombardment Group, the Air Forces' lone Negro bomber squadron. Negro officers were assigned the small inadequate non-commissioned officers' club formerly used by white cadets. White officers were allowed to use the commodious Officers' club. Colored enlisted men have no recreation club at all.

"Segregation Reduces Accidents"

Queries concerning the jim crow setup were answered by Col. Robert Selway Jr., widely known for his Dixie-like rule at Selfridge Field, Mich., with the statement, "If we do not allow Negro and white officers to mix, the accident rate will go down two and two-tenths per cent."

The colored officers refused to even enter their assigned club, which they named "Uncle Tom's Cabin." In an effort to test the jim crow edict which barred air forces officers from an Officers' club, the colored airmen decided to enter the restricted recreation hall last week.

Successive groups of pilots, navigators and bombardiers attempted to enter the club. Each group was stopped at the door by Lt. J D. Rogers, assistant provost marshal. Maj. A. M. White, officer in charge of the club, proceeded to list the names of all Negro officers who tried to enter the club.

3 Officers Held

The following day 61 men were placed under arrest. All but three were later released. Held on charges of "jostling" the post provost marshal were Lt. Marsden A. Thompson, Los Angeles, a trainee adjutant, Lt. Shirley R. Clinton, Camden, N. J., a trainee intelligence officer and Lt. Roger C. Terry, Los Angeles, trainee co-pilot.

Capt. Robert W. McIntosh, public relations officer at the base stated that the recreation hall was not assigned to he men for reasons of "highest morale and efficiency."

In a wire to the White House this week, the N.A.A.C.P. urged prompt revocation of the order barring Negro officers from the "white only" Officers' club at the field.

Ask Removal of Col. Selway

"Order barring Negro officers from club said to have been issued by Col. Robert Selway Jr., who issued and enforced a similar order at Selfridge Field, Mich., in 1943, when some of the men now under arrest were completing their flight training preparatory to entering combat service in the Mediterranean," the telegram stated.

Howard Gould, secretary of he National Urban League aviation committee formed to assure jobs for Negroes in air transportation, declared, "There can be little doubt that the problems that develop under the command of Col Selway raise serious questions regarding the future of Negroes in the field of aviation."

Since there is reason to believe that Selway is responsible for many of the difficulties, Gould announced that he will get in immediate touch with Lester B. Granger of the National Urban League to ask that an investigation be made to determine whether the War Department might be asked to replace Col. Selway.

The 477th Bombardment Group, the only colored bomber squadron in the air forces, has established a creditable record of safety and performance.

Bomber Unit Officers Protest Biased Order

AFRO-AMERICAN - Md. 3-24-45

Unrest Continues as Group Gets Settled at New Base in Indiana

FREEMAN FIELD, Seymour, Ind. — In protest to the establishment of a separate club for them, the 350 officers of the 477th Bombardment Group, recently moved here from Godman Field, Ky., are boycotting all jim-crow facilities at the base.

The establishment of the club was announced to them during a meeting at which Lt. Col. Patterson read to them an army order signed by Gen. O. B. Butler, barring them from the white officers' club. 3-24-45

Liable to Court-Martial

Not only does the order confine them to the separate club, formerly used to house white non-commissioned officers, but it also makes them liable to arrest and court-martial proceedings if they enter the white clubhouse.

Meanwhile, although their commander has ordered that the building be kept warm and open all day, they refuse to enter the inferior clubhouse which they have termed "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Transferred here from Godman Field on March 5, the men express belief that the order was inspired by their commanding officer, Col. Robert Selway, Jr., a West Pointer, who reportedly has the support of ranking officers in Washington.

J.C. Permeates Town

Although considered an expert in training and handling colored airmen, Colonel Selway has been frequently and severely criticized for his enforcement of a segregation policy first at Selfridge Field, Mich., and then at Godman.

The officers say further that he has issued orders to local merchants and service establishments to bar all colored soldiers and that the post commander, Maj. Wilmer E. McDowell, has concurred heartily with the orders.

As a result, they add, one laundry concern which washes the clothing of Nazi prisoners of war has refused to do any work for either the officers or enlisted men.

Nothing for Enlisted Men

The plight of the latter, it is said, is even worse, for they are denied any recreational facilities although a large building suitable for social activities is not being used. 3-24-45

Members of the first and only colored bombardment group, men of the 477th have an almost perfect safety record and declare that records prove their proficiency standard the highest attained by any group in training during the history of the armed forces.

However, they maintain, the enforcement of a segregation policy is tantamount to sabotage inasmuch as lowered morale can impede their progress and affect their work and records.

Army Clears Negro Officers

PM - New York, N.Y.

PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Apr. 26.—The War Dept. has dismissed charges against 101 Negro flying officers who had been arrested at Freeman Field, Ind., for refusing to sign a Jim Crow order issued by the commanding officer, the NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People) reported today. 4-26-45

At the same time, Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D., Cal.) wired Secretary of War Stimson urging that charges also be dropped against three additional Negro officers who were arrested earlier for "jostling" a superior officer who sought to deny them admission to the officers' club.

Mrs. Douglas said in her wire that a total of 162 Negro officers had been arrested at the field since Apr. 5, with "all arrests predicated upon an invalid and wrongful order of the field commander." She added that the arrested men had not been furnished charges or permitted to consult counsel.

Leslie Perry, Washington representative of the NAACP, said the release of the 101 officers "is clear proof of the fact that the War Dept. has been able to see through the flimsy attempt of Col. Robert R. Selway, Jr., commanding officer, to segregate Negro officers at the field." 4-26-45

He added that the War Dept. should now take "the next step by removing Col. Selway and his superior officers, Maj. Gen. Frank O. P. Hunter, from command."

What Negroes Are Doing

Birmingham, Ala. News

BY OSCAR W. ADAMS

Negro officers who have served long periods in the same grade will receive promotions before discharge from the Army under a new promotion policy announced last week by the War Department. Such officers will receive promotions under this new policy the first day of their terminal leave period.

The new promotion policy applies to second and first lieutenants who have served in one grade 18 months; captains and majors who have been in grade 24 months, and lieutenant colonels who have been in grade 30 months. In computing the necessary service, 50 per cent additional credit is given for time served overseas.

In order to qualify for the promotion, officers must have an efficiency index of 40 or higher.

His home at 64 N. 36th St., decorated with flags, bunting and welcome signs, Capt. William Glover Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. William Glover Sr., returned to the United States, Monday, after nearly four years overseas.

The captain, who had three narrow escapes from bombs while overseas, said upon his return from Australia that he had caught up on his sleep but that he has not regained his pre-war appetite.

Captain Glover, who enlisted in the Army in 1937, and was discharged after two years of service, re-enlisted in 1940.

Stopped at Pearl Harbor

He received his commission as a second lieutenant from the Infantry School at Fort Benning, Ga., and in 1941, was assigned to the 367th Infantry at Camp Claiborne, La.

7-14-45

Going overseas in Nov., 1941, Glover said that his ship en route to Australia left Pearl Harbor one week before the Japanese raid.

Captain Glover was the exchange officer in charge of an all-white civilian and military group whose duty it was to supply the front lines with provisions.

Served in New Guinea

Following his assignment in Melbourne, in New Guinea, he served with the 394th Port Battalion, an all-colored outfit, on New Guinea.

Commenting on the MacArthurs, the captain said, "Mrs. MacArthur is a very charming woman; she would come to the canteen often. I was at Melbourne when the general himself arrived from Corregidor."

To Enter Business

A former member of athletic teams at Overbrook High School and Pennsylvania State College, Captain Glover expects to enter business when the war ends. Following his 30-day furlough, he will report to Atlantic City, N.J.

His brother, Samuel, is a medical student at Howard University, under the Army Specialization Program, and his sister, Elizabeth, is the second colored girl to be admitted to the Philadelphia General Hospital under the Nurse Corps Program.

Negro Officers Get Recreation Lounge

~~Courier and Journal~~

Believed to be the first of its kind in the country, a community-sponsored lounge for Negro Army officers yesterday was being equipped to take care of the recreation needs of more than 600 officers within a range of 65 miles of Louisville.

The lounge, at 471 S. 11th, is being completed at a cost of approximately $3,500, including funds for operation. The center is on the property of the Negro Church of Our Saviour.

The lounge consists of four rooms, a main lounge equipped with easy chairs, radios and magazines; a combination library and writing room; a game room equipped with pool tables, table tennis sets, and a shower room.

The Rev. George A. Fisher, pastor of the Church of Our Saviour, said the lounge would be especially beneficial to Negro Army officers traveling to and from Godman Field at Fort Knox. Soft drinks and sandwiches will be served and traveling officers may make full use of equipment to shave, bathe and relax.

Centrally located near Beecher Terrace, the lounge will be open from noon to 1 a.m. The lounge will be cleared for dancing at night.

7-14-45

Plans for the center were made by the Beecher Terrace Officers' Lounge Committee, of which the Rev. Lawrence Davis is president. Approximately $2,500 was donated by the War Fund and $1,000 by the Episcopal Church and Diocese of Kentucky and the Presbyterian Church of the United States.

Several officers arriving in this country from fighting in Italy already have made use of the lounge, Fisher said, and more overseas officers are expected to be accommodated.

Berger Promoted to Captain

Capt. Mortie M. Berger, son of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Louis Berger of Savannah, was recently promoted from first lieutenant. The captain's parents live at 507 West Thirty-sixth street.

Captain Berger enlisted in the army May 12, 1942. After graduating from officer candidate school at Miami Beach, Fla., in October, 1943, Captain Berger was attached to the supply section at Harding Field, Baton Rouge, La. Since July, 1944, Captain Berger has been attached to the Seventy-third Bomb Wing Headquarters, B-29 division, at Saipan, Marianas islands.

Captain Berger has two brothers in the Pacific theater of war, Lt. (jg) Israel Reuben Berger, (M.C.), United States navy, who is on Okinawa, and Ensign Albert A. Berger, naval Hellcat night-fighter pilot.

8 Enlisted Men of Tank Unit Earn Commissions

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.

AUSTRIA—Eight enlisted men of the 761st Tank Battalion, first American armored unit to enter combat with colored soldiers manning its tanks, have earned battlefield commissions as second lieutenants during 1945.

The group included 2nd Lts. Warren G. H. Crecy of Corpus Christi, Tex., Silver Star winner, and Frank C. Cochrane of Beacon, N.Y., whose heroism brought him the Bronze Star Medal. They were commissioned on May 16 and Jan. 20 respectively.

Unit Commended

The 761st, which spearheaded the 465-mile drive of the 71st Division from the Rhine to the Em River in Austria, has been commended for its "superior" performance by Maj. Gen. Willard G. Wyman, division commander.

The commendation to the 761st commanding officer said in part:

"The combat missions which were assigned your battalion were performed magnificently which unquestionably made possible the rapid advance of the entire division, and you share generously in the honors which are ours through the phenomenal progress which was made across Germany and Austria.

"The splendid way in which you and the members of your command responded to the tasks assigned you is worthy of high praise.

"The excellent combat record of your unit as veterans has been further sustained while operating closely with this command. Please extend to all members of your battalion my congratulations and my sincere thanks for a job well done."

Others commissioned on the battlefield during 1945 follow:

Lt. William Kitt, Milstead, Ala., a former Tuskegee Institute student; commissioned January 20; Moses E. Dade, 1808 First St., N.W., Washington, D.C.; commissioned February 10; Horace A. Jones of Detroit; commissioned March 23.

Lts. Theodore A. Weston, 613 Harvard St., N.W., Washington, D.C.; former Cardozo High School student; commissioned March 23; Joseph A. Tates, 702 Brune St., Baltimore; commissioned April 17; and Leonard J. Holland, Detroit; commissioned May 28.

The Weak Link In the Chain

Black Dispatch

We are in full agreement with General Lewis H. Brereton, commanding general of the Third Air Force, Tampa, Florida, in his demand that civil custody of Lt. Edward H. Davis be vacated and the murder charges lodged against this officer be dismissed. A military court, legalized by congress, has passed judgment upon Lt. Edwards and found him without blame in the unfortunate accident that took the lives of two of Oklahoma City's citizens, and under the Constitution, the life of a citizen cannot be twice placed in jeopardy.

In his letter o the county attorney, General Brereton, among other things, said:

Oklahoma City, Okla.

"In time of war the interest of the U. S. army in military personnel is paramount to other considerations. Any attempt to withhold from the service of the U. S. such military personnel is necessarily considered as interference with the prosecution of the war in which the United States of America is engaged."

We are in hearty agreement with the above statement and feel that nothing of civil nature should interfere with the prosecution of the war. If the civil authorities can arrest one army lieutenant the same authority can jail a battalion, and one can easily see that Congress was wise and exercised good judgment in setting up a judicial process by which this type of civil interference can not pester and perhaps demoralize military operations.

But even though we feel this way about army license, we wonder whether or not army officials have not seriously impaired their right to guard military personnel across a long period, and especially in the South, where civil authorities have for many moons, and with the connivance of the military, thrown Negro soldiers into jail on the slightest provocation. We suspect when General Brereton files his writ in the federal court, seeking to free Lt. Edwards, he will be faced with innumerable citations which expose the army as having agreed to the prosecution of army personnel (Negro soldiers) in almost every section of the South. This will not relate solely to privates. The citations reach on up into the commissioned officer class, when the officer's uniform happens to cover a black hide.

We recall one particular case with which this writer was personally connected in 1918. A young Negro officer from back East was passing through Oklahoma on his way to Fort Sill. Between Oklahoma City and Chickasha this Negro officer was ordered out of his Pullman reservation, and upon refusal to do so was taken from the train at Chickasha and thrown in jail. We stuck by that lad and got him out of jail, later making a report to the War Department respecting the incident.

Civil custody was taken of that Negro officer, and no attempt was made in any form by higher authority, to do anything about the matter. The state even fined him by appropriating the amount of a fine from the funds taken from the young officer. He refused to plead guilty, so that night they took what they wanted from his wallet and told him that he had been fined in that amount.

Civil authorities have clubbed and beaten Negro soldiers for the past three years, and up to this week, higher military authority had suffered these things to happen with such regularity, we did not assume the army had original jurisdiction in such cases. The army cannot make bones of one and flesh of another. Surely there is no valid argument to the effect that Negro officers and Negro privates are not "military personnel."

7-28-45

We are hoping that Lt. Edwards will not twice be placed in jeopardy for the offense with which he is charged, but would you not characterize the presentation of cases to the court, where the army has stepped back and allowed civil courts to prosecute and persecute Negro officers and privates, as retributive justice? Perhaps the mills of God are today grinding out information that says, "Unless all soldiers are safe from civil jurisdiction no unit of the military personnel can dodge double jeopardy. In the case of Lt. Edwards we have convincing proof that "no chain is stronger than its weakest link."

Negro Officer Gets Job on Combat Ship

The first Negro naval officer to be assigned to a fighting ship is Ensign Samuel L. Gravely, 23, communications officer and first lieutenant of the sub-chaser PC-1264, the Navy announced today.

The ship is one of two naval vessels to be manned by a predominantly Negro crew. The other four officers aboard are white.

Gravely lives in Richmond, Va., where he attended Virginia Union University for three years before entering the Navy. He was commissioned in Dec., 1944.

Expect Gen. Davis To Retire Soon

Journal and Guide
Norfolk, Va.

WASHINGTON, D. C.— Brigadier General Benjamin O. Davis, who has been on duty overseas for more than a year, returned to this country Thursday of last week. He was met in New York City by his son, Colonel Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., commanding officer of Godman Field, Kentucky, and of the 477th Composite Group, who flew him to Washington.

Gen. Davis was wearing two French decorations—the Legion of Honor and the Croix de Guerre with palm. In addition he also wears the Distinguished Service Medal awarded to him for exceptionally meritorious service as an inspector of troop units in the field and as special War Department consultant on matters pertaining to colored troops.

MAY RETIRE SOON

It is expected that Gen. Davis will be retired soon. He was retired on July 31, 1941, and recalled to active duty the next day. He was promoted to brigadier general on Oct. 25, 1940. He was 61 years of age on July 1, last.

10-27-45

Gen. Davis has been overseas since July 11, 1944, except for a brief visit here last summer.

Clemency Asked For Negro Captain

The Daily Worker
New York, N. Y.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—A petition for clemency has been filed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People on behalf of Leroy A. Clay, formerly a captain in the 92nd infantry division. Clay was convicted of disobedience of orders while overseas and was sentenced to dishonorable discharge and 50 years' confinement at hard labor. Later the sentence was reduced.

11-7-45

The NAACP pointed out that the record of the trial discloses a deliberate intent on the part of authorities of the 92nd Division to discredit Clay and ruin his military career by assigning him to duty for which he had no training or background; further, since this assignment was intended as a form of punishment, it was illegal and therefore could not be the basis of a trial by court-martial.

The NAACP attorneys are Thurgood Marshall and his assistant, Robert L. Carter. Counsel have requested permission to appear personally before the Clemency Board in Clay's behalf.

Captain Harrison First Of Race To Command Unit

WITH THE 761st TANK BATTALION, TEISENDORF, Germany—Capt. Ivan H. M. Harrison, 26, 3399 Scovel Place, Detroit, Michigan, on November 3, became the first Negro commander of the 761st Tank Battalion, when he succeeded Lieutenant Colonel Paul L. Btes white, of Booton, New Jersey who has been ordered Stateside.

The youthful commander of the veteran Negro tankers was born in Detroit on April 19, 1920. He is married to the former Miss Juanita Edwards of Detroit, and is the father of a son, Ivan, Jr., aged 18 months. Prior to coming into the Army, he served as a postal employee at the Cleveland Post Office.

Captain Harrison graduated from the Armored Force Officer Candidate School at Fort Knox, Kentucky on July 4, 1942, joining the 761st Tank Battalion, (then a light tank battalion), at Camp Claiborne, Louisiana as a tank platoon leader, on July 16, 1942.

On October 30, 1943, he became the second Negro to ever become a company commander in the battalion, when he assumed command of Headquarters Company. It was in this capacity that he came overseas with the 761st, and entered combat. A month before the end of hostiltiies in Europe, he took command of the Service Company, holding this post from that time until September 4, 1945 when he became the Executive Officer.

Then, on November 3, orders came for the transfer of the former commander, Lieutenant Colonel Bates, and Captain Harrison, whose promotion had already been recommended to the Third Army Headquarters, rose to the position of commanding officer of the most storied Negro combat unit on the Western Front, the first of is kind to ever enter combat in the American Army.

Survivor of 'Death March' Talks for AFRO

Officer Who Lost 112 Pounds in Jap Prison Camp Recuperating on Coast

WHAT VETERANS EXPECT—Capt. Chester Sanders says returning soldiers are expecting a great deal out of life—marriage, a home, and security. Urges church and civilians to work intelligently with veterans.

A native of Indianapolis, Ind., and a veteran of many wars, Captain Sanders, 67, spent one year in solitary confinement in a prison camp where, he says, food was nil and the men ate snakes, rats and grass. He was one of 200 men who escaped when a ship carrying 15,000 prisoners to Japan was bombed by Allied planes. Of his suffering he says, "Perhaps in the horrors of prison and terrors of battle I have found God. I am not alone."

By LESLIE COLLINS

LOS ANGELES, Calif.—Years before Pearl Harbor, there was one brown American soldier who had declared his allegiance to the flag and who fervently sought to represent American armed forces abroad. That man was Chester Sanders, soldier and gentleman by inclination. Today Chester Sanders—Captain Chester Sanders, R-6021942 T41R—is one of America's true heroes, an unsung hero, whose only desire is that his Army record and those of other courageous Americans will serve to foster racial solidarity and to inspire all Americans toward a co-operative brotherhood.

At a convalescent hospital here known as Birmingham, Captain Sanders, resting and basking in the sun, is modest and retiring, despite the many citations and ribbons he has won: three Presidential citations, eleven stars (for participation in eleven major battles), and one palm.

With hesitancy he admits having received France's coveted medal, the Croix de Guerre, and that he has been decorated by America, France and Italy. He is entitled to wear 21 ribbons!

The life of Captain Sanders is an odessey. It is the story of a boyhood spent in Indianapolis, Ind., where he was born; of study for a medical career which was interrupted in May, 1898, when he enlisted with the First Indianapolis Volunteers for service with the U.S. Army during the Philippine Insurrection.

He served under Arthur MacArthur, father of Gen. Douglas McArthur, of the present conflict.

Officer in World War I

When the smoke cleared above the battlefield of this insurrection, Chester Sanders had become a seasoned soldier and had decided to make a career of Army life.

He fought in Alaska (1900); the Philippines (1906, with Pershing and Wood); and in Mexico (1916, against the villain, Pancho Villa).

In 1917 he was one of a group of men sent to Officers' Training School at Des Moines, Iowa, who later became part of the famed 92nd Division.

With the entry of the United States into World War I, he went to France with the 370th Infantry. After the Armistice he served for some ten months in the Quartermaster Corps in a camp for German prisoners of war at Brest.

Assigned to Manila

The year 1919 marked his assignment to Manila and to various other parts of the Orient where he was when a declaration of war on the Japanese was ordered by Congress in 1941.

When Pearl Harbor was being bombed, he could hear the din of the shelling over his amateur radio set, radio being his major hobby in recent years.

Captured in Bataan

The fighting in the Manila area prior to the fall of Bataan brought Chester Sanders, who in 1932 had been commissioned captain in the Quartermaster Corps, back to Bataan, where he had lived for five years before hostilities began.

There he was in charge of all food for the Americai soldiers in the Philippine Islands.

When the 17,000 American warriors surrendered to the Japanese on April 9, 1942, the enemy took control and formed the notorious "Death March" to prison camps.

Among the prisoners was Chester Sanders who plodded the continuous, 48-mile journey with little food, no shade, no rest, no ministers to give comfort to those who were shot because they fell prostrate from the heat.

6 Colored Men in Group

Captain Sanders suffered the heat, the hunger, the hurt of surrender, and the sight of cruelty and savage dishonor. But his courage and his physical health sustained him.

When the Japanese, who were inclined to be less cruel to the six colored men in the prison camp, recognized the former position of Captain Sanders, they sought to force information from him by placing him in solitary confinement without light, without a bed.

Loses 112 Pounds

Here he remained, stoicly endured the bestial treatment of the Japanese guards for one year, never divulging any military secrets he knew.

In his cell he lost 112 pounds. When he was cast into prison, he weighed 235 pounds; when he left his cell, he weighed 123 pounds.

In the camp the prisoners were separated into groups of one hundred men with one person appointed as leader. Chester Sanders was named leader of his group.

For the slightest infraction of a rule a prisoner was beaten by his guard. The most practiced method of punishment was the breaking of the collar-bone and the nose.

Ate Snakes, Rats

Sanders was never beaten, but he was kicked once — for what reason, he never knew.

Food was almost nil. He said that the men ate snakes, rats and grass. There was no medicine. They simply died or survived dysentery, malaria and diphtheria.

After a time — a long trying time in the prison camp — Sanders with 15,000 other prisoners were put aboard a ship bound for Japan. The ship was bombed by Allied planes and only 200 men escaped.

With these, he too escaped and turned guerrilla. He was recaptured and was finally liberated by MacArthur's valiant fighters.

Unable to Walk

And now after the years of battles, of bombardment, of excruciating hurt, of slavery, and finally of liberation, Chester Sanders, now 67 years old, has returned to the United States, the only colored man out of six in the prison camp to do so.

He returned a tired, ill man, unable to walk; he has come home for rest, for sun, water, food, and companionship, for company, for talk. The hundreds of hours spent in a Japanese cell are not forgotten; they tell him he must not be alone.

Says Japs Have Failed

Captain Sanders, soldier, has turned philosopher. Of the war he says:

"The Japanese failed in their plan to bring the peoples of the East into the sphere of 'prosperity' because of their means toward an end: brutality, force, subjugation. They used no reasoning, no sane urging.

"This is a racial war. This is only the beginning of things to come!"

What Veterans Expect

He pleads for a complete understanding between the returning veteran and the civilian. "The 950,000 colored soldiers who return," he says in his soft, quiet voice, "are expecting a great deal out of life — primarily marriage, a home, and security. Here is au opportunity for the church in guidance and for the civilian to work intelligently with the veteran."

This is Chester Sanders, a man home from the wars. He likens himself to the Arab who went into the desert to learn to appreciate civilization and to know himself.

He has by fire, by water, and by pain itself seen the glories, the ills of civilization, and through them he has learned to find an interpretation of himself. Through them he has found a kind of peace.

"Perhaps," he says, "in the horrors of prison and the terrors of battle I have found God. I am not alone."

Major Distinguishes Himself In Air Force

By RUDOLPH DUNBAR

BERLIN. — (ANP) — There still remains plenty to be told about the invasion on D-Day leading up to the defeat of the Germans. Besides the combat units, the QM truck battalions have done a job that no one can adequately describe. What I have seen on these QM units in the ETO makes me feel that their remarkable achievements have not gleamed brilliantly enough.

Take for example, the 1516 QM battalion, mobile aviation. Of this battalion, it is said that it was the background of the 9th Air Force Service command. The morale of this battalion is the highest I have seen in any Negro unit in the ETO.

This is due to the influence the commander, Lt. Col. Roy L. Roberts has over his men. But the successful operation of the battalion is due to the Negro executive officer, Maj. B. Taylor from Hartford, Conn. He is reported to be the best operational officer in the 9th Air Force Service command.

Major Taylor is perpetually stimplated by an influx of new ideas. The commanding officer never mentions himself alone in speaking about the battalion but instead it is always "Taylor and I." They think alike and are inseparable.

"We worked together side by side since January, 1943," said the commander. "When I came into the battalion, I discovered that Maj. Taylor had the confidence and respect of all the men. Thereupon I gave him full authority to run the battalion. Moreover, I believe that an executive officer should run an outfit."

When the major was a first lieutenant, he was doing the work of an executive and operational officer when the job called for the rank of major. From Sept. 1, 1943, to March, 1945, his work was second to none. During that period he was directing the operation of 200 trucks hauling bombs and air force supplies. In June, 1943, the four companies under his control carried over 27,000 tons of valuable material for the preliminary build-up of the invasion. On Jan. 1, 1944, he was made a captain, and Dec. 15 of the same year promoted to major, due to his outstanding knowledge of affairs. He was subsequently recommended for the Bronze Star medal.

When the commanding officer was about to return to America on leave, higher headquarters asked whom would he like to command the battalion in his absence. Categorically the answer was Maj. Taylor. Col. Roberts pointed out that with Maj. Taylor in command, the battalion would remain at the same high level as he had left it. But with a new commander in the saddle, it would be exceedingly unlikely that the battlaion would maintain its prestige.

On the eve of the commander's departure for America he was obviously saddened and depressed. This aroused the attention of his officers at dinner one evening. They questioned the reason. In reply he said he was afraid lest some high authority might unduly upset Maj. Taylor's equilibrium during his absence. "If he can be left alone to work as he knows how, I am sure that the battalion would live up to the high reputation that it has established," said Col. Roberts.

British Promote Two Negroes To Majors

LONDON—(ANP)—Two Negroes have been elevated to the rank of major in the British army. Harold Moseley, eldest son of Dr. Harold Moseley, president of the League of Colored Peoples, who joined the forces in July, 1944, is serving with the Royal Army Medical corps. He was recently promoted to acting major. Dr. Moseley's second son, who is serving with the First Caribbean regiment in Egypt, has also been promoted to major.

MORATAI — First Negro appointed a divisional psychiatrist in the United States Army is Major Theodore D. Phifer, of Baltimore, who was recently promoted to his present rank after distinguished service with the 93rd Infantry division in the combat zone.

Major Phifer, former associate in medicine at Provident hospital, Baltimore, has been with the 93rd since 1943, when it was stationed on the desert at Camp Clipper near Needles. For the past 15 months, he has devoted his time to the prevention of nervous breakdown among troops serving in the tropics.

695,264 Negroes In Army On V-J Day; 7,768 Officers

The Call Kansas City, Missouri

WASHINGTON, D. C.—On Aug. 31, 1945, two days before VJ-Day, (Sept. 2) the total Negro strength of the army stood at 695,264, the War Department announced today.

This figure comprised 8.67 per cent of the total army strength. Since VJ-Day the number of Negro troops receiving discharges has kept abreast of this figure.

An increase totaling 1,220 in commissioned personnel is shown for the May-September period. As of August 31, the total commissioned personnel in the army was 7,768. 11-9-45

The number of soldiers of color re-enlisting for service in the regular army amounts to better than 10 per cent of total accessions.

Three Elevated To Captain

93rd Division Men Serve In Infantry

11-30-45

WITH THE 93rd INFANTRY DIVISION ON MOROTAI. — The promotion of three Field Artillery officers, serving on Morotai in the Netherlands East Indies and Mindanao in the Philippines, to the rank of captain has been announced by Major General Harry H. Johnson, Commanding General of the 93rd Division.

On Motorai, the promotion of Terrance A. De Beal to the rank of captain followed a long period of superior service, arduous study and performance. He has been overseas 19 months, wears the Asiatic-Pacific Theater Ribbon, two Battle Stars and the Bronze Star Medal.

The 93rd profited by the military adroitness of Captain De Beal which was demonstrated during his service in combat on Bougainville when he served as assistant communication officer of the 593rd Field Artillery Battalion. He rendered valuable service in action against the enemy. His adjustment of Artillery fire on the enemy contributed much to the success of that campaign.

Also promoted to captain was Ellis J. Diggs of the 596th Field Artillery Battalion. Captain Diggs has been with the 93rd Division for the past three years and is now one of five Negro Captains in the Division Artillery.

Not long ago Captain Diggs was awarded the Bronze Star Medal for meteoric service against the enemy. He is the son of Mrs. Carrie Diggs, 2105 Bland Place, Indianapolis, Indiana, and is now a Battery Commander in his battalion. 11-30-45

Captain Diggs has seen service on Bougainville, Finchaven, the Netherlands, Morotai, and the Philippines. He wears two Battle Stars on an Asiatic-Pacific Theater Ribbon and a Bronze Star.

Robert S. Copeland, Tulsa, was the third officer to be promoted to the rank of captain.

Captain Copeland enlisted as a private on January 3, 1941. He completed his basic training at Fort Custer, Michigan with the famed 184th Field Artillery Regiment. He was quickly promoted to sergeant and was sent to Officer Candidate school at Fort Sill, where he was commissioned a second lieutenant in June, 1942. Before his induction into the Army of the United States, he served three months with the Illinois National Guard. 11-30-45

Overseas for 19 months, Captain Copeland wears the American Defense Ribbon, the Asiatic-Pacific Theater Ribbon, two Battle Stars and the Bronze Star Medal. He served as executive officer of a firing battery of 105-mm howitzers, Battery "A," 593rd Field Artillery Battalion an element of the 25th Regiment combat team during the Bougainville campaign in March, 1944.

Returns to France After Capital Visit

TESTIFIED IN D.C.

11-17-45

Will Get Command of Troops in Europe

WASHINGTON

Brig. Gen. Benjamin O. Davis Sr., will be made a major general within the next few weeks or months and given a command somewhere in France before being retired, it was revealed here Tuesday.

General Davis returned to France last week after having been flown to Washington to testify before a committee appointed by War Secretary Robert Patterson, to determine the Army's future racial policy.

Wears Two Decorations

General Davis, who wears two French decorations — the Legion of Honor and the Croix de Guerre with palm, in addition to the Distinguished Service Medal — was 61 years old last July 1.

Except for a brief visit here last summer, he has been overseas since July 11, 1944. He was promoted to his present rank on Oct. 25, 1940.

Recommendation to the high rank is expected to be included in the next War Department recommendations to the Senate which must approve such promotions. Although no official statement has been made regarding the proposed promotion, it is understood from hitherto reliable sources that the elevation of Gen. Davis is forthcoming. 11-17-45

Simultaneously with the promotion to command post, Gen. Davis will be given the post of commanding officer of the Cherbourg port, in France. Gen. Davis rose from the ranks of a private to his present position.

He has served with the Inspector General's Office throughout the war period. 11-17-45

Rose from the Ranks

The father of Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., commanding officer at Godman Field, Ky., the general served in the AUS as a first lieutenant during the Spanish-American War from 1898 to 1899.

Following his release from active duty on March 6, 1899, he reenlisted in the Regular Army as a private, attaining rank on merit until he became brigadier general.

General Davis Retires

The Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

Our first and only one-star regular Army officer, General B. O. Davis Sr., will be relieved from active duty on Dec. 31.

General Davis, at 68, can look back on a long Army career which he began as a private in the old 9th Cavalry back in 1898. He received his first commission in 1901 as a second lieutenant of cavalry, advancing steadily to his present rank after 40 years.

His assignment as an assistant to the Inspector General during World War II took him all over the U.S. and to Europe, where in 1944 he was made special assistant to the commanding general, European Theatre of Operations, with headquarters in Paris. 12-22-45 561

Frequently misunderstood in the past because of his strict adherence to Army tradition regarding interviews, General Davis has, through performance of duty, lived to shame his detractors.

He passes the Davis Army tradition to his son, Col. B. O. Davis Jr., West Point graduate and presently commander of Godman Field, Ky. Recently he was reported to be in line for promotion to major general, but according to unofficial sources he did not fancy the assignment which went with his advance in rank.

General Davis came up the hard way. He knows the Army inside out, and his counsel has been sought regarding the Army's future racial policy. His retirement is well-earned and we're glad that he will still be around as a source of inspiration and advice.

General Davis To Be Relieved Of Duty Dec. 31

Atlanta Daily World Atlanta, Ga. 12-12-45

WASHINGTON— (NNPA)— Brig. Gen. Benjamin O. Davis will be relieved from active duty December 31 under plans of the War Department to reduce its general officer strength which reached peak on July last.

The War Department plans calls for all general officers who have returned to active duty from retirement to be relieved as soon as possible. Those who have been retired for age will be relieved from active duty for December 31.

General Davis was retired in 1940 on account of age but was immediately called back to active duty because of the national emergency. Since his return to active duty he has commanded the Second Calvary Division and served in the Inspector Generals Department and in the European Theater of Operations. 12-12-45

Chaplain Douglass Hall Meets Augustans Overseas

ED. NOTE: These articles are written by Douglass Hall, formerly connected with The Herald's Negro news department, now a chaplain, with the rank of captain, in the U. S. Army. They come direct from the European theatre of war.

I know at least two persons who are doing in the army what they would like to be doing now in civilian life, if the draft board had not interfered with the normal flow of things. It so happens that both soldiers are from Augusta. One is a native Augustan and the other an adopted child. Both got the "kickoff" into their profession at Haines Institute and often that name is upon their lips. They are Sgt. Jimmy Strong and Cpl. Roscoe Murray, both working with Special Services, but in different departments.

There is not a person in Augusta who attended basketball games at Haines during the past recent years who hasn't heard the name of Jimmy Strong. There were some who figured he was taking a lifetime course at the school—that might have been because opponents of the school desired him to hurry away so that they could have the satisfaction of licking the Haines quintet. Strong lived sports in general and basketball in particular when he was there, and is doing the same here as a key figure in the recreation and athletic department of the 92nd Infantry Division.

"I owe it all to Coach Tutt of Haines," Strong told me a few days ago, as his team was running a close second for the championship of Italy. "I believe he is the best coach in the world." He cut his remarks short because he had to go in and replace an injured player.

The basektball teams which are coached by Sgt. Strong are top morale builders. They have class and color and came within one point of winning the championship of this area. Strong desires to return to college when he finishes his hitch in the armed forces. "The rest of my life will be as close sports as I can possibly get," he told me.

Possibly Cpl. Roscoe Murray did not come in for as much publicity back in civilian life as Sgt. Strong, but he has acquired all in the army that he missed back home. It so happens that Murray is a key man on the staff of "The Buffalo", combat newspaper printed by this division right under the nose of the enemy and often while shells whiz over the place where it is now quartered.

Back in Augusta, Roscoe dabbled in photography because that is about all his limited financial income would permit. But since being conmnected with the Buffalo staff, Roscoe has developed into a photographer who is able to go the rounds with some of the best in the business. I have watched his action on the field and in the darkroom and it shows what some persons will do when given the rope. His pictures have also appeared in other publications and he is in constant demand.

Since being in combat other duties have forced Murray to push photography once again back into the hobby classification. While at Fort Huachua, Ariz., he learned a great deal about the press on which the paper is printed. They needed a "pressman" and Murray put down his camera and started the press a-rolling. That's where he is now and the publication has not missed a single issue.

I have not seen Sgt. George Duncan, former classmate at Paine College, but he is still around. He was around my place the other day, but I was out. When he returned later, I was visiting hospitals. So we missed each other, but he is doing fine. That's the word he left me and I am passing it on to you.

I talked with Sgt. Eugene Gardner. He asked me to send regards to his family and friends. He is still a good soldier. He was dressed neatly even on the frontline. I don't see how he does it. His health is good.

Pfc. Harvey Jefferson sends greetings to his parents, William M. Jefferson and wife, 1568 Linden street. He stated that he was in his heyday around Augusta about the same time as Ike Washington, of the public school system there. (Or has he been drafted?) I told him that Ike was still in his heyday. Jefferson was drafted in New York. He formerly attended Walker Baptist Institute.

Pfc. Linard McDay, Griffin, Ga., says "hello" to his parents and friends.

Old Intolerance Bad For All America

By DR. DANIEL A. POLING.

While in Europe recently, I renewed and strengthened my friendship with the deputy theater chaplain, Lt. Col. Edwin R. Carter, jr.—"Nick" Carter to his friends. The chaplain is the peacetime rector of St. Luke's Episcopal church, Richmond, Va. When he entered the service his resignation was not accepted by the congregation but he was given a leave of absence for the duration.

In 1934 Negro clergymen were given votes in the diocese of Southern Virginia, with equal membership. Prior to that date there was a colored convocation that elected two representatives to the council. "Nick" Carter is the father of that act and the quality of his courage is indicated by the fact that he first introduced the matter in his first council meeting in 1930. The story associated with the campaign of this young clergyman is worthy of a longer telling.

Opportunities Must Be Equal.

The principles which undergird the attitude of Chaplain Carter toward his brothers of other races and colors are indicated by what he said to me a few weeks ago when we sat together in a Paris hotel. "I have never felt," he said, "that the Negro as a race gets a decent break in the United States and throughout my ministry I have sought to get for him equal privileges and equal opportunities. I believe that, if we are to have a country with even a semblance of democracy we must take care that each child born into that country, or coming into it receives equal opportunities and equal privileges.

"I was ordained in 1929 and my interests in this field began with my ordination. When I reached England with the troops, I found a perfect setting for both races to learn what the other was and through mutual effort to build two races into one army representing our great land. It was to be expected that there would be trouble and misunderstanding, but steadily we went ahead to solve problems as they arose. Some of us were determined that we would not cross an ocean to fight a so-called 'superior race' only to come back to America with the same old prejudices, the same old intolerance that has hurt and hindered us at home.

A Proving Ground.

"Negro chaplains, other Negro officers and Negro enlisted men have regarded Europe as their proving ground. They have worked together and with us in what is, I believe, a winning effort to make the Negro in uniform a worthy representative of America. They believe that over here they are building a better life for their children back at home."

And then this Virginian, this clergyman of the South, added, "We must do our part to see that they are not disappointed." Chaplain Nick Carter is doing his best to fill that assignment, and the particulars of what he has done would make another column.

Chaplain Says Cavalrymen Resented Unit's Conversion

Afro American
Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE

Declaring religion played a major role in the morale of troops, Chaplain (Capt.) Hyason V. C. Diggs, veteran of 16 months' service in Italy, this week, warned ministers that soldiers will be looking to the church for guidance upon their return to the States.

"Many soldiers attended religious services for the first time while overseas, but we will have to make our services more attractive if we expect to make them regular churchgoers," Chaplain Diggs emphasized.

7-14-45

CAPT. H. V. C. DIGGS

The chaplain, former assistant pastor at the Union Baptist Church, is in Baltimore on a 30-day leave. He will report to White Sulphur Springs, W.Va., soon for reassignment. He wears two battle stars on his theatre ribbons.

Was with Cavalry

Originally chaplain with the 10th Cavalry Regiment, Chaplain Diggs was assigned to the 1334th Engineers when the 2nd Cavalry Division was converted into labor units after its arrival in North Africa in March, 1944.

He served with the 1334th, now back in the States, throughout the Italian campaign, and later was assigned to the 98th Engineers.

Commenting on the break-up of the 2nd Cavalry Division, Chaplain Diggs declared the men literally shed tears when it was learned they would not see action. He explained that they did not want to die, but simply felt that they were being denied the right to die for their country.

Many of them proved their sincerity later, as 200 from his former regiment volunteered as replacements for the 92nd Infantry Division. 7-14-45

Thankful for V-E Day

Asked about V-E Day celebrations in Italy, Chaplain Diggs, who was in Leghorn at the time, asserted there were no hilarious celebrations among GI's. "They were more thankful than excited," he added.

It is the chaplain's belief that three-fourths of the men now overseas would like to return to Europe in peacetime mainly because of the hospitality accorded them and the democratic way in which they were received.

"My observation is that colored soldiers were well liked and well received in both high and low circles. The only seeds of prejudice were sown by white officers who sought to transplant their individual ideas in a foreign country," he recalled.

Want Mixed Army

He said the Italians were never able to understand the divided organization of the American Army, colored and white units, and added that many white soldiers had expressed a desire for a mixed army in conversation with him.

Chaplain Diggs visited the historic cities of Oran, Naples, Rome, Florence, Pisa, Viareggio and Leghorn, but the most significant incident to him was the baptism of 39 soldiers, one a 295-pound sergeant, in the biblically famous Tyrrhenian Sea.

Directed White Choir

Returning to the States May 30 by hospital ship, Chaplain Diggs, during the voyage, directed the ship's choir composed of three sergeants and six nurses, all white, a daily incident that served as a lesson in democracy to all aboard.

Recalling Baltimoreans he saw in Italy, Chaplain Diggs had especial praise for John Rich, Red Cross field director in Naples; Capt. Charles Brown, postal officer with the 92nd Division, and Lt. Ulysses Glover, also of the 92nd. 7-14-45

The chaplain is married to Mrs. Laura A. Diggs, teacher in Eastern Shore schools.

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — Chaplain (Captain) Gerald L. Hayden, former noted minister and civic leader of South Bend, Indiana, was recently assigned to Tuskegee Army Air Field, Alabama, replacing Chaplain Douglas L. T. Robinson now at Godman Field, Ky. With a distinguished overseas record to his credit, Chaplain Hayden is well known for his religious and civic work in Indiana where he was instrumental in integrating Negroes into defense industries in 1942. Prior to entering the service he was president of the South Bend NAACP,

ROME, Italy — In a dimly-lighted chapel, one of the 321 in the historic Saint Peter's Basilica, the Holy Father Pius XII, shook my hand and gave me a message for the soldiers in my outfit and for "Americans everywhere."

Stately dressed in a robe of royal white, the Pope put aside the usual formality and mingled freely with service men and women of all nations, faiths and races.

The route I took to get a few minutes with the Pope was not an easy one. I was told that a private audience with the Pope was rare during "these trying days of war."

In fact, my guide inquired concerning an interview and was told that "the Pope is dated up for weeks."

I was given the consolation that I could see him with a group of service men at 12:30. In the meantime I contented myself with a tour of the Vatican City.

Never Been Bombed

2-24-45

The religious State, smallest in the world, has never been bombed, but it feels daily the hell and hardship of the war that has passed by its doorsteps.

On every hand, persons are grateful that the city still stands with its many treasures of art — still stands as the "highest moral authority in the world, the only one who can fraternize all spirits disunited by earthly competitions," a souvenir booklet states.

Did I say that war had passed the doorsteps of the Vatican? That's not exactly true. Some elements have missed it. No artillery fire has touched it but I was told that there is less food there than elsewhere in italy.

Usually the twenty-odd candles around the grave of St. Peter, which is in the center of the church that bears his name, burn all the time, but not since the war! Only three burn.

Just out in front of the church stands a huge fountain which usually has a beautiful flow of water, but since the war, it has just a mere sprinkle. All about the great city, the guide constantly apologized for this and that "because of the war."

Foot Kissed Away

An outstanding and imposing figure in the church is the bronze statue of Saint Peter which was built in the Fifth Century. It is the custom of all who visit the church to kiss the feet of the statue.

This has been done for thousands of years and today several toes of the right foot have been kissed away.

I could go on indefinitely telling you about sights within and without of this great monument to catholicism, but let me explain how I managed to see the Pope and actually became a member of his visiting party. 2-24-45

I was quite disappointed when they advised me to check my camera at the door of Saint Peter's. I asked them why, but no one was able to answer — not even some of the high officials. They said only that it was a custom that no cameras be carried within the place.

Rush Act

Finally, I decided to shake off my guide and take matters into my own hand. I checked out my camera from the loudly dressed guard and started for the Pope's quarters. Opening my camera so that it could glitter, I put on the old "rush act" that I learned while a newspaper reporter.

Persons just stepped aside for me as if I had a photographer's permit for the Vatican, and for all any of them knew, I might have.

But no one stopped me, and I plunged right ahead until I came to a small room and the guard informed me that the Pope was inside giving his blessings to service men and women.

As a service man I qualified for entrance. Once inside, several hundred persons were between me and the Pope. I started the old rush act again when Lt. Lacey Irving, Washington, D.C., who was with me, advised me that he thought I had gone far enough and that he was not going to be a partner in any more advancing.

I collected my equipment from him and pushed right up to the rail that separated the Pope from the people.

Swiss Guard

Well, things had to stop somewhere. I weakened a bit when I caught the friendly eye of a member of the Swiss Guard. I asked him for permission to come back of the rail. "Ah," he stated, "that can only be done by special permission from the Pope."

"Well, ask him," I requested, pointing to the Pope several feet away.

He did not ask the Pope. He asked the last person in the long line that followed the Pope and the request went right up through channels, like a grapevine telegram.

The Pope gave a quick look at me, smilled and bowed permission. The guards moved back like machines and persons in the audience wondered what kind of "pull" I had. I was wondering the same thing.

Once back of the line I got out my equipment and started to work. I put one of my SIX flashbulbs into the gun and it went off without my touching the trigger. The same thing happened to three more. No picture and two bulbs to go. 2-24-45

Blessed Rings, Crosses

All during this time the Pope was walking up and down the line greeting the service men. They were having him bless necklaces, rings, crosses, etc.

"So you are an American?" the Pope inquired of a soldier from the 92nd Division. "That's great! Glad to meet you."

That went on for about ten minutes and I decided to give my camera the final trial. It worked perfectly on the last two bulbs.

My photographer's work finished, I started to leave when the Pope recognized my insignia.

"Oh, you're an American chaplain," he stated as he grasped my hand. "Well, give my blessing to all the members of your outfit and to all Americans. I see quite a few of them each day here."

I told him I would and started to leave but one of the members of the Pope's party asked me to remain. I set my camera down and stood with them for about fifteen minutes and looked at expressions on hundreds of perons as they met the Pope.

Most of them shook his hand and then followed the custom of kissing it. Others broke down in tears. All seemed to be deeply touched.

Personally, I like the Pope. He has a way of dropping the bar and putting you at ease. As one soldier stated as he left the chapel, "That man makes you feel like a brother."

Once outside of the chapel and back on the St. Peter's Court I was suddenly surrounded by several hundred persons. They all asserted that they were in "just the right spot and you just couldn't miss me." 2-24-45

I explained the difficulty I would have in filling the demand — maybe after the war.

That was all right with them. They gave me their army and home addresses and I gave them mine. Their addresses were: South Africa, America, Canada, England, Italy, France and several other countries.

University of Rome

I was warmly received at the University of Rome, today. I visited classes, had lunch with them, and even lectured to one class. The students are just like any college students in the States. The girls outnumber the boys, but there were plenty of boys.

The students were primarily interested in social conditions in America. They gave me a written invitation to return and lecture for a week. 2-24-45

Colored Chaplain Preaches To Men Of All Races Overseas

Nashville Globe Tenn.

1-26-45

Washington, D. C.—Chaplain Fred E. Stephens, with an Air Service Group, has described to the General Commission on Army and Navy Chaplains, Washington, D. C., certain unusual experiences during the Italian Campaign.

How gifted was the Glee Club of his Service Group was shown by its being selected by the Commanding Officer to make a concert tour of American posts in Sardinia. Chaplain Stephens accompanied the Glee Club and conducted religious services en route. The Chaplain has conducted worship under many situations but none more dramatic than those while Vesuvius was in eruption. 1-26-45

Chaplain Stephens was born in Potesville, Kentucky and spent his boyhood at Owensboro, Kentucky. He was graduated from high school at Evansville, Indiana, and received his A. B. degree from Indiana University and his theological training at Gammon Theological Seminary and at Turney Seminary at Atlanta, Georgia.

Chaplain Stephens taught at Morris Brown College and for the Federal Emergency Relief Administration in Denver, Colorado, and was a Y. M. C. A. secretary in St. Louis. He was ordained a minister of the African Methodist Episcopal Church and has held pastorates in Atlanta, Georgia; Tucon, Arizona, and was minister of St. Paul's A. M. E. Church, Columbia, Missouri, when appointed Chaplain. The Chaplain is married and has three children.

Chaplain Stephens has sent the following account of his services in Italy:

"I came overseas with an Air Service Group and have preached to men of various races and faiths since my arrival. I find that religion is being taken seriously by more men than ever before, and I have seen many soldiers weeping with humble faces seeking the strength of God in these trying times. A frequent sight is of Americans of all races and faiths sitting side by side at religious services in a practical demonstration of real democracy.

"In one Italian town where we were stationed, a large group of Italian civilians attended the Protestant services. Though they could not understand the language, yet being lovers of song and music, they seemed to enjoy the congregational singing. 1-26-45

"Another fine experience was the baptizing of soldiers in the Tyrrhenian Sea over which the Apostle Paul sailed on his way to Rome. Another large group of men was baptized in the Adriatic Sea. On our way to Naples in the spring of 1944, some men and I were caught in the midst of an eruption of Mt. Vesuvius. It seemed as if the heavens were raining down black hail which was scattered for miles.

"On another occasion, I held services on a hill at the outskirts of Naples over against Vesuvius. It was near dusk. The sun was setting like some gigantic ball of fire sending off a deep orange glow which spangled the whole of the horizon. To the east, Mt. Vesuvius was erupting great billows of fire and down the side of the volcano ran a red river of molten lava. It was a beautiful and breath-taking sight. To the strains of music coming from the portable organ, the men were singing 'On Christ the Solid Rock I stand.' 1-26-45

"In our unit was an Air Service Group Glee Club, one of the best glee clubs that came overseas. It was the first organization of its kind to give a concert in the American Theater in Naples. Such favorable opinion was evinced that we were sent to tour Sardinia by order of the Commanding General of our Service Command. During our Sardinian tour of ten concerts in fourteen days, we were given a most enthusiastic reception. At one of the concerts we had as special guests several American, French and Italian generals and Mlle. Curie, the daughter of the French radium family."

Drop Charges Against 101 Negro Air Officers

Daily Worker

4-27-45

The War Department has dismissed charges against 101 of the 104 Negro officers arrested at Freeman Field, Ind., for defying a Jimcrow edict, it was learned here yesterday.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, in announcing the dismissal, said that Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D-Cal) urged Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson to drop charges against the three remaining officers. The whole group of 104 Negro flying officers had been arrested for refusing to leave a "for whites only" clubhouse on Freeman Field when ordered by Col. Robert R. Selway Jr., the commanding officer.

The three remaining officers were charged also with having "jostled" a superior officer who had attempted to bar them from the clubhouse.

4-27-45

Rep. Douglas said in her wire to Secretary Stimson that the arrests were "predicated upon an invalid and wrongful order of the field commander." The American people now logically expect the War Department to remove this man, Col. Selway, who, evidently has never heard of the Army's official instructions on combatting fascism at home. Those instructions were issued March 24.

Col. Selway's order, according to the Negro officers, deprived them of "full rights as officers" and made it "unwarrantly difficult to maintain morale," a fact of which he could not have been ignorant. The War Department's instructions on combatting fascism make a point of declaring that, though fascists in America may "differ slightly from fascists in other countries," there were "a number of attitudes and practices that they have in common."

One of these, the instructions say, is the "pitting of religious, racial and economic groups against one another in order to break down national unity as a device of the 'divide and conquer' technique used by Hitler."

Officers Request Transfers Because Of Racial Strife

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.

5-5-45

By COLLINS GEORGE, Courier War Correspondent

WITH NINETY-SECOND DIVISION, Italy—(By Cable)—Following the request of First Lieut. Bert Cumby to be relieved of duty as an assistant in the Adjutant General's office of the Division and in line with the tenor of several other recent requests, First Lieut. Jacob Smith, assistant battalion surgeon with the 370th Infantry Regiment, has requested relief from his new assignment because of "racial policies of the Division."

Requests for relief from duty are by no means common to the Ninety-second Division, but in the Ninety-second such requests are based mainly on two premises: (1) That the officer finds policies of the Division are completely opposite to his opinions on race, and (2) that an assignment to a rifle company without adequate training for such a command would endanger the lives of enlisted men.

GIVES REASONS FOR REQUEST

Lieutenant Smith says in his request for relief from duty that "I have recently been assigned to the third battalion of the 370th Infantry as assistant battalion surgeon. Knowing well that I cannot satisfactorily perform my duties in this organization, I request that I be transferred to any other unit. The reason for my request follows:

"I am unable to adapt myself to the role required of me in this organization with its stereotyped policies of race. My feelings as to the race policies of this type are bitter and leave me psychologically unprepared to serve here. My failure to work successfully with other officers of the command can be too often detrimental to sick and wounded men dependent upon me. I much prefer that I make the sacrifice now.

5-5-45

TELLS OF DISCRIMINATION

"My primary aim since being a member of the U. S. Army has been to serve my country with the best I have. My records of efficiency, if examined, will prove this. I request that I may be allowed to continue to serve my country in sincerity and that I not be engulfed in this present racial and political strife which covers this organization and inhibits its functions. I am determined not to become one of the many Negro officers of this organization who find it impossible to perform their duties because of the unique environment of race and rank.

"In my former battalion I successfully served my country, my superior officers and my unit in the midst of less than ten per cent white officers. At present it is necessary that I be evacuated for surgical operation. I request immediate action in order that upon my return from the hospital I may be allowed to continue to pursue my duties as an officer. I do not wish to return to the 370th Infantry where results of my hopeless racial Army experience will be vulnerable to the enlisted men of my command. I conclude that I am unqualified to serve in the 370th Infantry Regiment."

C. O. ENDORSES REQUEST

Col. R. G. Sherman, commander of the regiment to which Lieutenant Smith was assigned, added a note of endorsement to the lieutenant's request. He wrote:

"In view of Lieutenant Smith's attitude as expressed in the basic communication, I consider him worthless as far as any further duty with this organization is concerned and therefore recommend approval for transfer."

An example of the other type of request is contained in the letter written to the Commanding General of the Ninety-second Division by 2nd Lieut. L. C. Lucas:

"In as much as I have been assigned to a rifle company and taking into consideration the responsibility that it implies, in that I must make decisions that will have direct bearing on the lives of men directly under my command and those in close proximity to me, I realize that I am not prepared for this position.

"I request that I be given an assignment that I am more familiar with, having not had necessary training to command a group of riflemen. I think it is a letdown for the men concerned and disappointment for me in that I believe the men in combat should have the very best in leadership for their own safety as well as leaders.

5-5-45

"I make this request not in effort to shirk my responsibility as an officer or soldier, for I have taken my chances along with the rest since entering combat and done my job to the extent that I suffered only five casualties in six months tenure as communications officer, but I was serving in the capacity in which my entire Army career has been spent.

"I request that my present assignment as a rifle platoon leader be changed and that I be given an assignment that I am more qualified for."

Difficulties of a fluid front at the present moment prevent checking official reactions.

Who's Guilty?

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.

It is reported that 103 Negro bomber pilots are in arrest of quarters at Godman Field for the "crime" of having violated orders or custom by invading the officers' club at Freeman Field, Indiana, some days ago instead of patronizing a jim-crow officers' club which had been set aside for them.

4-28-45

Are these 103 Negro officers guilty, or is their commander guilty for having violated an Army regulation or is their outlawing color discrimination issued over a year ago?

If the Negro officers are guilty of violating any Army order they should be punished, but if the Army order, commanders are guilty of violating an Army order, should they not be punished?

Army Regulations 210-10, paragraph 19, reads as follows:

USE OF PUBLIC BUILDING BY OFFICERS' CLUBS, MESSES OR SIMILAR SOCIAL ORGANIZATIONS

a. No officers' club, mess or similar social organization of officers will be permitted to occupy any part of any public building, other than the private quarters of an officer, unless such club, mess, or other organization extends to all officers on duty at the post, camp or station the right to full membership, either temporary or permanent in such club, mess or similar organization, including the right equally with any and all other members to participate in the management thereof, to hold office therein, and to vote upon any and all affairs thereof in which the officers concerned have an interest.

b. (1) Whenever permanent membership in any officers' club, mess or other similar organization, with the right to acquire an interest in military property thereof, is limited to the members of a particular military organization, such club, mess or similar organization, in order to be permitted to occupy any part of any public building other than the private quarters of an officer, must extend the right of temporary membership to all officers on duty at the post and on such reasonable terms as to initiation fees, dues and charges as should be satisfactory to the temporary members.

(2) In the event of a disagreement as to the reasonableness of any such terms, the post commander will require the parties in disagreement to submit written statements of their respective recommendations for the decision of the corps area commander, except that at exempted stations they will be forwarded to the Adjutant General for the decision of the Secretary of War.

If this order means anything at all, it means that the Negro officers on duty at Freeman Field had the right of patronizing the post officers' club.

It also means that the post commander, instead of arresting and confining the Negro officers who were doing what they had a perfect right to do, should have merely submitted the controversy to the Adjutant General and the Secretary of War. 4-28-45

It seems to us that the post commander at Freeman Field was far more guilty than the arrested Negro officers, and yet he is apparently at liberty, and there has been no suggestion that he should be arrested and confined to quarters.

There can, it seems to us, be only one interpretation of this Army order.

If the Negro officers were wrong, then the order is meaningless.

If the Negro officers were right, then their arrest and confinement was meaningless, and a great wrong is being committed.

It is difficult to see how the Administration can expect military and naval contractors to obey the dictates of the Fair Employment Practices Committee when it permits its own departments to wilfully disobey them.

It is even more difficult to see how the Administration can claim to be prosecuting a war to bring democracy to all of the world when it will not enforce its own orders supposedly establishing democracy in its own country.

We do not want to see any officer arrested, confined, tried or convicted simply for obeying the letter and spirit of Army orders, but if anybody is to be punished as a result of this incident, it certainly should NOT be the 103 Negro officers.

The Secretary of War should order their immediate release and return to duty.

Anything less will be a travesty on justice.

Negro Officers At Freeman 'Disciplined'

Courier-Journal Ky.

3 Accused of 'Jostling' Post Provost Marshal

4-12-45

Seymour, Ind., April 11 (AP)—Three Negro officers stationed at Freeman Field, Army air base, have been "subjected to routine disciplinary action" for "jostling" a post provost marshal on duty, Capt. Robert W. McIntosh, public relations officer at the base, announced tonight.

Captain McIntosh identified the men as Lt. Marsden A. Thompson, Los Angeles, a trainee adjutant; Lt. Shirley R. Clinton, Camden, N. J., a trainee intelligence officer, and Lt. Roger C. Terry, Los Angeles, trainee copilot.

In a statement, Captain McIntosh said charges had been preferred against the three men, but refused to specify the charges.

Discrimination Claimed.

The statement said Thompson, Clinton and Terry allegedly had jostled the provost marshal while entering a recreation hall "not assigned to them." He did not identify the marshal.

Captain McIntosh said that the recreation hall was not assigned to the men for reasons of "highest morale and efficiency." He said it was a tradition of long standing in the armed forces "all over the United States" to keep students and instructors apart while off duty.

The New York Post in a dispatch from Washington said the three officers were being helf for court-martial proceedings after they had protested against what they termed discrimination at the base.

Other Officers Also Protest.

4-12-45

The newspaper said the three officers, identified as leaders of a group of 61 Negroes at the field, attempted to enter the field's Officers' Slub last Thursday and were banned.

"They protested immediately, saying a War Department regulation had outlawed such segregation of colored troops," the Post continued. "A few hours later they were placed under quarters arrest.

"During the succeeding 24 hours, 58 other officers joined in the protest. They, too, were arrested but were freed later."

The Post said the three officers facing trial were involved in a similar incident at Selfridge Field, near Detroit, Mich., two years ago. At that time, the newspaper added, they protested against bans on Negro use of officers' clubs and were arrested but later released.

Third Godman Officer Fined

Atlanta Daily World

LOUISVILLE, Ky.— (SNS)— Lt. Roger Terry, of Los Angeles, last of three Negro officers to be tried on charges of disobedience in connection with their attempt to enter a white officers' club at Freeman Field, Ind., last April has been cleared by court-martial at Godman Field, Fort Knox, Ky.

The all -Negro court-martial at the same found Terry guilty of 'offering violence to a military police officer." He faces a $150 fine on this charge. 1-8-45

Two other lieutenants were acquitted earlier in the week in a similar trial and 98 others, detained after the incident, were released earlier after a protest to the War Department by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People which assisted in the defense at the Louisville trials.

Three Promoted To Captain In 93rd Division

Journal + Guide Norfolk, Va.

11-24-45

WITH THE 93RD INFANTRY DIVISION ON MOROTAI — The promotion of three Field Artillery officers, serving on Morotai in the Netherlands East Indies and Mindanao in the Philippines, to the rank of captain has been announced by Major Gen. Harry H. Johnson, commanding general of the 93rd Division.

On Motorai, the promotion of Terrance A. De Beal to the rank of captain followed a long period of superior service, arduous study and performance. He has been overseas 19 months, wears the Asiatic-Pacific Theater ribbon two Battle Stars and the Bronze Star Medal.

Capt. De Beal's wife lives at 410 White street, San Bernadino, Calif. He is the son of Mrs. Armede Robinson of 14 School street, Corona, Calif. He has one brother, Cpl. Glen De Beal who is in the 855th Aviation Engineer Battalion now in Manila.

Also promoted to captain was Ellis J. Diggs of the 596th Field Artillery Battalion. Capt. Diggs has been with the 93rd Division for the past three years and is now one of five Negro captains in the Division Artillery. He is the son of Mrs. Carrie Diggs, 2105 Bland place, Indianapolis, Ind., and is now a battery commander.

Capt. Diggs has seen service on Bougainville, Finchaven, the Netherlands, Morotai, and the Philippines. He wears two Battle Stars on an Asiatic-Pacific Theatre Ribbon and a Bronze Star.

Robert S. Copeland, Tulsa, Okla., was the third officer to be promoted to the rank of captain.

Overseas for 19 months Capt. Copeland wears the American Defense Ribbon, the Asiatic-Pacific Theater Ribbon, two Battle Stars and the Bronze Star Medal. He served as executive officer of a firing battery of 105-mm howitzers, Battery A, 593rd Field Artillery Battalion, an element of the 25th Regiment combat team during the Bougainville campaign in March, 1944.

Commissions Made Easy

Pittsburgh Courier p2.

There are only 6,000 Negro commissioned officers in the Army and Navy, although the number of colored Americans in uniform is close to 1,000,000. 3-3-45

If officers were commissioned on racial quotas, all other things being equal, there would only be a total of 60,000 officers in the Armed Forces, whereas the actual total is around 800,000.

It has been difficult even to get commissions and promotions for the most qualified Negro officers, and some commanders have openly stated that they would promote no Negro officers where they would outrank white officers, frequently transferring them from combat to labor outfits.

But it seems very easy for some white Americans to get a commission, and we read every day of businessmen, actors, football players, band leaders and such, becoming captains, majors, lieutenant-commanders, etc., although their military or naval knowledge is nil.

Consider the case of Major Walter H. Marlin, commander of the 718th Railway Battalion, which operated an extensive black market in France with Army supplies, and which was called "inefficient, unorganized and a disgrace to the military service," by the courts-martial prosecutor.

Explaining how he got his commission, Major Marlin testified, "I wanted to serve in the war, so I wrote the War Department, outlining my railroad experience and requesting a commission. Right away they wrote me, making me a major. I had four weeks of training at Camp Stoneman, California." 3-3-45

Major Marlin, fifty-four years old, boasts of an eighth grade "education." He was acquitted of the charges of neglect of duty.

One can imagine what consideration the War Department would have given the application of a colored American with similar qualifications, and yet there are hundreds of Marlins commanding Negro officers and men who are in every way their superiors.

We wish Secretary of War Stimson would concern himself less with trying to have permanent conscription adopted and more with establishing justice and fair play in his own department, where nothing is stopping him from doing so.

Lost Arm in Last War' Vet Now Guides GI Education

Now head of the Army re-orientation program here, he says, "Our job is to keep the soldier aware of the advantages of this Army . . . Our leaders know the advantages of a well-trained Army and high morale." 2-24-45

Placing the orientation progam at "the top of the list" of the Army's training programs, he declares, "Generally speaking, the colored troops are reacting favorably toward the entire program.

First Education for Many

"So many of them find they have an opportunity they didn't have in their local communities. Many are learning to read and write for the first time, others are obtaining high school educations and some college credits."

The program of the Information and Education, he explained, includes, in addition to general subjects, war films, information about the war, the enemy and the nation itself.

The major is married, his family now residing in Tuskegee. He has one son, Gerald S., 16, and a daughter, Wilhelmina, 13.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Robert B. Tresville Jr., 50 Lyta avenue, Buffalo, N. Y., to whom a daughter was born while the father was in combat. Capt. Tresville's father, W. O. Robert Tresville Sr., is a veteran Army band leader.

Can't "Sit Out War" Says Thos. W. Young

Norfolk, Va. Journal and Guide

Guide War Correspondent Who Reported Original 99th Fighter Squadron In Battle Baptism Addresses 29 New Pilots

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—"You cannot fight the battle at home by refusing to fight or neglecting the battle against the common enemy abroad," Thomas W. Young, business manager of the Journal and Guide, told the most recent aviation cadets to receive their wings and commissions at the Army Air Field here. 7-7-45

"We have much to aspire to here at home, many things which we must yet attain by perserverance and determination," Mr. Young added in his address to the graduating class on June 27.

CAN'T "SIT OUT" THE WAR

"That struggle will require all the will-power and strength of character that we can develop in the fulfillment of our obligations now as soldiers in our country's Army."

The speaker declared that Negroes could not afford to "sit out this war" and be the only racial group in the total population privileged to escape the rigors and sacrifices which are the price of victory.

On one of two assignments as a war corespondent, Mr. Young reported the combat performances of the original 99th Fighter Squadron, in 1943.

NO OTHER CHOICE

Nor could the race afford the status of second class soldiers in wartime by accepting relegation to service units alone, Mr. Young added, because then it would have to accept in peacetime the status of second class citizens.

"There is no other choice," he concluded, "but to seek and accept billets in every one of the available types of services, and to keep boring from within and from without until it shall be obvious to even the most skeptical of the other race that the Negro is carrying manfully and patriotically the full weight of his burden in this war."

THREE ANSWERS

Observing that a great many people, in uniform and out, have asked, "What have we got to fight for?" Mr. Young offered these answers: 7-7-45

"(1) So that no one will ever say, let alone believe, that we as a race either cannot or will not fight as readily, as tenaciously, and as courageously as any other group.

"(2) Because the enemies of white America are also the enemies of black America.

"(3) Because the shibboleths of the United Nations are and have been our own shibboleths since we first aspired to full citizenship in this nation. Our choice was between our fellow countrymen who loudly preached but shabbily practiced the things we most passionately believe in and earnestly strive for, on the one hand, and a gang of fascist despots who neither preached nor practiced those principles, on the other hand."

Introducing the speaker, Col Noel F. Parrisl., commanding officer of the base, said that Mr Young was the first person invited to address two graduating classes. He previously had spoken to the February, 1944, class. 7-7-45

Action Was Wise

To the Editor:

The action taken by the War Department in regards to the conflict between white and Negro officers at Godman Field is indeed one which will enlighten the hearts of many Negro officers stationed there.

The Negro trainees were unjustly discriminated against when they were barred from the officers club which is maintained by the Army and is available for ALL officers on the post.

This is but one incident of the many which occurs frequently and is bringing racial hatred to a dangerous head. When discrimination is practiced among our service men—the very men who are fighting to preserve our true American life, which guarantees freedom for all, regardless of race, creed or color—it is a serious problem. It is a problem which cannot be overlooked or avoided by any true American.

The War Department's action in placing Col. Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., in charge of the field was the best way to overcome the unfair segregation of Negroes. It is believed Colonel Davis will select an all Negro staff. The best way to avoid further conflict would be to select a staff composed of both white and Negro officers. However, this move remains to be seen.

The action shows that the War Department is well aware of the evils of discrimination in any way, shape or form—and is constantly fighting to overcome it.

We at home, black, white, Catholic, Jewish and Protestant, who all have men in the service can do our part too in overcoming the prejudices which endanger our future generations.

First U. S. Negro General Attends Installation of Unit At Son's Post

Courier Journal
Louisville, Ky

Ceremony Held At Godman Field

9-8-45

By SANDY WOOD.

Thundering Billy Mitchell bombers, flown by Negro pilots, swooped low in close formation over Godman Field.

A brigadier general and a colonel, both Negroes, stood at attention, watching. There was a trace of tears in the white-haired general's eyes.

It was a new day for Godman Field, a new day for the Davises, father and son, and a military precedent.

First Negro Gets Command.

This was the first all-Negro troop review, marking the official installation of the 477th Composite Air Group of the First Air Force at Fort Knox and the first time a Negro officer had been placed in charge of a U. S. military base.

Brig. Gen. Benjamin O. Davis, 62, the only one of his race ever to rise to such a distinction in U. S. military history, flew from Washington in a C-45 transport plane to attend the first review of Negro troops for his son, Col. Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., first Negro base commanding officer.

As the roaring bombers faded into the distance, General Davis looked admiringly at his son, smiled and said:

"Those boys can really fly."

General Davis was answering, indirectly, some of the criticism directed at the performance of Negro troops during this war.

Wac Company Arrives.

Established at Godman Field with the 477th Composite Group are the 387th Service Group and the newly arrived Company A of Negro Air Wacs. The units passed snappily on review for General Davis and his son.

Afterward General Davis said: "The performance I have witnessed today and the establishment of these units at Godman Field are clear evidence to us who have followed the Negro's performance in this war that the War Department feels the Negro soldier is making a distinct contribution to the war effort.

"Otherwise," he added, "the department would not go to the time, trouble and expense of using the taxpayers' money to establish these Negro troops here."

FATHER AND SON, Brig. Gen. Benjamin O. Davis and Col. Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., meet at Godman Field, Fort Knox, to install all-Negro air group.

Entered Service In 1898.

General Davis said the War Department already is on record through the Air Forces with the promise that when the units at Godman Field are trained they will be sent into combat "and I can promise you that they will make a definite contribution to final victory."

General Davis, born in Washington, first entered military service in July, 1898, during the Spanish-American War as a temporary first lieutenant of the Eighth Infantry. He re-enlisted as a private in the Regular Army after the war, was corporal and squadron sergeant-major, and in 1901 was commissioned a second lieutenant of cavalry.

The general taught military science and tactics at Wilberforce University in Ohio, and at Tuskegee Institute in Alabama. He was promoted to brigadier general in 1940 and was retired in July, 1941, but recalled to duty the day after his retirement.

Flies 200 Combat Missions.

Colonel Davis, a West Point graduate of 1936, was commander of the 332d Fighter Group in Italy. He won his pilots' wings at the Tuskegee Army Airfield in 1942, and was assigned to command the 99th Air Group in the North African, Sicilian and Italian campaigns.

The Negro flight officer took command of the 332d Fighter Group in October, 1943, was its chief overseas in bold strafing sorties against the enemy, and figured in low-level skip-bombing at Cassino and Anzio.

Colonel Davis' group completed 200 combat missions with the 15th Air Force by February, 1945, and served as escort to heavy bombers without the loss of a single bomber to enemy fighters. Members of the 332d received 63 Distinguished Flying Crosses and completed 8,000 sorties, destroying 200 enemy aircraft.

Colonel Davis, a tall, wiry soldier, wears the Legion of Merit, Silver Star, Distinguished Flying Cross and the Air Medal with four Oak Leaf clusters.

The new Godman Field commandant said the Negro trainees for his base "are the finest of our race that could be selected for this duty" and he expressed "my sincere belief that they will make us proud of their war performance."

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON—A product of the Chicago Defender rose to the highest news position occupied by a Negro in the War department today when Maj. "Danny" Day, Field Artillery and former assistant city editor, was advanced to the position of chief of the Negro interest section, Bureau of Public Relations. 10-20-45

Major Day succeeded Maj. Homer Roberts, now retired from that position. A resident of Chicago, Major Day was one of the first Negro officers assigned to the bureau, where he steadily advanced from the rank of first lieutenant to his present rank and position.

He entered the army as a sergeant in 1941 as a member of the old Eighth Illinois Regiment, redesignated as the 184th Field Artillery Regiment. Prior to that time, Major Day had for 14 years worked for the Chicago Defender, advancing from the post of the "world's youngest cartoonist" at the age of 12 to assistant city editorship of the paper.

The major will be assisted in his present position in the War Department by Capt. James L. Hicks, Quartermaster Corps, of Akron, Ohio, veteran of 34 months' service in the Pacific, returning to the States last December. Captain Hicks was formerly attached to a Cleveland weekly as columnist.

Major Day's father, Thomas Day, now resides at 3638 S. Wabash avenue. Major Day received his majority on Sept. 15, 1945. When he came to the War Department in 1941 he was made a captain.

3 FACED TRIAL

War Dept. Probe May Hit Biased Policy

Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON

Punitive action against 61 Air Force officers accused of violating jim-crow regulations at Freeman Field, Ind., has been suspended pending the outcome of an investigation now under way, the War Department announced Monday. 4-21-45

The announcement was construed as indicating that the officers might be sustained in their defiance of a post regulation which itself violates a War Department order against segregated recreational facilities.

It is understood that all the men involved are to remain at liberty during the investigation.

Attorney Retained

Meanwhile, Dr. William H. Hastie has been retained by the NAACP to represent the officers in any court-martial proceedings which may be held, with the assistance of Theodore M. Berry, president of the Cincinnati branch of the association.

Their assignment to the case followed a personal investigation by Leslie S. Perry of the NAACP's Washington Bureau.

Mr. Perry reported that, in addition to the thee officers under technical arrest at Freeman Field, 101 were facing charges at Godman Field, Ky., for refusing to sign an order barring them from certain facilities on the post.

Mr. Perry's report will form the basis for representations to be made by Walter White, executive secretary, to the War Department and President Truman later this week. 4-21-45

SEYMOUR, Ind.—(ANP)—Of 60 officers arrested recently because they defied a ban on colored personnel at an officers' club at Freeman Field, 3 were held for trial by court-martial and 57 were released last week.

All are members of the 477th Bombardment Group.

The three were charged with "jostling" a post provost marshal on duty. They were Lts. Marsden A. Thompson, Los Angeles, a trainee adjutant; Shirley R. Clinton, Camden, N.J., a trainee intelligence officer, and Roger C. Terry, Los Angeles, trainee copilot.

According to Capt. Robert W. McIntosh, public relations officer at the base, all three were involved in a similar incident at Selfridge Field, Mich., two years ago.

Army Rule Violated

According to reports, the officers, arriving at Freeman Field Thursday night, went over to the officers' club to spend the evening.

At the door of the recreation center, they were met by Major A. M. White and Lt. J. D. Rogers, assistant provost marshal, who told them that the club was operated for "white only" and ordered them to leave.

The officers, however, refused to leave on the grounds that the order, issued in the name of Col. Robert Selway, Jr., commander of the outfit, was in direct violation of Army regulation 210-10, paragraph 19. The men were then placed under arrest, pending formal charges.

4-21-45

An explanation by Capt. McIntosh stated that the recreation hall was not assigned to the men for reasons of "highest morale and efficiency." He said that in accordance with military practice, they sought to "keep students and instructors" apart while off duty.

The three officers, said to be leaders of the protesting group, stated that jim-crow practices alone banned their entrance into the officers' club.

Soldier Given 50 Years; May Get New Trial

Capt. Leroy Clay of 92nd Dishonorably Discharged; Said He Didn't Obey Order

By MAX JOHNSON

(War Correspondent Amsterdam News and Afro-American)

WITH THE 92ND DIVISION IN ITALY—Capt. Leroy A. Clay, staff officer of this famous all-Negro fighting outfit, who recently was sentenced to 50 years in prison and dishonorably discharged following a trial, will have his case reviewed next week, if the accused officer's plans work out all right before the Judge Advocate in the Mediterranean Theatre.

Capt. Clay, court-martialed for allegedly failing to carry out an order, was convicted and held for transfer to a military prison in the United States after Major General Edward Almond had reviewed the military court's findings.

The current appeal in Capt. Clay's behalf is regarded as a last resort.

Specifically, testimony showed that Capt. Clay, while serving as an assistant divisional operational officer last February, was ordered to take charge of several disorganized units of the command and reorganize them to carry on the attack. 4-28-45

The order required immediate contact with the commanding officer up in front. Instead of going there in person, it was said, Capt. Clay contacted the commanding officer by radio on the grounds that the Germans were shelling the area heavily.

Subsequently, Capt. Clay was ordered to take command of a rifle unit in the field. He failed to obey, the charges stated, and argued with a superior officer for more time to familiarize himself with the new command. The next day Capt. Clay was arrested.

In court, the defendant argued that the second order came as a punishment for failure to carry out the first order in the manner his white superiors figured it should have been. 4-28-45

While awaiting final decision on his appeal, Capt. Clay is confined to the Fifth Army stockade here. He was commissioned as Second Lieutenant in 1931 after completing ROTC at Howard University.

OFFICERS DEFY ARMY JIM CROW

St. Louis Argus — Ind.

4-20-45

CHICAGO, Ill., April 16. (Special)—Leslie S. Perry of NAACP Washington Bureau spent Friday and Saturday at Freeman Field, Indiana. He reports three men are under technical arrest at Freeman Field under formal charges, but that for the time being no court martials are scheduled against 101 additional men held at Godman Field, Kentucky, who refused to sign order barring them from certain facilities on the post.

Perry's detailed report will form basis for representatiions by Walter White to the War Department and President Truman later this week. Judge William H. Hastie has been retained by NAACP to defend men in any court martial which may be held and Theodore M. Berry, president of the Cincinnati Branch NAACP, will be the associate counsel.

A representative of the press received the following report from the field: 4-20-45

Fall Ordeal

We are here at Godman Field again. We are among the 101 officers who are here "under arrest" for refusing to sign an order at Freeman Field that would Jim Crow us, and keep us out of the officers club (white).

We were flown here in six transports and such a greeting; you should have thought we were "Jap Prisoners". A big crowd gathered; they stared and leered as if they had never seen us before. There were also many armed guards on hand.

We are living in the same barracks that we occupied before we left here. They have placed a string of M. P.'s all around the area with sticks to watch us. We can only go to the Gym (across the street) and to mess hall. We are allowed no visitors. All of this is in direct violation of Military Law which even allows men in the guardhouse to have visitors and we aren't prisoners. There aren't supposed to be any guards for we are supposed to remain under arrest on our honor as officers. This is really "confinement" and without any charges having been preferred either. If this isn't "Fascism" we wonder what is?

We will be here for from two weeks to three months pending the decision of the War Department. We may be court-martialled on some "Framed-up" charge. We were given "direct orders" to sign these orders which would segregate and discriminate against us, and when we refused we were placed under arrest. We refuse for if we are to make the world safe for Democracy, then we can use a little of it here at home. 4-20-45

The club they want us to use is a second rate place that used to be a "Non Com's Club." The white officers' club is very swanky. We are not only allowed no visitors, but while we are under guard by M. P.s, there are "German Prisoners of War" walking around our area free, working on their "Honor". Yes, a white German P. W.'s honor is better than a "Colored U. S. Army Officer's." 4-20-45

If they can keep all these highly trained men idle while the war goes on it is a definite indication of which is more important—winning the war or attending theofficers' club.

The 83rd, composed entirely of Negro officers and enlisted personnel, successfully laid smoke screens to confuse the enemy prior to a drive made by the 29th Division on the northern end of the front in Germany.

Moving out before the infantry, the men of the 83rd kept up harassing operations against the enemy, making it possible for the combat troops to move in and take over.

"Since this was the men's first assignment, naturally I was glad they made good," said Capt. George B. Warren Jr., Chicago, Ill., commanding the 83rd.

Second Lieut. Richard A. Gales, Urbana, Ohio, and Second Lieut. Curtiss E. Knighton, Detroit, Mich. showed the same enthusiasm.

They Refuse to Agree Not to Enter Club at Indiana Army Field

4-21-45

WASHINGTON, April 20 (AP)—The War Department said today that pending an investigation no further disciplinary action would be taken against Negro officers involved in a controversy at Freeman Field, near Seymour, Ind.

A spokesman said that three Negro officers accused of jostling a provost marshal when they entered a white officers' club April 5 were under arrest and 101 others were confined to quarters because they refused to sign an agreement not to enter the club.

The 101 officers have been transferred to Godman Field, near Fort Knox, Ky.

The club to which the Negroes sought entry had been set aside for base personnel and instructors, all white. Another club is operated for the officers in training, all Negroes in a bombardment squadron. 4-21-45

The spokesman said that separate clubs for instructors and trainees were customary in the training command whether or not there was any racial difference between the two groups. The aim, he added, is to discourage social contacts between instructors and trainees and prevent any possible favoritism toward students.

Department Withholds Action Pending Full Investigation

WASHINGTON (Special)—The War Department announced this week that no further action will be taken in present disciplinary cases involving Army Air Forces officers at Freeman and Goodman Fields, Indiana, pending completion of a War Department investigation that is now in progress.

The cases involve 60 officers in the Air Force who were arrested when they entered the white officers' club on those fields. The War Department, it is expected will thoroughly investigate the case and then rule on the legality of barring officers of any race from an officers' club.

No Action Planned Now

A high war department spokesman told the Amsterdam News that no court martial proceedings will be instituted against these fliers but that further infractions of the rules, should the Army decide that Negro officers may be barred, would result in court-martial action.

SEYMOUR, Ind., (ANP) — On charges of "jostling" a post provost marshal on duty, three Negro officers stationed at Freeman field, army air base, are awaiting "routine disciplinary action." The officers are said to have refused to leave a "white only" club house.

According to reports, the officers, arriving at Freeman field Thursday night, sauntered over to the officers' club to while away the evening. At the door of the recreation center, they were met by Maj. A. M. White and Lt. J. D. 777TH FIELD ARTILLERY MEDIC PROMOTED TO CAPTAIN REVEALS UNUSUAL LEADERSHIP ABILITY

Black Dispatch Oklahoma City, Okla. 2-10-45

By RUDOLPH DUNBAR

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FANCE.—(ANP) When I visited the 777th Field Artillery battalion Christmas, I was informed that the promotion of Lt. James H. Robinson jr. to the rank of captain was a foregone conclusion. Therefore I took the liberty to address him as captain in my last dispatch when in fact he had not been officially notified of his promotion.

Lt. Robinson was notified of his promotion to captain on Jan. 1 and immediately wrote me a letter informing me of the fact as well as expressing thanks for visiting his outfit.

"You were much missed after you had gone," he wrote. "Since you left, the tension has not been nearly as great. You should have been with me on New Year's eve when I celebrated the occasion by popping open two lovely and delicious bottles of champagne. Putting it in good old American slant, we had a 'wow' of a time."

Captain Robinson is indeed a remarkable young man. His reliability of conduct, honesty and intense devotion to duty have been a source of inspiration to the men under him. He is the doctor in command of the medics of the 777th and it is perhaps the most impressive and praiseworthy section of the battalion. When he gives an order, it is executed with precision and speed. 2-10-45

Captain Robinson comes from Cincinnati, received his medical training at Meharry Medical college where he won the highest honors in his 1943 class. He joined the 777th when he completed his internment at Harlem hospital in March 1944, and had only been a member of the outfit 10 days before leaving for overseas duty. Captain Robinson's wife is serving as a nurse on the Burma front. Captain Robinson's father is the dean in the college of liberal arts at Wilberforce university and if the senior Robinson had included divinity to his scholastic attainments he might have easily become one of Wilberforce's presidents. 2-10-45

The personnel of the medics is composed of a group of young men who are a model of propriety. Captain Robinson is fortunate to be in command of young men with such high standards. Most of them have a college education and plan to return to their studies after the war. These are the men who are making history along with Captain Robinson:

Staff Segt. W. B. Hosey, 23, Houston, Texas. Sgt. Hosey is a graduate of Samuel Huston's college and is an Omega Psi Phi.

Cpl. Harold Land, 23, Cleveland an outstanding athlete. Cpl. Lane was taking a science course at Baldwin Wallace college before he entered the army.

T-5 Robert L .Martin, 22, Wharton, Texas. T-5 Martin was taking his premedical at Huston college before joining the ERC. His chief interest was surgery. Martin's father is an outstanding physician in Texas.

Pfc. Brown L. Brackens, 22, San Antonio, Texas. Pfc. Brackens was studying veterinary science at Prairie View college when America entered the war. He volunteered for ERC service after three years of college work.

Pfc. Willie James Hoosier, 21, Galveston, Texas. Pfc. Hoosier was taking a pre-medical course at Prairie View State college. He volunteered, like the most of his buddies, but his great ambition is to become a plastic surgeon.

T-Sgt. Hilton Thomas, Jackson, Miss., plans to go into business with his brother, He worked for the state hospital before joining the ERC. His wife works for the State of Mississippi in Jackson.

T-5 Mitchell Brunson, New Rochelle, N. Y., was a shipping clerk and first-aid instructor at Queens county hospital before the war. Another aspirant to the medical profession is Pvt. Veeiland Thompson, Newport News, Va. He was tkaing his pre-medical training when he joined Captain Robinson's outfit. He plans to return to his studies after the war.

Officers-Army

Pfc. Hartsell Pryor, Nashville, Tenn., was engaged in construction work with the Rush Building Company before joining the ERC. He intends to study embalming after the war. His uncle is an outstanding embalmer. Pvt. Marion Collins jr. does not disclose his future plans to anyone. He is from Saginaw, Mich.

Red Cross Worker From New York Makes Deposition About Incident In London

LONDON (ANP)—Copies of an affidavit, executed in Washington, D. C., by Miss Camille K Jones of Chicago and New York, former Red Cross worker here in England, have just been received here and are casting light on the mystery which has surrounded the court martial action said to be pending against Lt. Lance Jeffers of the 740th Medical Sanitation Company who has been on overseas duty here.

Lt. Jeffers, when entering a park at Basingstroke, a town in south England, a section by the way which is much like the South in the United States in its racial attitudes, had an altercation with three white enlisted men who spoke disparagingly of a Miss Jones, whom he was escorting. His remonstrance led to a fight, in which the three soldiers attacked him, giving him the worst of it.

3 Bring Charges

Lt. Jeffers got little sympathy when he reported the matter at military police headquarters or when he sought to prefer charges against the men. As soon, however, as Miss Jones was returned to America for reassignment and could no longer serve as the sole witness to the fracas, the three soldiers preferred charges against Lt. Jeffers.

Miss Jones, who was a social worker in New York before she joined the Red Cross, and who is now in New York City, pending reassignment, said in her deposition which was made in Washington, D. C., January 11th. "I, Camille K. Jones, American Red Cross, was entering the park in Basingstroke, England, with Lt. Lance Jeffers, 740th Medical Santitation Company, about 9 p. m. on August 25, 1944. Standing at some distance near a kiosk, were three enlisted men, S Sgt. Rioux, Cpl. Nichols and Cpl. Grimes.

"As we passed, Cpl. Grimes said loudly, 'That's the nigger I was talking to the other night,' directing the remark to me. Lt. Jeffers and I walked over to the men, Lt. Jeffers calling them to attention, but only Sgt. Rioux responded. At that point, a local policeman was passing, and Lt. Jeffers called him. The policeman refused to take action, saying he had no authority in the matter. 2-3-45

"Lt. Jeffers then addressed the three enlisted men, ordering them to come to the military police station with him. All refused. Lt. Jeffers again called them to attention, when Cpl. Nichols, who had been lolling in the background, stepped forward belligerently as though he was going to fight, saying '——you.' At the same time Cpl. Grimes closed in on Lt. Jeffers. Lt. Jeffers swung at Cpl. Nichols but did not hit him. Cpl. Nichols struck Lt. Jeffers and Cpl. Grimes jumped Lt. Jeffers from the rear."

"The altercation lasted only a few minutes. I retrieved Lt. Jeffers' hat and glasses, which had been knocked off and we left. I was extremely upset by the incident and requested Lt. Jeffers to take me home, which he did. After I had regained my composure we went to the military police station, Basingstoke, where I reported the incident. I also requested that charges be pressed against these men, Sgt Rioux, Cpl. Nichols and Cpl Grimes."

Fighting Campbells All In Uniform For Uncle Sam

Chicago Defender 2-10-45

WITH SEVENTH ARMY IN ALSACE—It is unusual to have all of the men in a family overseas but more unusual to have practically all the women members in the services too, but that is exactly the case of Captain Thomas M. Campbell, Tuskegee, Ala., physician and medical officer with a tank destroyer battalion here.

His father, Thomas M. Campbell Sr., extension field agent U. S. Department of Agriculture, is in Africa as a member of an Anglo-American committee making a survey of education, agriculture and rural life. Captain William Campbell, a brother, is in command of the famed 99th pursuit squadron in Italy.

2-10-45

Captain Noel Campbell, member of the WAC, a sister, is serving at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga. Another sister, Virginia, is at the Lincoln School for Nurses, New York City, where she will receive her commission in the U. S. Nursing Corps under the government's training plan for nurses.

Captain Campbell was uncertain about sister Elizabeth, who is at the University of California's School of Physiotherapy, where she's studying for her master's, but he thinks that she might come on in too.

Mrs. Thomas M. Campbell Sr., is the sole member of the Campbell menage at Tuskegee where she is keeping the homefires burning like thousands of other waiting families.

The "medics" have had a lot of work with injuries and casualties since coming into action in November. Captain Campbell was up front with his medics when "C" company made a heroic stand at the gateway into Germany. He wasn't there for the fighting but he came hours later with much needed aid. A Meharry graduate in 1941, he entered the army after his interneship at Durham.

Other "medics" with the unit were: Sgts. John J. Lee, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Julius C. Highe, Ashville, N. C.; Calvin Williams, Ashville, N. C.; Robert Harris, Pittsburgh Pa.; Cpls. Lonnie Thompson, Hillsboro, N. C.; Selesta Whitehead, Tarboro, N. C.; Jethro Thompson, Mebane, N. C.; Rockie Williams, Louisberg, N. C.; Pfcs. Dale Richardson, Chicago, Ill.; Joseph Wynn, Roper, N. Gen. Eisenhower Awarded Haiti's Highest Medal

Chicago Def.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(ANP)—The Great Cross of the Haitian National Guard was pinned on the breast of General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower on Saturda afternoon at an impressive reception held at the Haitian embassy and attended by many notables. 7-9-45

The cross is an honor heretofore reserved for kings and presidents, but was made to Gen. Eisenhower for his herculean efforts in bringing the war to an end for the allied nations.

The presentation, with gold plaque, was made by Gerard Lescot, Haitian secretary for foreign affairs who is en route to Port Au Prince from the San Francisco conference. Words of friendship and appreciation were expressed by the recipient and the Haitian government.

With General Eisenhower was Mrs. Eisenhower, having just returned from their second honeymoon at White Sulphur Springs. In the receiving line at the embassy were Ambassador and Mme. Andre Liautaud. They welcomed the British ambassador and the countess of Halifax, French Ambassador Henri Bonnet, Chinese Ambassador and Mme. Wei, and the chiefs of the diplomatic missions of the Latin-American nations.

A Negro Takes Command of First U.S. Base

Chicago Daily Tribune

Fort Knox, Ky., July 18 (AP) — A brigadier general and a colonel, both Negroes, stood at attention today as Mitchell bombers, flown by Negro pilots, swooped low in close formation over Godman field.

They were watching an all-Negro troop review, marking the official installation of the 477th composite air group of the 1st air force at Fort Knox, and the first time a Negro officer had been placed in charge of a United States military base.

Col. Benjamin O. Davis Jr., was the first Negro base commanding officer. His father, Brig. Gen. Benjamin O. Davis, 62, first and only Negro general officer in United States military history, had flown from Washington, D. C., to attend the review. 7-19-45

Negro Air WACs

Gen. Davis said:

"The performance I witnessed and the establishment of these units at Godman field are clear evidence to us who have followed the Negro's performance in this war that the war department feels the Negro soldier is making a distinct contribution to the war effort."

Established at Godman field with the 477th composite group are the 387th service group and the newly arrived company A of Negro air WAC's.

Gen. Davis said the war department had promised that when the units are trained, they will be sent into combat "and I can promise you that they will make a definite contribution to final victory."

Recalled to Active Duty

The general, born in Washington, D. C., entered military service in July, 1898, during the Spanish-American war as a temporary 1st lieutenant. He reënlisted as a private in the regular army after the war, served as a corporal and squadron sergeant-major.

In 1901 he was commissioned a second lieutenant of cavalry.

He was promoted to brigadier general, temporary rank, in 1940, was retired in July, 1941, but recalled to active duty the day after his retirement.

Col. Davis, a West Point graduate of 1936, was commander of the 332d fighter group in Italy. He won his wings at the Tuskegee army air field in 1942 and commanded the 99th air group in the North African, Sicilian, and Italian campaigns. 7-19-45

He wears the legion of merit, silver star, distinguished flying cross, and the air medal with four oak leaf clusters.

Other Negro Officers Take Over Posts At Godman Field

GODMAN FIELD, Ky. -- Brigadier General Benjamin O. Davis realized "by proxy" this week part of the reward which, despite his proven ability, the jim-crow U. S. Army he has served so faithfully has never seen fit to give him.

Col. B. O. Davis

In a colorful all-Negro troop review here on Wednesday, as B-25 bombers flew in close formation over Godman Field, the 62-year-old general saw his son, Col. Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., officially installed as the first Negro commander of a U. S. military base.

General Davis flew from Washington, his headquarters as a member of the Inspector General's staff, to be present as his heir took over the reins at Godman.

The younger Davis graduated from West Point in 1936 and won his wings at Tuskegee Army Air Field in 1942. He later became commander of the famed 99th Pursuit Squadron which participated in the North African, Italian and Sicilian campaigns after which he was chosen to head the 332nd Mustang Fighter Group in Italy. With the 332nd, he personally led his fliers on more than 20 missions. 7-28-45

General Optimistic

Colonel Davis wears the Legion of Merit, Silver Star, Distinguished Flying Cross and the Air Medal with four Oak Leaf Clusters. His command at Godman includes the 477th Composite Group, the 387th Service Group and a company of Negro Air WACs. The 477th is slated for Pacific combat duty by mid-autumn.

In a speech at the installation Wednesday, General Davis, a true soldier, lauded the war department's efforts to better the Negro soldier's present plight. Said Davis:

"The performance I witnessed and the establishment of these units at Godman field are clear evidence to us who have followed the Negro's performance in this war that the war department feels the Negro soldier is making a distinct contribution to the war effort." 7-28-45

General Davis said the war department had promised that when the units are trained, they will be sent into combat "and I can promise you that they will make a definite contribution to final victory."

Twenty-Five-Year-Old Major Is Commander Of Reborn 99th Pursuit Squadron At Godman

N.Y. Age

GODMAN FIELD, Ky.—Col. B. O. Davis, Jr. announced last week that the famed 99th Pursuit Squadron, first Negro squadron to blast the Luftwaffe from the skies, has been reborn here as part of the 477th Composite Group. The crack unit will be commanded by Major William A. Campbell and will fly the hard-hitting P-47 Thunderbolt. Many of the pilots will be former members of the original 99th and holders of several combat ribbons and decorations.

N.Y. N.Y.

Maj. Campbell, of Tuskegee, Alabama, is a veteran of 106 aerial combat missions over Europe, and holder of the Distinguished Flying Cross with nine Oak Leaf clusters. He fought with the original 99th and later saw action with the 332nd Fighter Group, the well-known "Red Tails" who were highly praised by the bomber fliers they escorted on raids into the heart of Germany. For eight months he was commanding officer of the 99th in action overseas.

A graduate of Tuskegee Institute, Campbell was a civilian pilot instructor before joining the Air Corps. He won his wings July 3, 1942. The 25-year-old Major, wearer of the Air Medal with one cluster, has combat flying experience in the P-40, P-51 and P-47. He is swiftly shaping his new command into a formidable fighting machine for early action in the Pacific. 7-28-45

They are Lt. Alta E. Sims, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Asa Sims of Hampton, Va., and Lt. Gloria H. D. Nelom of 1243 Walter Pl., S.E., both of whom entered OCS in May.

Lieutenant Sims who enlisted in the WAC in April, 1943, has been stationed here since then.

A Member of Band

Joining the 404th ASF Band in Aug., 1943, she played clarinet with them until March, 1944, when she was transferred to the Special Training Unit. She also served with the post special services office for five months.

A 1939 graduate of Tuskegee Institute, Tuskege, Ala., she taught at Tuskegee for two years before enlisting in the WAC.

Former D.C. Teacher

Lieutenant Nelom, a native of Dutch Guinea, enlisted in the WAC in January, 1943. After basic training at Fort Des Moines she was stationed on the post as a cadre member for nine months.

Transferred to the New York Port of Embarkation, she did supply work and was an instructor in the adult education program there for 17 months. 8-25-45

AFRO-American

WASHINGTON

Lieut. Elbert R. Bishop of this city, the first colored officer to enter the Philippines, returned home last week for a twenty-one-day furlough. 1-27-45

Commanding officer of a transportation corps under the general command of General Krugter, he landed with his unit only four hours after the initial wave of infantrymen at Leyte.

Leiutenant Bishop's unit bore the blunt of the herculean task of getting supplies to the front that made victory in the now historic batle possible.

Went In With Southerners

As they prepared to board the LS8's for the invasion, they found that they wtre "going in'" with a white company of infantrymen from the South. However, the white commander had a conference with Lieutenant Bishop and they agreed to refrain from the use of obnoxious names.

In an exclusive AFRO interview, the young veteran, admitting original astonishment, declared that white and colored persons can get along together if they agree to. 1-27-45

Such ties of friendship were made en route, that long after the landing the white infantrymen, and the colored trans-portation unit exchanged scarcities and souvenirs.

U.S. Disorders Disturbing

The morale was very high, the officer revealed, but such things as the Detroit riot and major strikes caused considerable discussion.

Among his more interesting experiences, Lieut. Bishop recalls the Philippino's rection when the colored troops landed.

Seeing the darker men land and observing the general direction from which they came, the natives concluded they were Indians. Only after much persuasion were they willing to accept the colored soldiers as Americans.

Hower, when they were finally convinced, the reception was almost too good. Many of the men were attracted to the native women, and at the time of Lieutenant Bishop's departure, he said, many marriages were under consideration. 1-27-45

Entertainment Appreciated

The officer had nothing but praise for the Red Cross and USO shows. Some of the shows were not up to par, but the gesture was highly appreciated, he said.

There was no segregation at all in the Philippines, reports Bishop, and none existed in Australia until sufficient numbers of whites came to spread the evil practice.

On his first day of his return, Lieutenant Bishop received his first taste of race hatred here.

He entered a department store in a West Coast city and overheard a whit woman from Texas refer to the colored people from her section as "n---r". However, upon seeing him, he added, she turned and apologized.

Lieutenant Bishop graduated from Armstrong High School and Virgina State College. He received his training at Edgewood Arsenal, Md., and was commissioned in Brisbane, Australia.

Capt. C. F. Gandy's Death Confirmed

WASHINGTON

The War Department last Saturday confirmed reports that Capt. Charles F. Gandy of Washington, who had previously been reported missing in action since October 12, had been killed in Italy on that day. 1-27-45

Newspaper reports from the theatre said Captain Gandy had been mortally wounded by enemy machine-gun fire while leading units of the 92nd Division on the side of a mountain.

Shortly before his death Captain Gandy had received a battlefront promotion to that rank from Lieut. Gen. Mark W. Clark, then commander of the Fifth Army. Captain Gandy had shown exceptional heroism at the battle of Lucca.

Other Officer Casualties

At the time Captain Gandy was first reported a casualty, three other officers of the 92nd were similarly listed as missing in action during the heavy fighting near Seraverza.

They were Lts. Alonzo M. Frazier of Boston, Lionell Ladmirault of New Orleans and Ralph G. Skinner.

Col. Davis Gets Post Command

Heads Mixed Group After Jim Crow Protest

By United Press

WASHINGTON, June 22.—A recent conflict between white and Negro Army Air Force officers over use of an Officers' Club at Freeman Field, Seymour, Ind., prompted the War Dept. to place Col. Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., a Negro, in command of the 477th Composite Group, it has been disclosed here.

Largely composed of Negroes, the 477th formerly was commanded by Col. Robert B. Selway, Jr., and other white staff officers. It had been stationed at Freeman Field until its recent transfer to Godman Field, Ky.

Davis, accompanied by Lt. Gen. Ira C. Eaker, flew from here to take over his new assignment.

He formerly commanded the 332nd Fighter Group in Italy, which flew as part of the 12th Fighter Command under the overall command of Eaker. A West Point graduate, he is 32 and the son of Brig. Gen. Benjamin O. Davis, Sr., the only Negro officer of star rank in the Army.

The Freeman Field incident arose when the Officers' Club was reserved for use of the base staff and instructors. This, in effect, restricted it for white officers and barred Negro officer trainees.

Three trainees who attempted to enter the club were arrested for jostling a provost marshal, and 101 of the trainees were confined to quarters for a short time—tantamount to technical arrest.

Negro trainees who attempted to visit the club pointed out that

Lt. Col. Benjamin O. Davis, Jr

Army regulations require that any such quarters maintained on Army property must be available for all officer personnel on the post.

Eaker instructed Davis to choose his own staff. He will take command of Godwin after a brief transition interval.

FATHER AND SON

The appointment of Col. Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., as Commanding Officer of the 477th Composite Group (bombers and fighters) of Army Air Corps, marks another first for the precedent-breaking Davises, father and son. Colonel Davis is the son of Brig. Gen. Benjamin O. Davis, Sr. of the Inspector General's Department. The father, who rose from the ranks, is the first Negro to wear a general's star. The son, a graduate of West Point, is the first to hold such an important command in the Army Air Corps. 7-7-45

It is officers like the Davises who have done much to break down prejudice within the Army officers' corps. There are few places in the Army where they are not welcomed as equals. A classmate of Colonel Davis at West Point, in discussing the discriminaton practced against him in his early days at the Academy, said that when Ben Davis graduated, there was no man in the corps more respected. The story in this newspaper of the 1936 graduation said that when he stepped up to receive his diploma, there was "prolonged applause" from his classmates and spectators, even more than was given that year's First Captain.

The Davises, father and son, are a credit to their race. More than that they are a credit to the Army and to their country.

Colonel Loving's Son Commissioned

7-7-45 Weekly Review

FORT BENNING, Ga. — (ANP) Walter Loving, Jr., son of the late Col. Loving, Japanese prisoner of war who was killed in the Philippines, last Tuesday received his commission as a second lieutenant here. Mrs. Edith Loving, widow of the famed, military band master, traveled from California to see her son, whom she had not seen for three years, become commissioned. She returned to this country after the liberation of the Philippines. 7-7-45

Tall, slim, auburn-haired Mrs. Loving showed little of the strains of her interment in a Japanese prison camp as she pinned the gold bars on her towering son. Shortly after the ceremonies, Lt. Loving and his mother left by plane for their California home where he will spend a 10 days leave. He will return to Fort McClellan, Ala., to assume duties as an infantry training officer. 7-7-45

NEWARK, N.J.—Capt. Elwood T. Driver, a veteran of 123 missions as a fighter officer of the 99th Squadron in Italy, arrived here on Tuesday for special service with the Newark Area War Manpower Commission.

Capt. Driver will speak at various assemblies in Essex, Hudson and Union counties on the WMC plan for recruiting 20,000 workers for war industries.

Captain Driver, a native of Trenton, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert T. Driver of that city, has been out of combat service three months. 1-27-45

His station is at Tuskegee Army Air Base where he has recently been assigned as blind flying instructor.

Captain Driver was wearing a foreign service bar with four stars in four major campaigns and an Air Medal with cluster.

He told the AFRO that he destroyed one enemy plane in combat and probably destroyed one.

His command was strafing and dive-bombing which was a reason for not engaging in aerial combat, he said.

Captain Driver's closest escape came in the explosion of an enemy anti-aircraft shell in his cockpit while he was on a mission.

Another was while he was trapped in concentrated fire until members of his squadron knocked out their positions, he said.

Capt. Driver said he has never had to bail out or make a forced landing, although his plane sometimes had to be junked after landing because of damage by enemy action. 1-27-45

He volunteered for air service in April, 1942, but was not accepted until February, 1942, for training at Tuskegee Army Air Base.

He will resume instructions at the base following his mission here on January 27.

60 Bomber Pilots Under Arrest For Entering Field Officers Club

ONLY TWO UNDER ARREST SAYS WAR DEPARTMENT

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The War Department announced on Tuesday morning that all but two of 37 officers of the 477th Bomber Group placed under arrest last Friday had been returned to duty. Names of the two men held were not given. Officials said that the number of arrests was not 60 as reported in a press release.

By Associated Negro Press

FREEMAN FIELD, SEYMOUR, Ind.—Sixty Negro officers were placed under arrest at this field last Friday for defying a ban on colored officers at the swanky and modern officers' club at this post by order of Col. Robert Selway Jr., post commander.

The mass arrest, which is believed unprecedented in the history of the Army, has this post in an uproar and has disrupted the entire training program of the 477th Bombardment Group. This group is the first all-Negro Bomb unit—that is, all Negro for training but whites for command and promotion.

SOME HOLD DFC 4-14-45

All of those arrested are members of the base unit which is a replacement group for the 477th now in the final stages of their overseas training. The names of those arrested are not available at this time. However, they include captains, lieutenants and flight officers, several of them overseas veterans and proud wearers of the Distinguished Flying Cross.

Col. Selway's move in setting up a separate officers' club and denying admittance to Negro officers is termed a direct violation of Army Regulations 210-10 Par. 19, which specifically states that membership shall not be denied to any officer on any Army post. This regulation is further substantiated by executive order of President Roosevelt on July 6, 1944, banning any such discrimination.

4-14-45

At this date charges have not been filed but were expected momentarily. Meanwhile the officers involved are restricted to their quarters and inspected by armed guard every two hours.

Capt. Driver Succeeds Martin

Norfolk Journal & Guide

TUSKEGEE ARMY AIR FIELD, Ala. — Captain Elwood T. Driver, of Trenton, N. J., was recently appointed director of the cadet ground school at the Tuskegee Army Air Field. He succeeds the late Major Harold Martin who was recently killed in a plane crash. 4-21-45

Capt. Driver is a graduate of New Jersey State College with a bachelor of science degree in mathematics. He was among the first to volunteer for the cadet training program at the Tuskegee Army Air Field, reporting to this station on March 6, 1942. He received his commission in October of the same year, and was among the first replacements for the famous 99th Fighter Squadron in the Mediterranean theatre of Operations.

In his new assignment Capt. Driver will coordinate and direct academic phases of training of future pilots for America.

Captain Welch Killed Just Prior to Returning Home

Washington Tribune

3-17-45

By WOODY L. TAYLOR

Fate and the horrors of war heated another Washington family from a last visit from their loved one. Captain George Franklin Welch of the 366th Infantry, 92nd Division, was killed in action in Italy just before he was scheduled to return to this country March 1, with Maj. James Fowler, to spend some-time at Ft. Benning, Ga.

Captain Welch, whose wife, Mrs. Wendella Welch and two children, George, Jr., 5, and Lynda, 2, reside at 600 Gresham Pl., N.W., was a graduate of Dunbar High School and held two B.S. degrees in engineering from Howard University. Before going into the Army he was electrical engineer in the power plant at Howard, a position which he was given upon graduation. He had worked his way through the institution in the plant and was rewarded with the job upon graduation. 3-17-45

Brothers in Army

The Captain was the son of Mrs. M. R. Welch, an 8th grade teacher in the Tuskegee Institute Junior High School department, and the late William Welch. The mother must indeed be proud of her sons, for George and his two brothers, Ernest Rivers and John are all Army officers. Their ranks were in succession. George was the Captain, John a Major and Ernest a Lieutenant Colonel.

Maj. John is commanding officer of the ROTC Unit at Tuskegee Institute and Lt. Col. Ernest is assistant executive officer of the Infantry school at Ft. Benning, Ga. 3-17-45

Captain Welch is also survived by two sisters, Mrs. Wilhelmina Burrell, a Tuskegee teacher, and Mrs. Margaret Wilson, a teacher in the Lincoln Academy, Kings Mountain, N.C.

Wives Here

The officer has been a member of the National Technical Association, the Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity, and the Berean Baptist Church. He was well known in and around Washington and will be sadly missed. 3-17-45

Captain George's wife and those of his two brothers reside and work in Washington. His wife is a nurse in the Public Health Department, John's wife, Mrs. Margaret P. Welch is secretary to the treasurer of Howard University and Ernest's wife, Mrs. Margaret D. Welch, is a teacher in the Phelps Junior High School.

WITH U. S. FORCES IN GERMANY—To go to sleep at night as a private first class and wake up the next morning a second lieutenant and executive officer of Headquarters Company sounds like a dream to most GIs, but it really happened in Germany to Private First Class William Thomas Carter, now Second Lieutenant William Thomas Carter, of Petersburg, Va.

3-17-45

LT. CARTER

Assigned as a private first class in the 29th Signal Battalion operating "somewhere in Germany," Carter was commissioned on the field as a second lieutenant in his old outfit as the result of direct orders from General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Inducted as a private in 1943 from his post as head of the language department at Virginia State College, Lieutenant Carter is the holder of a Ph.D. degree from the University of Michigan where he was a sprint star in 1931.

He has already taken up his duties as executive officer of Headquarters Company in his old battalion.

His wife, Mrs. Hermione Carter, is a teacher in Petersburg, Va., where they reside. Both Lt. and Mrs. Carter formerly lived in Norfolk, Va. 3-17-45

Officer in Belgium Believes Negroes Status No Better Than in World War I

The Kansas City Call Mo.

SOMEWHERE IN BELGIUM.—(ANP)— The status of American Negro soldiers in World War 2 over those in World War 1 was questioned recently by a Negro officer in this area. 3-9-45

The answer may be definitely in the affirmative, he said, but contended that "with the meager facts before me, it seems that in proportion to the number of our group participating in the armed forces we have lost ground.

"In World War 1, we had the bulk of colored troops in the services (quartermaster, pioneers and sanitary corps), with white commanders and colored officers in the junior grades of lieutenant," he pointed out. "This is true today." 3-9-45

"In World War 1, we had a few combat units, with mixed officers who got to the front lines. This is also true today." But when World War 2 is over, the Negro must face the "old cry that the colored soldier is a good soldier when ably lead by white officers."

There appears to be a conflict of opinion as to the use and the "place for colored troops. "I have had regular army officers admit to me that there are two current theories about colored soldiers," he revealed. "One is that they are not worth a damn and the other is that they are excellent when properly lead."

The American social caste system, he said, made the colored officer somewhat of a problem if not a nuisance. To be an asset instead of a liability, the colored officer must be superior. He must be a student of the art of war, able to handle and lead any type of men, be a diplomat, proud but not arrogant, "and able to keep the big picture before him."

He showed how fate often plays its part in undoing wrong. "The units officered entirely by colored officers have been in quiet sectors sometimes became very hot," he said. "Then by accident we got a chance to shine."

He said that both of the Davises, Brig. Gen. Benjamin O. Davis and his son, Lt. Col. Benjamin O. Davis Jr., have been a credit to their country and race but gave the opinion that the junior Davis was following in the footsteps of his father. 3-9-45

Negro citizens, he warned, can not afford to forget about the armed forces if they are to become thoroughly integrated into every phase of American life.

Lt. O'Neal served overseas with the 15th Air Force's 332nd Fighter Group from June to September, 1944, and has been awarded the Air Medal for his achievements. When a P-40 pilot in Italy, he was shot down over southern France shortly before the American invasion of that territory. He thinks that he shot down the German Messerschmidt who downed him. O'Neal parachuted safely to the ground and was found by a friendly French family who looked after him until American forces arrived. After his return to the United States he was sent to Douglas Army Air Field, an Air Forces Training Command installation, for bomber pilot instruction. Four other Negro officers, all combat veterans, graduated with him. 3-3-45

Son, of Mr. and Mrs. James T. Brewington of Detroit, the 23-year-old flyer graduated from Northwestern High School in Detroit in 1939. He was a member of the school band and the ROTC. In March, 1943, he enlisted in the Air Corps as an aviation cadet. He received his pilot wings and commission as a second lieutenant at Tuskegee Army Air Field, Alabama, in January, 1944. Flight Officer Killed In Action

Norfolk Journal & Guide 1-20-45

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Flight Officer Leonard R. Willette, who was reported missing in action over Germany Sept. 22, 1944, has been reported killed in action, according to the War Department, through reports received by the American Red Cross from the German government.

Son of Lt. and Mrs. Lawrence Willette, 137 Stephen street, Belleville, N. J., Flight Officer Willette graduated from Belleville High School and at the time of his enlistment in the Army Air Corps was a student at New York University.

Prior to his enlistment he was named by the late Senator Warren Barbour as one of his selectees to take the West Point examinations. Wishing more immediate action, however, young Willette enlisted in the Air Corps, and received his wings at Tuskegee in February, 1944. By July he was in active service as a fighter pilot of the 99th Fighter Squadron of the 332nd, under Col. Benjamin O. Davis Jr. 1-20-45

WON MEDALS

Said Major Gen. Twining, commander of the 15th Air Force in Italy, "Flight Officer Leonard Willette was an able and experienced pilot whose courage and skill have been important factors in the success of operations in which he participated. His country has seen fit to recognize his services by the award of the Air Medal and Oak Leaf Cluster. The order promoting him from flight officer to second lieutenant came through on the day he was reported missing, but he was not present to sign the oath of office." 1-20-45

Flight Officer Willette had also been awarded the Purple Heart, for his courage and supreme sacrifice in the defense of his country.

HIS SURVIVORS

He is survived by his parents, two sisters who are students at Howard University; two younger brothers attending Belleville High School and an older brother, Lawrence Willette Jr., also in the Air Corps serving as a technician at Tinker Field Air Base in Oklahoma. He was engaged to Miss Gussie Turner of Summit, N. J., senior at Spellman College, Atlanta, Ga.

Dashing Captain Says Oklahoma City Looks Good

Oklahoman Home On Furlough Tells of Oversea Experiences

"Oklahoma City looks good to me," declared Captain Joseph DuBois Elsberry, 23, when he arrived in Oklahoma City last week from the European theater of war.

Capt. Elsberry, who is the son of Mrs. Beulah Elsberry, principal of the separate schools at Pauls Valley, arrived in the city from Langston last Wednesday evening, along with Dr. G. Lamar Harrison and Bishop Gregg, in time to attend the testimonial banquet staged by the Oklahoma City Negro Chamber of Commerce in honor of Editor Roscoe Dunjee.

Has Distinguished Awards

The dashing, and very athletic young plane hero, who has been awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross, and the air medal of six oak leaf clusters, also carries three battle stars. His deadly aim has brought down three German planes and a probable fourth. He is the nephew of J. E. Meeks, 1200 Northeast Sixth street. 2-3-45

Young Elsberry, who is only 23 years old, talked interestingly of his experiences overseas. He was in air operations around Anzio beachhead in Italy during the first three months of 1944. His second baptism of fire came with the invasion of southern France late in July, and he was in the cover forces of the U. S. army during the invasion of Greece. He is connected with the 301 fighter group squadron of the 332 Fighter Group, commanded by Col. Ben. O. Davis. 2-3-45

Likes Col. Davis

"Our commander is a grand fellow and we all idolize him," said Capt. Elsberry in discussing what the boys think of Col. Davis. The soldier visitor said that it was about 30 flying hours from Europe to America, although he said his unit was tied down two days because of bad weather at an undisclosed point.

Segregated at Miami

"There was no segregation during passage from Europe and the island stops we made," said Capt. Elsberry. "We saw nothing of American jim crow until we reached Miami, Fla.

"We were a mixed group returning, and the white buddies were infuriated when they discovered we were being segregated in Florida. 'Hell! We fought together. Why can't we eat and sleep together?' said a white Texan who was in the party," according to Elsberry.

"I just did not think they should have done such a thing, but they sent the whites to a permanent barracks with showers and every modern convenience, while I was shunted off to a temporary arrangement where we slept one place and took our showers some distance away. One of my white friends with whom I had developed a fine friendship said, 'My God! They will not even let me talk to you now,'" said Elsberry.

No Prejudice On Battle Front

"There's no prejudice on the battle front," said the youthful captain. "Perhaps one day a white air force will cover a Negro ground unit and the next day our air unit will be covering a white ground force. It's only behind the lines in some of the supply depots where one finds some snotty whites," said Elsberry.

The doughty captain said his most exciting moment came when he shot down his fourth plane July 20.

"I happened to look around and discovered a 'Jerry' right on my tail. I went into a steep bank and out-turned him, landing on his tail. He started diving away and my windshield frosted. We were up in the Alps, so I had to pull up to dodge the mountains. My wingman said I barely missed a mountain top. Another pilot got credit for shooting down the 'Jerry' who was giving me so much trouble."

Italians Likable People

Capt. Elsberry said the Italian people, and all the races in Europe, are extremely hospitable and exhibit no signs of prejudice. "In fact, the Italians are unusual in their fellowship with Negro soldiers and in their social contacts," Elsberry said.

"They are crazy about our skin color and hair. Not once but many times I have had them look at my skin and say 'multi bella' (very beautiful), and then at my hair to exclaim 'multi bona.'"

Commissions to Men of 92nd Division in Italy

The Call
5-4-45

By MAX JOHNSON
War Correspondent

WITH THE FIFTH ARMY IN ITALY. — Ten enlisted men, members of the 92nd Division, four of them easterners, were among the graduates in the second class last week of the newly established Officers Candidate School in the Mediterranean theater.

The newly commissioned second lieutenants are: Milton B. Sheppard, Baltimore, brother of Joe Sheppard, staff writer of the Afro-American, Washington; David W. Perkins, Washington; Clyde Bryant Jr., Montclair, N. J.; Thomas L. Gaines, New York city; Howard E. Mitchell, Indianapolis; Henry C. Cody, Tuscaloosa, Ala.; Arthur McClain, Rosedale, La.; Albert Berringer, Birmingham; Clarence W. Burks, Anniston, Ala.

These new officers, all former ranking sergeants in regiments throughout the 92nd Division, won commissions after completing the required six-week course at OCS.

The 92nd had no entries in the first graduating class six weeks ago and no colored from other outfits. 5-4-45

Some idea of the intensity of the training can be gathered from Second Lt. Sheppard, former Morgan college student, who in answering my query to this effect said simply, "Those instructors at that OCS don't know what sleep is."

Three combat promotions to rank of second lieutenants were awarded during the past week to members of the field artillery units with the 92nd Division.

Commissions were not for specifications but for "leadership qualities displayed over a long period." 5-4-45

These new officers are William Hobson, Homestead, Pa.; Robert T. Simpson, Anderson, S. C.; Thomas Bailey, Chicago.

These officers as well as the OCS graduates will continue service with their respective units.

First Negro naval officer in combat sfudied here

Los Angeles Tribune

Los Angeles California

RICHMOND, Va. — This city is proud to have given the country its first Negro officer of a Navy fighting ship, now in action in the Pacific.

He is Ensign Samuel Lee Gravely Jr., 23, son of a local man. He was here just prior to boarding his PC boat in Florida, spending his 20-day leave with his family.

Ensign Gravely was the first Negro to graduate from the midshipman's school. He was commissioned at Columbia university, graduating 349th in a class of 1,022.

8-13-45

Standing six feet, two inches tall and weighing 210 pounds, young Gravely played in the backfield on the University of California at Los Angeles football team and center field on the baseball nine while studying there under the Navy V-12 program.

He is studying the Japanese language in his spare time. His fellow officers on the PC boat, for which he is communications officer, are white men from Texas, Oklahoma, Michigan, and New York.

First Negro Chaplain Comes To The Pacific

the INFORMER Houston, Texas

NNPA War Correspondent

SOMEWHERE IN JAPAN.—One day before the Japanese decided to call its quits unconditionally, the several thousand Negro bluejackets on Guam got the answer to a fervent prayer in the person of Lt. (jg) James Russell Brown, USNR, of Witchita, Kans., the first Negro Navy chaplain to come to the Pacific.

9-22-45

Unfortunately the pell-mell rush Japanwards by the Correspondents Corps prevented more than a hurried half-hour talk with the former pastor of St. Luke AME church, Kansas City, but the new chaplain seemed filled with his mission, and exceptionally capable.

A former dean of the Bishop Williams School of Religion at Western university, Kansas City, Kansas, he is the husband of the former Melba Ruth Long of Wichita.

Chaplain Brown

Chaplain Brown, one of the two Negro chaplains in the Naval Reserve, is a graduate of Friends university, Wichita (AB, 1932) and Howard University School of Religion (BD, 1935). He entered the Chaplains School at Williams and Mary, Williamsburg, Va., in June, 1944, and was assigned after graduation to temporary duty at Washington, D. C., Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and New York City Naval installations before going to Great Lakes in September, 1944.

In June of this year he was transferred to Hollywood, California, on tempporary duty, where he appeared in the motion picture, "The Negro Sailor."

He arrived on Guam August 14 and will serve bluejackets at U. S. Naval Barracks No. 1.

Chaplain Brown preached his first overseas sermon aboard the L[illegible] transport that brought him to Guam and reported an enthusiastic reception from white troops en route to Okinawa.

His mother and her present husband, William E. Taylor, formerly dean of the Howard University Law School and more recently of the Lincoln University Law School, St. Louis, Mo., live at 1845 Kalorama Road, Northwest.

CARL F. FLIPPER BECOMES ENSIGN

Washington Tribune 9/15/45

Carl F. Flipper was one of the two Negroes in a class of 600 members of the twenty-fifth graduating class of the U.S. Naval Reserve Midshipmen's School in New York, last week, who received the rank of ensign.

Ensign Flipper will be remembered as a graduate of Dunbar High School and the son of Mrs. Pearl Christmas Flipper Taylor. The exercises were held in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

Ensign Flipper holds his master's degree from the University of Kansas, and is married to Mrs. Maureen Garrett Flipper, teacher at Wiley University, Marshall, Texas. He is the son of the Rev. Carl Flipper and the grandson of the late Bishop Flipper, prominent in the AME denomination.

CAMP LeJEUNE, N. C. (NNPA)—The Marine Corps commissioned its first Negro officer on the 170th Anniversary of the Corps, Saturday, November 10, when former Pfc. Frederick C. Branch, 23, of 305 West Second street, Charlotte, N. C., graduated a second lieutenant from the First Officers' Reserve Class, of the Officers' Applicant Battalion, at Hadnot Point here.

Enlisting in May, 1943, Branch trained at Montford Point Camp, Camp Lejeune, and was assigned to duty in the classification section of Montford's headquarters battalion for five months. In January, 1944, he joined the 51st Defense Battalion and served seven months overseas. He started V-12 training, at Purdue University in September, 1944, and completed the course with high scholastic honors.

On V-J Day, Branch was among the Marines given the alternative of being discharged immediately or attending the six-week Reserve Officers' Class.

He attended Frederick E. Bellows high school, Mamaroneck, N. Y., and Johnson C. Smith university, where he won the freshman award for scholastic achievement. He was a member of the Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity. Branch was a student at Temple university when he was drafted.

The Marine is married to the former Miss Camilla Robinson of 2518 North 22d street, Philadelphia, Pa. A graduate of Philadelphia's Girls' High, Mrs. Branch also attended Temple university.

Lt. Branch's parents, Rev. and Mrs. James Matthew Branch live at the Charlotte address. Rev. Branch, a minister for 30 years, is pastor of the Clinton Chapel AME Zion church of Charlotte.

Two brothers of the Marine are in service. Second Lt. Matthew D. Branch is serving with the 372d Army Infantry in the Pacific and Army First Sgt. Milton C. Branch is in Europe. William B., youngest of the four brothers, is a student at Northwestern university.

Senatr C. Wayland Brooks, junior senator from Illinois, addressed the class of 186 newly commissioned second lieutenants which included Lt. Branch. These officers are the first to complete the six-week Reserve Officers' class, inaugurated here in October. The course of instruction, a contraction of the regular Officers Candidate School at Quantic, Va., included weapons, tactics, law, administration and public speaking.

11-24-45

Lt. Branch plans to continue his studies at the University of Pennsylvania.

Negro Navy Officer Heads Supply Educational Program On Okinawa

OKINAWA — It's "M-Day" on Okinawa!

War-hardened veterans of General Stilwell's tough Tenth Army, courageous conquorers of Jap-held Okinawa, and members of the first and second marine divisions who are stationed at Chimu Wan, Tengan, Okinawa have begun a large scale war on monotony.

Rapid expansion of recreational, educational and athletic programs are underway, designed to help fleet bluejackets and those stationed at island bases use profitably their duty-off hours. 11-13-45

Many cargo planes and supply ships, which are not needed to transport war weapons, are now bringing athletic gear, photographic equipment, radios, radio-phonographs, musical instuments, books and educational materials to replace and enlarge stocks which have been on hand throughout the war.

Lt (jg) S. F. Barnes of Oberlin, Ohio, supply and educational officer for Logistic Support Co. 64, one of hte first Negroes to be commissioned in the Navy, has charge of the educational program. Detroit "Lions' former football star Lt. (jg) S. N Belichick, welfare and recreation officer has appointed Wm P. Honey, Sp (A) 1c, of Camden, N. J., acting director of his company's athletic activities.

Typhoon-wrecked baseball fields are being rebuilt by some able, experienced colored Seabees who were attached to the 10th Army. Among them are John Browskaw, Fle (motor machinist striker,) of Somerville, N J.; John Jiles, S2c, of Birmingham, Ala.; Keith Anderson S 2-c of New York City; James Bright S 2-c Chicago; James Antley S2c, of Columbus, Ga.; Sylvester Curley, Cox, of Baltimore, Md.; Armour Stamps, S 2-c of Hattiesburgh, Miss.; and Eligah Fields, S 2-c of Alexandria, La. Willie Johnson, CM3c, of San Francisco, Cal. is a key man in the carpentry gang.

Veterans here of many Pacific campaigns agree that the staging of "M-Day" (Morale Day) marks the beginning of the end of monotony while they are "sitting it out on the rock"-a-stone throw from Japan awaiting discharge from the armed forces.

Navy Commissions First Race Woman Ensign In Nurse Corps

Journal & Guide 3-17-45

NEW YORK—"I hope I am only the first of a large number of members of my race to join the Navy Nurse Corps," said Miss Phyllis Mae Daley, R.N., as she was commissioned an ensign, along with four other young women, Thursday morning, March 8, at the Office of Naval Officer Procurement, 33 Pine street, by Commander Thomas A. Gaylord, U.S.N. (retired), director of the office. She is the first Negro to become a member of the Navy Nurse Corps.

Miss Daley bore the limelight modestly, but confessed she was "proud and excited." She was born in New York and was graduated from the Lincoln Hospital School for Nurses in 1941. After her graduation, she worked at the Lincoln Hospital and Home, and at the New York Department of Health as a public health nurse. Immediately prior to her induction, she was taking a course in public health nursing at Teachers College, Columbia University. 3-17-45

FIVE OTHERS APPLY FOR COMMISSIONS

Mrs. Mabel K. Staupers, executive secretary of the National Association of Colored Graduate Nurses, who witnessed the commissioning ceremony, said that five other colored young women applied for commissions in the Navy Nurse Corps at the same time Miss Daley did, but she had not heard whether or not they had been accepted.

Miss Daley's mother, Mrs. Mary Daley, and aunt, Mrs. Rita Morris proudly looked on as she was worn in by Commander Thomas A. Gaylord, U. S. A., director of the office. 3-17-45

The new ensign will be assigned to duty within a few days at one of the two naval hospitals in the vicinity of New York—at St. Albans, Queens, or the New York Navy Yard, Brooklyn. She will receive six months' training in Navy hospital procedure before assignment elsewhere.

Miss Daley said, in answer to a question after the commissioning ceremony, that one did not ask for a specific assignment in the Navy, but that she "would not mind" going overseas.

34 Navy Negro Officers Now

Atlanta Daily World 1-30-45

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — The Navy Department revealed Thursday that there are now 34 Negro commissioned officers in the Naval service 31 of them are on active duty status and three on inactive status.

Other Negroes are being trained for commissions in the Navy's V-12 Program, it was revealed. The original number of Negroes commissioned in the Navy a few months ago was 13.

It was also learned that a number of combat vessels of the Navy have Negro personnel integrated into all ratings, a fact which previously has not been announced.

Fourth Negro Skipper Mans SS Bert Williams

Kopke's Voice 1-13-45

When Blidberg Rothchi'd Steamship Company, Inc., accepted delivery of the Liberty ship S.S. Bert Williams, the Recruitment and Manning Organization of War Shipping Administration suggested Capt. Clifton Lastic to be its master. Blidberg Rothchild accepted this suggestion thus making him the fourth Negro skipper in the American Merchant Marine to be in command of his own vessel.

Capt. Lastic, who had served as chief mate on the SS Booker T. Washington under Capt. Hugh Mulzac, another of the Negro skippers, is now somewhere at sea on the Bert Williams' first voyage to one of the war zones. The Bert Williams, built by the New England Shipbuilding Corporation and launched at South Portland, Me., was named after the late famed Negro comedian. 1-13-45

Capt. Lastic obtained his master's license last September after having spent about 30 of his 45 years at sea. Born in the British West Indies, he went to sea in the British Merchant Marine on a schooner at the age of 14 and served as an able seaman on British vessels during the last war. He began shipping on American vessels when he became an American citizen in 1937 and at that time was ready to sit for his chief mate's ticket.

WAS ON BOOKER T.

Captains Lastic and Mulzac are old friends, the two having sailed together as long ago as 1920 when Capt. Mulzac was chief mate and Capt. Lastic an able seaman. They had made seven trips together on the Booker T. Washington when Capt. Lastic came ashore for examination for his master's license. 1-13-45

Another Negro officer on the Bert Williams is Vernon Dunlap third mate, of Providence, RI.

CAPT. CLIFTON LASTIC

There is also a Negro able seaman in the crew, and a New Yorker, Boatswain Herbert Marley. 1-13-45

The Negro Actors Guild was instrumental in the naming of the SS Bert Williams, as a result of war bond sales organized by the guild toward the financing of a vessel for the American war-time merchant fleet. Hanging in the ship's salon is a framed biographical sketch and photograph of Mr. Williams, presented to the ship by that organization.

The captain took out the Bert Williams on her maiden voyage at a time when the National War Advertising Council was swinging into its present national newspaper and radio campaign to bring back to the industry more experienced former seamen and officers now working ashore. He gave enthusiastic approval to the campaign and spoke of the increasingly greater advantages in the industry, not only with respect to opportunities to contribute to final victory over the fascist powers, but postwar opportunities as well.

Four Negroes Now Command Vessels

Atlanta World Ga.

WASHINGTON, D. C.— (NNPA) — Four Negroes are now in command of Liberty Ships, according to the War Shipping Administration with the appointment of Capt. Clifton Lastic to the command of the new Liberty Ship SS Bert Williams. Capt. Lastic is now somewhere at sea on the maiden voyage of his ship. 1-11-45

He was previously chief mate of the SS Booker T. Washington commanded by Capt. Hugh Mulzac the first Negro to command such a vessel. Lastic obtained his masters' license last September, after spending 30 of his 45 years at sea He was born in the British West Indies, served with the British Merchant Marine at the age of 14 and as an able seaman on British vessels during the last war.

The crew of the SS Bert Williams is mixed. Another Negro Vernon Dunlap, is third mate, and there is a Negro able seaman in the crew.

GREAT LAKES, Ill.—Two Negro ensigns, Thomas Rowan, 110 Edgefield avenue, McMinnville, Tenn., and Theodore Chambers, 2116 Highland place, Indianapolis, Indiana recently commissioned under the Navy V-12 program are among the officers on temporary active duty under instruction here at the U. S. Naval Training Center. In the intensive course of indoctrination, the newly commissioned ensigns will receive training in the actual operation of 20mm. and 40mm. guns, fighting oil and gasolinefires under simulated battle conditions, and the supervision of recruits. 4-7-45

Ensign Chambers, age 24, had attended Howard University in Washington, D. C., for one and a half years when he volunteered for service in the U. S. Navy on October 16, 1943. Since he had been studying to become an architect he entered the SeaBees. When his recruit training was completed, he was assigned to the 80th Construction Battalion and sent to Trinidad in the British West Indies. On the basis of a competitive examination he took there, Chambers was chosen to return to the States and study in the Navy V-12 Program.

Navy Officers Get Anti-Bias Course

Afro-American 6-2-45

WASHINGTON—(ANP)—In an effort to win wider recognition for colored Naval personnel, the Navy Department, through its Bureau of Naval Personnel, is distributing a pamphlet, "Guide to Command of Colored Naval Personnel."

Intended as an indoctrinator and guide to white officers, the booklet was released within the department on Feb. 12, 1944, over the signature of Admiral Randall Jacobs, chief of the bureau.

In addition to discussing the history of the colored man in the Navy and "racial theories as a waste of manpower," the pamphlet takes up such questions as segregation, promotions, utilization of skills and sea duty.

Responsibility of Commanders

Stating unequivocally that "ultimate responsibility for working out solutions for specific questions must and does rest with local commanding officers," the document says at the outset:

"The Navy accepts no theories of racial differences in inborn ability but expects that every man wearing its uniform be trained and used in accordance with his maximum individual capacity determined on the basis of individual performance."

In a forthright statement on racial separation, the pamphlet declares, "The accomplishment of the assigned mission through the harmonious and efficient use of existing equipment and facilities should always be the objective of the commanding officer."

Offensive Signs Banned

Then minimizing the need for "separate but equal facilities," it declares, "Joint use of facilities is frequently possible and desirable, particularly where the ratio of colored to white personnel is not high." 6-2-45

Special reference is made to signs restricting the use of facilities to a particular race, the document pointing out that they are "especially offensive to colored persons and under no circumstances should they be used in the Naval establishment."

To Expand Use on Ships

The belief is also expressed that both white and colored personnel will accept a situation if the policy laid down by a commanding officer is impartial, fair and reasonable and if enforcement of it is made a reality.

Finally pointing out that colored seamen are assigned to sea duty on 25 auxiliary ships of the fleet up to 10% of the general service complement, and in all ratings, the pamphlet indicates that the procedure will be expanded.

NEW YORK — Two colored men were members of a graduating class of 1000 of the Naval Reserve Midshipmen's School, Fort Schuyler, the Bronx, who were commissioned ensigns in the U.S. Naval Reserve at ceremonies at 11 a.m. Tuesday in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

They are: Joseph L. Pierce, 352 Cairo St., Atlanta, Ga., and Howard D. Geper, 5948 Prairie Ave., Chicago. 7-14-45

The graduates left Fort Schuyler at 9:30 a.m. and filed into the Cathedral a few minutes before 11 a.m. to hear an address by Commodore John K. Richards, U.S.N. (Ret.), commander of the Naval Reserve Officer Training Center, N.Y.

The oath was administered by Capt. Arthur C. Stott, U.S.N. (Ret.), commanding officer of the school, who also presented the commissions to the men. The midshipmen's choir sang.

Pair "Outstanding Students"

Pierce and Geper were described as outstanding students during their four months of extensive training at Fort Schuyler by Lt. A. F. Holst the day before graduation. 7-14-45

"They were both above average in class," he told the AFRO, "and their spirit, co-operation, and entire academic career were well observed by the seasoned instructors of the U.S. Navy who wish them good luck and a successful cruise in their coming careers as commissioned officers of the U.S. Naval Reserve.

"They were exceptionally good men." 7-14-45

Scores of passersby, including many students of Columbia University, stopped to look at and admire the graduates in their trim uniforms as they filed out of the cathedral. The weather was clear and cool, a perfect day for the exercises.

Because they work difficult hours in war plants, the senior members of the unit have called on the juniors for important work. Under Elaine's leadership, the young people have been very active in salvage; they have made layettes, solicited for the Red Cross and the Community Chest, sold war stamps, and decorated the Booker T. Washington Service Center, where parties are held for men in the forces. In recognition of her service and ability, Elaine was elected by all four Richmond units to represent them on the executive board of the AWVS Greater New York Youth Council. As one of its activities, the Council holds forums on important subjects. One this year was on "How to Promote Better Relations Between the White and Negro Races." After this discussion, the Council proposed institution of a national "Inter-racial Week." To Elaine Morris and her fellow members of the AWVS Junior Auxiliary:

Three hundred Negro servicemen from Arlington County will receive Easter gifts this year through the efforts of the Arlington Negro Selective Service committee for recreation. 3-31-45

The committee, organized in October, 1941, by Mrs. Annie P. Belcher, has been a member agency of the Arlington Community Chest since 1943. The Arlington committee members not only provide recreational facilities for service men and women at home, but also keep in touch with them during their war service. Among gifts being sent for Easter are "foxhole" cigarette lighters and waterproof money belts.

NEGROES EXPECTED CONTRIBUTE 2,000 POUNDS TINCANS

Two thousand pounds of tin cans is the goal set by Fred A. Prince, county war salvage chairman for the all-negro tin can matinee at 10 o'clock Saturday morning, Ideal theatre.

"All of the colored people of our city and county, big and little, young and old, are urged to attend this free showing and bring their tin cans," Prince declared. "This is one way you can help to hasten victory and bring our boys home."

Admission to the one and one-half hour comedy will be four tin cans which have contained food. They must be cleaned and smashed in after the ends are cut out.

"It takes a tremendous amount of tin to keep our troops equipped and fighting," Prince said. "Only through salvage can these necessary materials be supplied."

Plans for the next big county-wide tin can drive to be held Aug. 5 are going forward. Restaurants of the city and county are again reminded that their co-operation is needed. "Only three restaurants, the Navarro Coffee Shop, George's Grill and Commercial Coffee Shop, co-operated in the last drive," Prince said.

Poll Shows Public Believes Negro Soldiers "Good"

The Memphis World
Memphis, Tennessee

CHICAGO—(ANP)—Most Americans, regardless of color, believe that Negroes proved good soldiers in World War II.

12-11-45

In the Negro Digest poll for December, a sampling of the population in cities across the nation indicated that the Negro soldier while not held in the highest esteem in some circles has won much admiration for his war record.

Results in the poll among persons of both Negro and white race on the query, "Are Negroes Good Soldiers?" were:

	Yes	No	Und.
North	74%	11%	15%
West	75%	8%	17%
South	62%	28%	10%

HEATED OPINIONS

The question on Negro soldiers generally aroused heated opinions, especially among cousthern gfo n y especially among southern whites and Negroes generally. However, the majority of whites in the North took pretty much for granted the good quality of the Negro in uniform felt that attacks on the Negro soldier were mostly Dixie inspired.

Southern whites on the other hand felt the Negro would not stand up under fire and should be relegated to separate labor battalions. Many spoke of the "bad record" of the 92nd division or "that colored outfit in Italy." Results among whites canvassed in the poll on "Are Negroes Good Soldiers?" were:

12-11-45

	Yes	No	Und.
North	69%	12%	19%
West	73%	6%	21%
South	30%	58%	12%

OWI Drops Negro Worker In London

Chicago Ill. Defender

WASHINGTON — Miss Edna Fraser, the only Negro employee of the Office of War Information in London is scheduled to be dropped from the payroll September 16, it was reliably learned by the Defender.

Following President Truman's decision to abolish OWI and transfer remaining operations to the State Department, the British Division, in which Miss Fraser was employed is being incorporated wholesale in the State Department. Miss Fraser who has been attached to the unit for approximately one year will be let out.

Her release is significant in the light of increased pressure to augment Negro civilian personnel abroad.

9-15-45

Where responsibility for the release can be placed has not been immediately ascertainable. Miss Fraser is a resident of New York City and considered an accomplished linguist.

Richmond Tops Entire Nation In Negro OPA Volunteers

The Richmond Times Dispatch Richmond, Virginia
9-22-45

The Richmond OPA District has more volunteer Negroes serving on the War Price and Rationing Boards than any other district in the country, according to a report received by the local OPA office.

A total of 83 Negroes or 6.2 per cent of the total board membership are serving in the Richmond district. Runner-up in the region is Charlotte, N. C., where 68 Negroes represent 2.9 per cent of the board membership. Jackson, Miss., Birmingham, Ala., and Roanoke have no Negroes on the boards while Nashville, Tenn., has two, Raleigh, N. C., 10 and Memphis, 12.

New York has 65 Negro board members, Washington, 34, Baltimore, 22, and Philadelphia, 13. Detroit has 73; Louisville, 3; New Orleans, Dallas and Shreveport, none.

The Fourth region, of which Richmond is a part, has 313 Negroes on the board as compared with three in region one; 161 in region two; 112 in region three; 28 in region five; 45 in region six; six in region seven; and 19 in region eight.

Of the Negroes serving in the Fourth region, 126 are professional worker, 30 clerical, six organized labor and 15 housewives.

OPA SETS PACE FOR U.S. IN EMPLOYMENT OF NEGROES

Chicago Defender
Chicago, Ill.

By VENICE T. SPRAGGS
(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON.—The integration of Negro personnel at every level of employment in the Office of Price Administration is cited as an example of democracy in administration unparalleled in any Federal agency.

11-10-45

Out of a total of 3,723 employees in the OPA national office as of March 31, 1945, thirteen per cent, or 493 of these employees were Negroes, Frances H. Williams, special assistant to Administrator Chester Bowles, told the Defender this week.

Miss Williams said that Negroes are integrated into all levels and branches of the organization with a sizeable percentage earning salaries ranging from $2000 to $5600 annually. She said the agency employed nine Negro lawyers, two of whom receive salaries of $5600, while two others receive $4600, one $3800, three $3200 and one $2600.

She pointed out that while more than half of the OPA's Negro employees are in a clerical classification with a salary range of $1400 to $2000, they are integrated without regard to race, working side by side with members of other races doing similar work. Moreover, they eat, and enjoy recreational and other facilities of the building together.

This integration didn't grow, Miss Williams said, but came about as a result of a positive enunciation of policy by Administrator Bowles.

Name Negro Leaders For Sugar Rationing

Atlanta World - Ga.

4-4-45

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — (SNS) — A new 'high' in integration of Negroes into community life of Memphis was reached this week with the appointment of a group of prominent leaders to food panel membership under the local district of the Office of Price Administration.

Twelve men took oath of office administered by G. P. Friedel, Board Executive, at Booker T. Washington High School Tuesday night of this week.

Mrs. Friedel joined with other representatives of the OPA in stressing to the men the great responsibility as well as honor which has been accorded you on the basis of our confidence that you are men of good character, with a sense of fair-play and honesty, and who will appreciate the opportunity to serve your country, and race!"

The Negro members of the Memphis Panel handling commodities will be charged primarily with the matter of administering the rationing of sugar for canning and preserving among local Negro residents.

4-4-45

Their powers will be full and equal to those of members of any similar panels in the city, it was pointed out. They will be charged with the responsibility of deciding on the amount of sugar which will be allowed to thousands of Negro residents of Memphis.

Atty. Perry Pipkin, chairman of the panel on which the men will serve, related the fact that there will be an increased reduction in the amount of sugar which will be alloted to Americans this year, along with the desire to dissipate possible charges of discrimination led to the appointment of the Negro members to the local panel.

Mr. Pipkin disclosed that three Negro schools will be used in the near future for the registration of applications for canning and preserving sugar. Senior students at Booker T. Washington Hi School Manassas, and Melrose Hi Schools will be used in the registration. They will be given special training on procedures for aiding family heads in the filing of applications for sugar. The applications will then be turned over to the Negro panel, which will have the final 'say" as to whether or not the applications will be approved or rejected, or whether or not the amount requested will be reduced.

Supt. E. C. Ball of the Memphis School System consented to the use of the schools as receiving and distributing centers for sugar and suggested Prof. B. T. Hunt of Washington Hi School to aid the OPA in selecting its first Negro rationing panel.

4-4-45

The men named include: M. W Bonner of the Universal Life Insurance Co.; Prof. Blair T. Hunt, Washington High School, principal Frank Kilpatrick, president of the Dixie Homes Credit Union; W. F. Nabors, Dixie Homes Housing manager; Dr. R. Q. Venson of the American Legion and the Memphis Cotton-makers Jubilee; Rev. J L Campbell, pastor of St. Stephens Bapt. Church; H. O. Oates, Foote Homes Housing manager; Robert Jones, business agent of the Negro Carpenters' Union Local 1986; T. O. Fuller, Jr. LeMoyne Gardens housing manager; J. A. Beauchamp Boy Scout Executive; Robt. Wright local business man and Orange Mound leader; and Utillus Phillips railway mail clerk and president of the Memphis NAACP Branch.

Detailed instructions in their responsibilities were given the men by members of the Sugar rationing panel who accompanied Mr. Pipkin to the Tuesday night meeting.

The new men were emphatically told of the great responsibility they had consented to assume. Theirs will be one of the the few rationing panels composed of Negroes in the entire South. The three best known such groups are located in Richmond, Va., Jacksonivlle, Fla.

It was emphasized that Negro members of the sugar panel have full authority accept or reject applications. It was District rationing administrator F. M. Nash who described their role as similar to that of "Police Court Judges who must consider the cases before them, both from the standpoint of law and from the standpoint of justice, fair-play, and honesty?"

Regulations governing of sugar were explained in detail to the new panel members by Mr. Stewart of the Sugar Rationing Division, Memphis Commodity Rationing Panel.

Mr. Stewart prefaced his remarks with the observation that "You are rationing your neighbors to conserve short commodities. You have been appointed full-fledged members of an OPA rationing panel. You have a really important function and a great responsibility. Last year people rushed up and got all of the sugar they could use. Last year during the canning season 1,100,00 pounds of sugar were available. This year there will be only 700,000 pounds. It will be your job to see that a fair and equitable distribution of this available sugar is given to your neighbors. You know more about your own people than anyone else. You know your neighbors and you know their needs. It is your prerogative to grant any application that you see fit!"

White rationing board members on panels rationing gasoline, food and other commodities added their voices to the instructions given the newly appointed Negro ration board members, and lent credibility to the impression that this pioneer Negro rationing group may soon be rationing other commodities in addition to sugar.

The first functioning of the Negro rationing Board will be attended by white members of the original panel who will assist them in getting their 'bearings" and in handling the great volume of sugar applications expected from a local Negro population of some 145,000 persons.

OPA succeeds in setting up price control in Puerto Rico

Los Angeles Tribune Cal.

1-1-45

WASHINGTON—The Office of Price Administration is doing a remarkably thorough job in controlling prices in the Territory of Puerto Rico, according to an OPA report.

Through a network of more than 5,000 persons, everybody on the island has been contacted and is aware of his responsibilities. The community service member of each of the 88 local boards represents the executive officer of the consumer committee in his municipality. As each central committee is formed and put on a working basis, it is given the responsibility of organizing subcommittees in each of the 792 "barrios," or settlements in the municipalities.

1-1-45

The fundamental principles of price control were as foreign to the Puerto Ricans as our language. In fact, more so—because they were accustomed to bargaining methods—which is a far cry from legal price ceilings. The island was in the midst of its worst depression when price control was introduced. The Puerto Ricans were experiencing no industrial benefits from the war—but were forced to buy in the inflated markets caused by a boom in the States. The average income of a Puerto Rican family in 1942 was only $265 a year, while even the poorest income groups in the U.S. were making $500 to $600—and the U.S. average was $1900. Besides, food represented about 60 per cent of their budget, as compared to 40 per cent here. Bargaining for a cent or two a pound on such basic foods as rice, flour, corn meal, codfish, fat-backs and lard often meant the difference of whether they ate or not.

1-1-45

The OPA staff is about 95 per cent Puerto Rican—and of the continentals, all but 2 have lived on the island for long periods. Since the majority of adults, including the retailers and consumers, read and speak English with great difficulty—if at all—information materials must be printed in Spanish and much of it in both English and Spanish. All division directors except the price executive, are Puerto Ricans—and each is completely bi-lingual, handling public appearances, conferences, interviews and correspondence in either language, as the case requires.

OPA Suing Owners Of Shacks Near Fort Huachuca For Overcharging

Last week's action continues OPA's "cleanup" of bad rental

TUCSON, Ariz.—The owners of practices around the Fort where frame, corrugated iron and tar paper shacks around Fort Huachuca, are being sued by the Office of Price Administration, which last week filed suits in the Arizona Federal Court for treble damages amounting to more than $11,290 for alleged overcharges on the houses rented to Negro soldiers stationed at the Fort, and their families, OPA announced this week.

The cleanup of rent gouging around Fort Huachuca began last August and resulted in rent reductions amounting to $33,500 which was paid back to Negro soldiers and their families. All other landlords except the Frys are said to have complied with the OPA order requiring rent reductions and

The investigation, undertaken by Leland Glazier, OPA investigator in Tucson, revealed that the families were required to live in the shacks with only the barest conveniences, for rentals which ranged fom $25 a month to $75 and $100 a month before OPA stepped in. Refunds have been made continuously since the investigation began, but OPA said hundreds of dollars still remain unclaimed by the soldiers, many of whom are at the battlefronts.

$100.00 A Month For Shacks Like These

Philadelphia Tribune Pa. 3-17-45

Negro soldiers at Ft. Huachuca, Ariz., paid $75 and $100 a month for shacks like those above in order to have their families near them. The OPA has cracked down on the rent-gougers and has already secured refunds of $1300 in rent overcharges. The OPA this week filed action to secure three times the amount of other rent overcharges paid by members of the 92nd Division now in Italy. —(Official Army Signal Corps Photo from OWI.)

NAACP Official Testifies Before Group In Senate

Ga. Atlanta World 3-21-45

Costs More To Shop In Harlems Of The Nation

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (SNS) — In urging the establishment of the Price Control and Stabilization Act under which OPA operates, Leslie Perry of the Washington Bureau NAACP, charged among other things in his testimony before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, violation of rent ceilings on part of landlords in Negro neighborhoods and the negligible lack of attention to this problem by OPA. 3-21-45

Pointing to this single reservation which could be eliminated through appropriate surveys made with a view to better enforcement, Perry declared, "the NAACP heartily endorses the continuation of the present program."

Basing the major part of his testimony on experience reported by NAACP branches all over the country, Perry said, "I can say that the overwhelming majority of our membership appreciates the importance of price control legislation and is heartily in favor of an extended and strengthened Price Control Act. Without the controls in force today by virtue of this Act, the cost of living during World War II would have spiraled just as it did in 1917-18."

BEYOND THE LAW

"A problem that is peculiar to the Negro in this whole question flows from restricting Negroes to overcrowded, segregated neighborhoods. As natural product of this practice, which obtains for the most part in urban centers throughout the United States, is the distinct economic disadvantage that he suffers as a consumer.

"Landlords and operators of retail food stores in Negro neighborhoods have been prone to regard such segregated neighborhoods as beyond the pale of the law insofar as observing price ceilings is concerned. In this connection, surveys made sometime ago by our branches in New York City and Chicago disclosed that Negro shoppers in their neighborhoods must pay considerably more for foodstuffs than persons in comparable white neighborhoods.

3-21-45 EDGE UP PRICE

"In New York, for example, it was found that a Negro family of four pays an average of 5 per cent more for the privilege of shopping in Harlem and in Chicago such a family pays roughly 8 percent more. From all reports, these conditions are typical of differentials obtaining in most urban centers with a substantial large Negro population."

Off Limits for Negroes

At Nantwich, England, very near the 19th Repl. Depot there was a Red Cross club, but Negro soldiers were warned the town was off limits to them. When on pass they had to travel 25 miles to Crew, where there was no club.

Luxembourg City boasts quite a luxurious ARC club. One shiny little hostess with straw colored hair refers to Negroes in face-to-face contacts as "niggers" but becomes cagy and tight-lipped when questioned, refusing to give her name. Her slow, heavy drawl nevertheless reveals her origin.

Accepted as Jimcrow

Several months ago Brig. Gen. Benjamin O. Davis Sr., in dedicating a Red Cross Club in Paris, said, "In the name of 13,000,000 Negroes I accept this club," which leaves no doubt it was designed as a segregated unit. One ARC official taking issue with this interpretation explained the club was not a segregated one. It was, he declared, an "exclusive" center for Negroes.

Mobile ARC unit traveling from company to company dispensing coffee and doughnuts are accompanied by two white NCOs from special services whose presence arouses resentment among many enlisted men. Maybe they're super-sensitive but rightly or wrongly their attitude is the non-coms are present to "protect the innocent missionaires from the wicked cannibals."

The girls in all fairness feign friendship, but seem to have little real love for their work with tan Yanks. Though hot jazz records are played during service when asked to dance the girls have a headache, sprained foot or just aren't "feeling well." As a whole ARC girls are the unhealthiest group of Americans in the ETO.

Whatever the exact reason is, it is a fact ARC girls are nervous and inhibited by artificial restraints thus spoiling the fun for Negro troops.

On the other hand Club Canebiere in Marseilles directed by Mrs. Henrine Ward Banks of Chicago and London is a laboratory in democracy. Whites, Negroes, Filipinos, Mexicans, all races and colors of Americans cavort there in a spirit of good will and fine fellowship.

Discriminatory Practices of Red Cross on Guam Revealed

The Afro American, Baltimore, Md.

By HARRY McALPIN 11-3-45

SAIPAN—(NNPA)—The humane, publicly supported American Red Cross has received a disfiguring black eye in the Pacific area among colored service men as result of the manner in which its non-discriminatory policies set down in Washington are ignored. 11-3-45

At Guam, Capt. G. W. Bauremschmidt, supply officer in command of the Navy supply depot, has approximately 7,000 enlisted personnel, roughly 2,000 of whom are colored men.

In an effort to increase recreational facilities and avoid a repetition of the tensions which gave rise to the Guam riot of last December, he requested a number of Red Cross workers, one-third of whom should be colored.

In response to his memorandum, Acting Area Director Grayson of the Red Cross, now transferred to the Philippines, refused to fill the request for both colored and white workers.

All-White Workers Offered

He offered to send white women Red Cross workers for the white camps in the Naval supply depot and white men for the colored camp.

He balked at sending colored women, who might be quartered in the same compound with white women.

At one stage of the conversation, the captain declared that Grayson urged him to submit a separate request for the white and colored workers.

The captain said he refused, fearing that one request would be honored and not the other. He was adamant that he would not take white workers without the colored workers. The request is still unfilled.

Seamen Tell of Bias

Other Naval installations on the island of Guam have white Red Cross workers and Red Cross huts. The organization also has a number of mobile units which serve doughnuts and coffee to the island personnel. 11-3-45

Invariably on both Guam and Saipan, the colored service men report that these mobile units have never stopped to serve them.

This discriminatory practice, which is reminiscent of the complaints made by colored soldiers in World War I, was believed to have been discarded, according to reports of Red Cross activities in Europe during this war.

USO Has Better Record

The discovery of these practices in the Pacific emphasizes the comment of Lester Granger, Urban League executive secretary and personal representative of the Secretary of the Navy, at a press conference in Washington following his tour of Naval installations on the West Coast.

At that time, when asked whether the Naval recreation program was handled by the Red Cross, he answered, "Thank God, no."

The USO, which generally operates with the Navy and which has a much better record of service in the Pacific, does not maintain clubs and workers other than traveling shows beyond Pearl Harbor.

Behind the Scenes

The Afro American Baltimore, Md.

By RALPH MATTHEWS

WASHINGTON

Red Cross Has Pains

Keep your gossip ear peeled for trouble in American Red Cross circles when Jesse O. Thomas gets back to the States.

Ater V-J Day Jesse went on a tour of Europe to study plans for the occupation period and to revamp the whole club program.

It was his belief that both the soldier and the civilian population would have changed attitudes after victory, and the Red Cross had to readjust its thinking accordingly.

But when Jesse walked into some of his clubs, his key workers walked out. They thought Jesse was snooping and carried a well-concealed hatchet in his brief case. 12-10-45

They also took the attitude that Jesse, if he came at all, should have come over while the going was tough instead of remaining safely at home and barging in after the shooting was over.

Paris Director Mum

We don't know yet how many workers took a powder, but it is significant that the day Jesse arrived in Paris, stately Margaret Simms, one of the more accomplished program directors, took the next boat home, but she won't talk. 12-17-45

It may be kept in the top drawer, but some of the male club heads had a gay life while looking after the boys. One Bluebeard showed his feminine assistants a hard way to go unless they knew how to say "yes" and proved it.

Another got in a jam with the townspeople of an Italian village when he wined and dined the village belles too much and forgot that the age of consent is the same there as it is here. Some mothers raised the deuce.

Had Secret Hideout

Another ran afoul of his superiors when he could not explain why he maintained a lavishly furnished secret hideout in addition to his registered address.

All these things Jesse will probably look into, and don't be surprised if some of our social workers get the sack for putting the wrong emphasis on the word "social."

2 NEGRO MUSICIANS AID RED CROSS FUND

Mayme Richardson, Soprano, and Bruce Wendell, Pianist, Give Recital at Town Hall

4-23-45

Mayme Richardson, Negro soprano, and Bruce Wendell, Negro pianist, gave a joint recital at Town Hall late yesterday afternoon to raise funds for the American Red Cross 1945 War Fund drive under the auspices of the New York Inter-Racial Opera Association. Miss Richardson sang numbers by Hummel, Gluck, Verdi, Schubert, Wagner, Coleridge-Taylor, Bureligh, Hall Johnson and Landon Ronald. Mr. Wendell's program comprised works by Schubert, Schumann, Chopin and Liszt.

Miss Richardson revealed a lovely natural voice, aided by excellent production and a general vocal technique that resulted in reliable intonation and a flexible tone. She sang with taste, simplicity and accordingly effective feeling, notably the "Ave Maria" from Verdi's "Otello" and Schubert's "Du bist die Ruh." She also displayed power and dignity in "Dich teure Halle," from Wagner's "Tannhaeuser," with fine forte tones in the higher register. Leo Taubman was the able occompanist. 4-23-45

Mr. Wendell showed musical intelligence and feeling of a high order, playing with reserve and simplicity, with an unusually fine fundamental tone and nice coloring and shading. The opening Variations on a Theme by Anselm Huettenbrenner, by Schubert, was set forth with adequate technique and sound interpretation, and the Schumann Kinderscenen were poetically played. Mr. Wendell's performance was marred seriously yesterday by nervousness, which produced wrong notes, jerky tempo and bad memory lapses, in spite of all of which his genuine art achieved a real success. The Red Cross Has Novel Way to Indicate Race

6-16-45

Paris has 17 U.S. Red Cross clubs. Four are for officers, one for women and another for Wacs.

No club is marked "colored," but the Red Cross issues a map showing the locations of the clubs. When it comes to the Potomac Club on Lyon Street, it marks it thus:

Potomac Club (Negro Staffed).

BALTIMORE

Miss Ahnastasia E. Scott of Roanoke, Va., and Chicago, Ill., who went to England two years ago as a Red Cross worker and did everything from "soup to nuts" as assistant club director, is now going to St. Louis, Mo., to recruit girls for overseas duty.

1-27-45

In two years, Miss Scott, who was the guest of Bishop and Mrs. M. H. Davis, 815 N. Arlington Avenue, worked in Red Cross clubs in Liverpool, Bristol, Cheltenham and Salisbury, all in England.

For seven months she worked on a clubmobile, taking donuts, cigarettes, chewing gum and coffee to the boys in the "mud holes" who couldn't get to the nearest town because of duty, she related.

Operated Home on Wheels

In the back of her clubmobile was a lounge, with the latest records, soft easy chairs and the front was composed of a modernized kitchen. "This meant so much to the boys," she said.

Although she seldom went to London which, according to her, had everything, Miss Scott had her most frightening experience there.

She tells how on one trip bombs fell so close to where she was staying that they rocked the house. "It just gives you a feeling of helplessness," she said.

Being assistant director of a Red Cross club meant to Miss Scott, daughter of the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Scott of Roanoke, planning dances, parties and tours for servicemen and hiring and firing British workers.

She had to live on lamb, roast beef, cabbage and sprouts like the British, but American service men got good food shipped from the United States, she said.

In Salisbury, Miss Scott lived in the home of a former music teacher whose sister washed their clothes, shined their shoes and cooked for them as if they were a part of the family. It was here she remembers so vividly the requirement of 5 inches of water for a bath. 1-27-45

U.S. Whites Bring Prejudice

Asked about the prejudice in England, Miss Scott said that basically there was none unless the American whites moved into an area before colored did.

In one place, she said, her secretary asked if she married a colored man and then later married a white man, would her baby by her second husband be black.

Although she is not going back, Miss Scott exclaimed: "It was really marvelous. I would not take a million dollars for it; but two years are enough."

RED CROSS almost had its insides (gut to you, John Henry) torn out with growing pains. Here liberalism and reaction met in mortal combat.

Liberalism got cagy, capable Jesse O. Thomas in as assistant to the vice chairmen who do the work. Jesse, who moves in a way mysterious to both radicals and "Toms" his wonders to perform, got Negroes in as club directors and workers, clerks, secretaries and such. 9-8-45

Reaction hasn't given up, and held out 'til the last with Army on the Jim Crow blood matter. It also tried openly at first, then subtly to segregate the clubs for the GIs. Chief reason it couldn't was that white boys insist on going to the Negro-staffed clubs because the cooking and entertainment is better. Incidentally, on this, Jesse O. Thomas has just had reference to "certain clubs staffed by Negro workers for the convenience of Negro servicemen," deleted from a Red Cross booklet-manuel. 9-8-45

Jesse O. will take a tour of the overseas clubs shortly, but in his quaint Latin manner he says: "This is the last half of the ninth inning," and before he goes he is pushing for at least one Negro on faculty for the Red Cross training school, and opportunities for training and use of Negro medical pyschiatrists.

There are many serious things still wrong with Red Cross, but we pause in midst of our pants kicking to give both R. C. and Jesse O. a pat on the back.

Negro GIs Snub U. S. Jim Crow Pool In India; Swim With British Troops

Chicago Defender, Ill.

7-28-45

BY DETON J. BROOKS
(Defender War Correspondent)

CALCUTTA, India.—Refusing to use the Jim Crow Calcutta GI swimming pool on "Negro day," colored soldiers stationed here are swimming at the British-operated pool around the corner.

Red Cross workers have charged their organization with supporting the Army's policy of segregation.

Use of the Army pool on the days set aside for Negro GIs has been practically nil. According to best available figures, less than 20 per day have used the facilities, effecting an almost perfect boycott—this in spite of the fact that swimming is a cherished luxury in the India heat.

Negroes Snubbed On July 4

To add insult to injury, the Negro Red Cross club Cosmos was excluded from participation in the mammoth July 4th celebration sponsored by the white Red Cross clubs of the city at the pool. In protest and indignation, the entire program staff of Cosmos refused to work on that day, and sent a letter to Red Cross headquarters charging racial discrimination.

As a result the whole group, consisting of Geraldine Smith, Chicago, assistant program director, and staff assistants Eloise Ligon, New York City; Mary Robinson, Youngstown, Pa.; Inda Lee, Memphis; Bertha Shaw, New York; Wimlie Lee Johnson, Austin, Tex.; and Alice Johnson, Connecticut, were called before Assistant Director Thomas Irving, and Regional Supervisor, James Paxton.

In their letter to headquarters, the women gave the following reasons for their stand:

"Each of us as an American feels a personal indignation whenever one or all of us are segregated or discriminated against as Negroes. The American Red Cross—though working in close relationship with the American military forces — gave each American Red Cross employee in Washington the assurance that the American Red Cross itself did not discriminate or segregate.

Relieved From Duty

"Excluding the Cosmos club and its staff from activities planned by the other two Red Cross installations in Calcutta is a violation of this assurance. July 4th is a day long honored and respected by Negroes as well as other Americans for its significance to democracy and the principles upon which our government was founded. Such a day's celebration involving Americans anywhere on the face of the globe becomes an insult to whatever minority group is excluded from participation."

Following on the heels of this protest three of the staff assistants were called in this week for alleged "inefficiency." One was permanently relieved from duty at the club, and temporarily reassigned to Regional headquarters on the recommendation of Boyd Overton, Cincinnati, elderly director of Cosmos club.

Overton and Mrs. Caroline Lewis, Little Rock, Ark., assistant director, were the only two Negro workers at the club who did not participate in the July 4th protest.

7-28-45

Paxton, regional supervisor, emphatically denied to this correspondent that action against these young women was connected with their protest, but Overton admitted that in his opinion this may have been in part the reason.

The remaining four members of the program staff who were not called on for supervisory action state that they already tendered their resignations to the Red Cross in this theatre charging discrimination, and are awaiting travel orders home.

While there have been only one or two sporadic out-breaks by Negro soldiers concerning this Jim Crow policy, tension still runs high among several thousand Negro soldiers stationed in the Calcutta area, plus the others coming into town daily on rest furloughs.

Lester Granger Hits Red Cross in Navy Press Report

Washington Tribune
Washington, D.C.

Declaring that he would hate to have the Red Cross come into hte Navy program with the Red Cross segregation program's setup for the Army, Lester Granger told a press conference in Washington last week, that "the Navy is so far in front of the Army it isn't funny."

Lester Granger, executive secretary of the National Urban League told a press conference at the Navy Department last week about his 3-week inspection tour of naval installations as a special representative of the Secretary of the Navy, James Forrestal.

7-31-45

The Navy is now doing things which the Army insists would be bad for morale, he declared. He accused the Army of trying to build two armies, one black and one white, whereas the Navy has realized that is impractical.

Granger reported that his tour included twelve naval stations, bases and depots in four Naval Districts, where he found about 3000 Negroes in the total naval personnel. He left Washington on June 18 and returned on July 6. The trip took him over a stretch of naval establishments from San Diego to Seattle and across to the Great Lakes Training School and back to New York. He was accompanied by Lieutenant R. P. Roper of the Navy.

Sound Policy

7-31-45

Commenting on his impression of the execution of the Navy's policy toward integration of Negroes, he said he considered the policy "adequately sound". His impressions, he stated, were the result of talking to Negro petty officers and seamen, and to their commanding officers.

"I found that the policy itself, while being formulated and promulgated in Washington, is being accepted in good spirit by the various Naval Districts. It is being intelligently and honestly administered in the headquarters of the Districts I visited," he declared. "In no instance did I have reason to suspect resistance to the policy. There was an evident pride in the signs of success."

7-31-45

Assignment to Ships

Concerning recreation, Granger said he would hate to have the Red Cross come into the Navy program with the Red Cross segregation programs set up for the Army. Recreational needs are taken care of by the Navy with the assinstance of the USO, he declared. "It demonstrates again how far wrong some of the other agencies are in saying Negroes and whites cannot amuse themselves together without riots and friction."

Assignment of Negroes to warships? For a long time, he declared, Negroes were resentful of being assigned to shore duties. They felt humiliated at being assigned to loading ammunition instead of being put on ships naval bases in the Pacific at request of the Secretary. 7-31-45

There is every hope, he said, that this program will be expanded.

Mr. Granger, who has had two conferences with Secretary Forrestal since his return from his continental inspection tour, said in the fall he will make a simi-

First Red Cross Negro Hospital Unit Assigned to Oversea Base

Journal & Guide Norfolk, Va.

SOMEWHERE IN NEW GUINEA—By Courier—For the first time in the annals of the American Red Cross, a Negro hospital unit has been assigned overseas to be attached to the 268 Station Hospital commanded by Major Arthur H. Simmons, somewhere in New Guinea.

Prior to arriving in these parts, the unit had been in the employ of the American Red Cross at the Regional Hospital at Fort Huachuca, Arizona, and is experienced in its respective educational fields to perform the work to which it has been assigned.

The unit is composed of Miss Alma M. Priestly, assistant field director, formerly of New Orleans, La.; Miss Elizabeth P. Green, hospital recreation worker, of Pittsburgh, Pa., and Miss Esther M. Baker, secretary, of Champaign, Ill.

MISS PRIESTLY 1-20-45

Miss Priestly was a recipient of a $1,000 Julius Rosenwald Fellowship to study social work, and is a graduate of the Atlanta School of Social Work, and Xavier University at New Orleans. She is a member of the American Association of Social Workers, and the American Association of Medical Social Workers, as well as a member of the Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority.

She has served as medical social worker in Flint Goodridge Hospital at New Orleans and case consultant and director for the New Orleans Housing Authority. Prior to her entering the field of medical social work with the Red Cross at Fort Huachuca, she was director of the National Catholic Community Service USO activities at Des Moines, Iowa.

Miss Priestly is the daughter of Mrs. Eugenia P. Priestly of Los Angeles, and the late Edward A. Priestly.

MISS GREEN 1-20-45

Miss Elizabeth Green is the daughter of John C. Green and the late Mrs. Bertie Green, well-known actress of Pittsburgh, Pa. She attended Howard University in Washington, D. C., Henery George School of Social Economics, New York City, and New York School of Recreation.

WILL RECRUIT RED CROSS WORKER—Jesse O. Thomas, assistant to the Administrator of General Services, American Red Cross, congratulates Miss Daisy Carry of Philadelphia on her appointment as assistant to the director of employment, American Red Cross. Recently returned from Great Britain, where she served for two years as assistant director of a Red Cross Club, Miss Carry has been assigned to the North Atlantic area office headquarters in New York City, to recruit Negro personnel for overseas duty.

She is a member of the National Association of Recreation Workers in America, also a member of the Alpha Chapter, Delta Sigma Theta Sorority.

She served six years prior to coming into the Southwest Pacific as social case worker for the New York Department of Welfare. In 1935 she was recommended to work on the mayor's committee as investigator of conditions in Harlem. She has worked as recreational therapist at Bellvue Hospital in New York, specializing in program for the neuropsychiatric patients. She was assigned to the Red Cross staff at Fort Huachuca in August, 1942, as hospital recreation worker, and is carrying on in splendid style out here where the comforts of home are things to dream about.

MISS BAKER 1-20-45

Miss Esther Baker was formerly claims consultant and staff aide at Fort Huachuca. Before her employment with the Red Cross she was employed in the accounting department at Southern Pacific and Merchants Express Corp., San Francisco. Miss Baker attended the University of Illinois and is the daughter of H. E. Baker of Chicago, Ill., and Mrs. Stella Lyde of Urbana, Ill.

Recently, the patients were thrilled by a special program put on by a group of Seabees, among whom were some famous amusement greats of more peaceful times. 1-20-45

Participation in a snappy program of musical renditions and fast-moving skits were:

"Boley" Garnett, saxaphonist, formerly with Ella Fitzgerald's chestra; Teddy Barnett sang popular numbers, and Lennie Warren, a guitarist carried the soldiers right home with his hot licks. And there were others, A. L. Adams, saxaphonist; Jimmie Jordan, trumpet player; James Parker, pianist; "Cuba," bass player; and Curtis Staleway, drummer.

Joseph Aiken and Claude Jones, better known as "Moke and Poke," comedians who kept the patients in stitches.

No Place in Red Cross for Nearo Kids

Daily Worker, N. Y., N. Y.

By LOLA PAINE

The Red Cross, which waxed tearful over captive Nazis, can't manage to rouse itself over a U. S. serviceman's two homeless kids. The two kids, Brenda Minott, one-year-old and Richard, two, are just out of luck. Their mother, Mrs. Dorothy Minott, 20, whose husband is in Guam, is trying desperately to place them until she can find a job—and an apartment.

Maybe it's that they're Negro.

"The Red Cross told me they had vacancies for white children but none for colored," Mrs. Minott said. "They're supposed to have places for white and colored children."

10-20-45

Mrs Minott and the children were living with her mother, but circumstances forced her to leave. She was frantic.

"First I went to the 77th Police Precinct here Brooklyn," she said, "and they sent me to 295 Flatbush Extension, stating that it was a shelter and that the kids could stay there. It turned out to be a child health clinic, not a shelter."

The clinic, she said, called the Red Cross, Brooklyn chapter, which told her to come over.

"After I talked with the Red Cross for a couple of hours, they said they don't have vacancies for colored children," she told us. "When I asked, 'If I deserted the children, you'd find a place to keep them, wouldn't you?' they said "yes."

Mrs. Minott has no notion of deserting her children, she pointed out. She just wanted to see what the answer would be. That answer was clear: she would be helped only if she did what she considered a "crime."

10-20-45

Then she went back to the police headquarters with the same question.

She was told that if she deserted the children, the police would find a place for them. But she was also told she would be arrested if she did. Otherwise the police could do nothing for her.

10-20-45

The upshot is that little Brenda has been taken in for a few days by Mrs. Minott's friend, Mrs. Mary Skanks of the Ft. Greene Housing Project, and Richard is at another friend's house. Mrs. Minott sleeps elsewhere, never in the same place two nights.

When we talked to her at the housing project, we learned that the friend taking care of Richard couldn't do it anymore.

Mrs. Minott feels the Red Cross is discriminating against her. She remembers that the Red Cross segregates blood from Negroes and whites.

"I feel that they don't do anything for colored people at all," she said.

The problem still is — where to place the children so that she can look for a job in order to rent an apartment, if she can get one.

That's a big order—but she feels that the Red Cross should have helped her get going. Yes, she's written this to her husband, she said.

Washingtonian Heads New Club for Soldiers in Paris

Afro-American 1-13-45

By OLLIE STEWART

AFRO War Correspondent with Invasion Forces in Germany

[Copyright. Reproduction in whole or in part expressly forbidden.]

PARIS (By Cable)—The Christmas Day opening of a Red Cross Club here staffed by colored workers highlights the vigorous movement of the last few months to give troops in France the same entertainment facilities they enjoyed in England during rest periods.

Before the German breakthrough, extensive plans called for club openings in Belgium, Holland, and Luxembourg; but these have been postponed even though club workers have arrived. However, clubs in France are going full blast.

AFRO Man Heads Club

The Paris Club is headed by Earl Howard of Washington, formerly of the AFRO advertising department, who came here from Belfast; Ireland.

Mr. Howard selected as club headquarters a hotel which has many comfortable rooms, private baths and a spacious dining room. The persons selected, including It is the most comfortable place for soldiers I have seen.

With his program director, Miss Laverne Birche of Boston, he plans special entertainment every night. Miss Gladys Martin of Topeka, Kans., is assistant club director.

General Davis Among Visitors

Pominent visitors at the club this week included Geneneral B. O. Davis, Major Kenneth Campbell and Josephine Baker.

In Paris awaiting assignments to other clubs are:

Dick Temple, Ralph Gerner, 1254 Irving Street, Northeast, and Miss Louise Lockhart, 2600 Eleventh Street, Northwest, all of Washington; Corneff Taylor, Chicago; Misses Lillian Gideon, Boston; Myrtle Barrows, Newark, N.J.; Fannie Allen, Atlanta, and Viola Fambrow, Chicago.

A club in Rouen has Olive Blackwell of Chicago as director, assisted by Geraldine Ross of Bronx, N.Y., and Thelma Pratt, of Chicago, program director.

In Cherbourg are Geneva Holmes of Greensboro, N.C., who has a master's degree from Columbia ,and Lucille Augustine of New Orleans. Doc Kelker of Cleveland, Ohio, is field director.

Va. Girl with Clubmobile

Estelle Trent is stationed at Le Havre. A clubmobile operating near Rouen has Charlene Wharton of Santa Monica, Calif., as captain with Margaret Lamb of Norfolk, Va., and Grace Smith of Cincinnati assisting.

Mrs. Sidney Taylor Brown who was prevented from entering Belgium by the German assault, is now working in the Paris Club.

As always, the mere appearance of our Red Cross workers has done much to make soldiers feel they are not forgotten. The French stare openly because for a long time only white workers were seen in the capital in uniform, but already evidences of goodwill are mounting daily.

RAISED OBJECTION TO MIXED DANCING

Pittsburgh Courier 1-28-45

By HASKELL COHEN Courier War Correspondent

SOMEWHERE IN ITALY—The American Red Cross scored a victory for democracy this week, sending home a white worker who employed jim-crow tactics against fellow colored workers at a New Year's Eve dance. The disturbance occurred while military (white) when a Red Cross service personnel and Red Cross workers man, Herman C. Armstrong were dancing at an affair conducted by a Naples group of ARC (white) allegedly under the influence of liquor staggered between members. the two and pushed the soldier

Miss Geraldine Dyson, former St. from Miss Dyson.

Louis school teacher and a Kent University graduate, attached to FIGHT PREVENTED the Red Cross staff, was dancing 1-25-45 with Pvt. Salvatore Congema The soldier started to throw a punch at Armstrong but was stopped by Miss Dyson. Armstrong then approached the bar and entered into a conversation with a colored club director, Clifford Minton, and two assistant field directors, John W. Rich and William Paul, the latter a well-known Philadelphian who formerly taught school in the Camden public school system.

Armstrong was quoted as saying: "We always had mammies back home whom we loved dearly. We even called them 'n——rs' but we called them that in affectionate terms."

Minton answered: "I came from the South too and have been working with interracial groups, but am not used to being addressed in such fashion."

Later that evening, in another room, Armstrong passed while Miss Dyson was talking to another white soldier. Asked why he acted so poorly on the dance floor, Armstrong replied: "Aw, go away." Witnesses said he pushed Miss Dyson.

PUNCHES PAUL

Paul, standing nearby, told Armstrong: "I resent your attitude."

Armstrong then punched Paul in the face, but soldiers intervened and pulled Armstrong from the room.

stay in London. I wasn't aware that the room to which two colored nurses and I were assigned was a separate one until the caretaker, an English biddy, apologetically explained, "This is the only room we have for you girls."

Doubtful Furlough Fare

At the time of this incident two months ago, there were few colored women officers in the theatre. Since then, the first contingent of WAC's, including officers, has reached London. They will seek housing on their week-end passes and furloughs. 3-24-45

This segregation is contrary to the expressed policy of the Red Cross which maintains that all its facilities for service men and women abroad are open to all.

Clubs Open to All

While in both London, Bristol and many another English and French town as well, colored Red Cross workers are in charge of clubs which are open to all service men. GI's with whom I talked indicated that they were also welcome at other Red Cross clubs. In four hospitals where I spent considerable time, the Red Cross facilities were available to all and colored GI patients reported that they were included in the gifts made by the workers and tours arranged through the agency.

New Times

The worker — New York, 7-29

IN connection with my association with campaign workers of the American Red Cross in the Harlem Negro community, I found it necessary to personally investigate the widely circulated rumors to the effect that there is a policy of segregation of blood plasma of Negro and white citizens.

After an exchange of correspondence conducted over the last 10 days with the highest authorities of the armed forces, the existence of such a policy has been established officially and duly authenticated over the signatures of the proper authorities. 4-29-45

This policy was officially declared in December, 1942, in an agreement between the previous chairman of the American Red Cross (the present chairman is Mr. Basil O'Connor) and the Surgeon Generals of the Army and Navy with the approval of the Secretaries of War and of the Navy. The most recent statement of the policy from the office of the Army Surgeon General admitted that there "was no basis in science for the segregation of blood plasma" but "justified" it on the grounds that blood plasma from Negroes and whites should not be indiscriminately mixed.

This means, of course, that the policy of white supremacy with regard to blood plasma is official and is supposedly being pursued. The assumption is that "indiscriminate mixing" is no bother to the Negroes, which, of course, is a great compliment to Negroes who do not take to such white supremacy nonsense. It is also an insult to the great majority of white soldiers, who would not suicidally quibble over where the life-saving blood comes from, and who are equally deserving of the compliment. Both Negro and white personnel are far in advance of those who maintain this un-American policy.

* * *

IT must be extremely embarrassing to the Army authorities in charge to admit that they are fighting history's biggest war with a policy admittedly unscientific and therefore utterly stupid. I cannot believe that they are acting in accordance with their own scientific judgments or honest convictions. Moreover, in the heat of battle, where men's lives are at stake, I do not believe that the policy is enforceable. It is quite possible that the authorities are placed in a position where they have to patriotically violate their own policies in order to carry on the war to the speediest and least costly victory.

4-29-45

Although the Army Service Command subscribes to this policy and must share responsibility with the Red Cross, it is my judgment that it is yielding to the reactionary civilian pressures emanating from certain Red Cross officials, just which I don't know. For the Army High Command, in a number of instances, has shown serious intentions of trying to correct in a democratic manner its personnel policies with regard to Negro and white soldiers even to the point of establishing "indiscriminately" mixed combat units.

THE Red Cross has made little or no progress and, of all the war agencies, appears least affected by the spirit of the war and of the times. For example, while the Army has done away with the Communist bogey policy, and promotes each individual on the basis of his merits, the American Red Cross, as badly as it needs women for overseas service, has recently turned down a patriotic, qualified Negro girl because of past Communist affiliation, and finally drove her from the Red Cross altogether. Viewed, not from the Negro's point of interest—which is just enough—but from the Red Cross angle, could anything be more blockheaded?

The Red Cross, the only available agency of its type, is doing a tremendously helpful war job. But its policy with regard to Negro citizens is seriously impairing national unity and sabotaging its own need to mobilize fully the Negro people and thousands of white democratic Americans. I speak from personal experience. Besides having the ugliest international repercussions, this policy prevents the Red Cross from being completely successful on the home front. It is a disgraceful symbol of hideous racism we're seeking to destroy.

Now that we're crushing fascism militarily, will America permit this costly white supremacy relic to remain a policy of a semi-official war agency in our country?

32 Negroes Complete Course In Nutrition

Birmingham News

Thirty-two Negro teachers, cooks and maids in the Birmingham Board of Education nursery schools throughout the city tomorrow will complete a 12-hour course in nutrition taught under the sponsorship of the Jefferson County chapter, American Red Cross. 5-25-45

The course, taught by Miss Eva Godbey, authorized Red Cross instructor, with the assistance of registered nurses in the nursery schools, included demonstrations, exhibits, educational movies, and regular class work. Each member of the class also carried out an individual project during the course.

A follow-up of the course will be made by Miss Godbey, who through observation of the work of the nutrition students in the nursery schools, which are sponsored by the city Board of Education with the support of Lanham act funds, will determine how well information gained in the course is applied. Mrs. Hazel Parker is nutrition chairman for the Red Cross.

NOTED ATHLETE TO HELP WAR REFUGEES — Harry F. V. Edward (left) of Princeton, N. J. widely known Negro track star of the early twenties, discusses with Raphael O'Hara Lanier some of the problems Edward expects to encounter in Germany where he is to direct an assembly center operated by the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration to help repatriate persons displaced by war activity. Edward, a former British subject, was born in Berlin and educated in London. He has lived in the United States since 1923 and is now an American citizen. Mr. Lanier, dean of faculty at the Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va., is presently serving as a special assistant in the Bureau of Services, UNRRA Headquarters, Washington, D. C. — United Nations Relief Photo From OWI.

Lanier Defends UNRRA Policy; Medics Not Barred

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON.

By MABLE ALSTON

Colored doctors, reportedly barred from participation in the United Nations Rehabilitation and Relief foreign program, are turning down the $8,000-a-year posts, Dr. R. O'Hara Lanier told the AFRO this week.

Dr. Lanier, special assistant to the chief of the Bureau of Services of UNRRA, said that a check of the report that no colored physicians were being accepted revealed that the response of colored physicians to the agency's recruiting campaign had produced negligible results.

Decline Posts

Mr. Lanier also cited the cases of several colored physicians who had been offered posts in UNRRA's foreign service but who had declined to accept.

In addition to the base salaries offered, he said, the posts carry also the payment of expenses plus a ten per cent increase for overseas service in the event of commissioning b ythe U.S. Public Health Service.

Dr. Paul B. Cornelly, head of the Department of Bacteriology, Preventive Medicine and Public Health of Howard Medical School had been offered a post as instructor of Public Health in China at a salary of $8,000 and commision but declined.

Refuses China Assignment

A salary of $6,500 and commission was offered Dr. Roderick Brown of Pittsburgh, Pa., as instructor of tuberculosis in China. A letter was received from Dr. Brown in April stating that he would be unable to accept the offer.

Dr. Rowland Scott, a specialist in pediatrics at Howard University School of Medicine, was offered a position in Europe, salary range from $4,500 to $5,000. Dr. Scott also refused the offer.

The first dentist to be made an offer was Dr. Daniel Collins, a recent graduate of Meharry Medical College.

Meharry President Protests

Dr. Herbert K. Abrahams, assistant health director explained that he received a very stern letter from Dr. M. Don Clawson, president of Meharry, expressing surprise and disapproval at the offer since there are less than 2000 dentists for 13,000,000 colored people, that he was certain that Dr. Abrahams would agree that he was more valuable to Meharry than UNRRA.

Dr. Lanier pointed out that his agency is interested in getting the best possible physicians regardless of color. He said one physician of this city sent in an application for a position with the displaced persons program but he was 73 years of age and that was far past the age limit.

He added that the age limit is not rigid but they try to keep it below fifty.

Only Two Nurses Accepted

Dr. Lanier said "recently a request came through for colored nurses at salaries of $3,200. I personally made the announcement at a meeting sponsored by a group of nurses, and a statement was published in the Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority bulletin. A recent check showed that only four had applied and two had been cleared." 7-21-45

This, he explained, was probably due to the high qualifications required. Positions carrying commissions require a B.S. degree, college work in public health and several years experience with a generalized public health agency, as well as State, county or city experience.

The two applications in the active file are from Miss Dorothy Doyle of New York City, a former student of Teachers College of Columbia University and a graduate of Mercy Hospital of Philadelphia, Pa., and Miss Mary Lee Brown, director of Public Health at Meharry Medical School.

Dr. Lanier said that both Dr. Abrahams and Dr. Deering of the Health Program lectured to internes, medical students and the faculty members outlining the program and requested them to send in their applications, but there has been no response.

List Duties

In response to a question concerning the recent reports of SHEAF's not wanting colored personnel, Dr. Lanier contacted W. F. Howell, deputy director of personnel. Mr. Howell said that when Mr. Cramer, head of the employment division went to Europe a request was made that he cable back the duties of the colored personnel, they are as follows: 7-21-45

Ernest C. Craigg, of Washington, and Maxwell L. Bohannan of Minnesota are principal welfare officers in teams with the 12th Army Group somewhere in Germany. John Bond of Washington is doing welfare work in Italy. Arthur Kidd of Florida is assistant quartermaster of Granville, France. Malcolm Jackson of the Virgin Islands is assembly director with the Twelfth Army Group in Germany.

Herman Washington, of Washington is principal welfare officer in Germany. Dr. Catherine Lealtad of New York City will be placed in Germany. Earl E. Pruitt of Louisville, Ky., is finance officer, and at present is working in Granville, France, but he will later be transferred to Germany as an area officer.

J. Jerome Robinson of D.C., is in charge of the postal unit at Frankfurt, Germany. Norman M. Baker of Cincinnati, Ohio, is in charge of supplies at the Assembly Center in Germany. John F. Price of Carolina and D.C. is administrative assistant at the Assembly center in Germany.

Vacancies in Balkans

Mr. Howell explained that they had vacancies in the Balkans and within several weeks a heavy recruitment program will begin for China. 7-21-45

Dr. Lanier, in addition to his duties as special assistant to the chief of the Bureau of Services, is a member of the training program faculty of UNRRA at Maryland University.

High tribute was paid Dr. Lanier by assistant chief Richard Brown, who said: "I send Dr. Lanier as my personal representative to various conferences and especially to ones having to do with educational and cultural problems. Dr. Lanier is here in this agency for his integrity, and no matter what the prejudices of the persons encountered, they have the highest regards and respect for him."

Dr. Lanier pointed out that because of the extensive program going on now and in the post-war era, universities and colleges should include more international relations and studies of culture.

German-Born Negro Gets High UNRRA Post In Germany

Chicago Defender

WASHINGTON.—Harry F. V. Edward, German-born Negro athlete who was educated in London and held prisoner by the Germans during the last war, left by plane to Germany this week as an employe of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. 7-21-45

Edward will direct an assembly center in Germany for the repatriation of people displaced by the war. He has lived in the United States since 1923, in Princeton, N. J., and is now an American citizen.

A track star of the early twenties, Edward is three-time winner of the 100 and 220-yard dashes in the British Open Championship. During the last war he spent three years in Germany in a prisoner-of-war camp.

Report Ethiopian Ban On Negro UNRRA Workers

Chicago Defender
Chicago, Ill.

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON— Ethiopia wants no Negroes attached to teams sent into that country by the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration according to information received here. 8-4-45

The report indicates that representatives of the Ethiopian Government have requested UNRRA that teams be comprised of whites only.

No confirmation for the report could be obtained from the Ethiopian Legation. The Defender was informed by a Public Relations Officer at the Legation that the Ethiopian Minister to the United States, Blata Ehrem T. Medhen, was on his way to Europe and that Getahoun Tesemma, charge d'affaires, as out of town and could, therefore, not be reached for comment. 8-4-45

"I know nothing about the subject," the officer said.

Despite this report, Negroes are working actively with the world relief agency. Several weeks ago Harry F. V. Edward, German-born Negro sailed for Germany, authorized to direct an assembly center there for the repatriation of people displaced by the war. Among others in the UNRRA setup are John Francis Price, former registrar of Shaw university, Raleigh, N. C., and R. O'Hara Lanier, who has the task of revising the whole program of UNRRA overseas workers at Maryland university.

Reports of discrimination in the agency have been rife since its organization. In June, the War Department denied that the Supreme Headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Forces, had issued orders barring Negro personnel from positions in the UNRRA in Europe.

It had been previously rumored that the UNRRA had issued orders to set up Jim Crow teams working with displaced persons in France.

Congressman Powell Names Two to UNRRA

The Call
Kansas City, Mo.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Congressman Adam Clayton Powell Jr. continues to fulfill his promise for the expansion and continuance of jobs for Negroes. His recent appointments were Miss Elizabeth McDougall and Mr. Roland M. Sawyer to the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitations Administration. 8-24-45

Miss McDougall formerly served with the American Red Cross. Upon receiving her appointment she prepared to leave for service in Europe. Miss McDougall is the daughter of Mrs. Gertrude E. Ayer, Principle of Public School No 119, New York City.

Mr. Sawyer received his appointment and was immediately discharged from the Armed Forces in order to accept overseas duty.

Through the efforts of Representative Powell of the 22nd District, about six of our outstanding men and women have been placed with UNRRA.

Dr. Lealtad of UNRRA Receives Commendation For Outstanding Services in Germany

Pittsburgh, Pa. 10-27-45

Pittsburgh Courier

WASHINGTON— Dr. Catherine Lealtad, physician for displaced persons receiving UNRRA care in Germany, has been given the special assignment of organizing medical setups in a number of UNRRA camps for displaced persons. The assignment came as a result of the outstanding work done by Dr. Lealtad at Weinberg.

In a letter received at UNRRA headquarters in Washington, Dr. Lealtad presents a vivid picture of the manner in which she helped bring sanitation and order out of unhealthful conditions which prevailed in many camps when UNRRA first took over.

"Three weeks ago the Military Government received a report from the Heilbron Hospital that six infants from the refugee camp had been sent in dying of hunger within a week," she reports. "They sent me here with a Belgian nurse to see what it was all about and to do whatever was needed."

SHOCKING CONDITIONS

Highlights of the shocking conditions encountered and described by Dr. Lealtad included: Five thousand people crowded in barracks built to house from 2,000 to 2,500 soldiers; 412 children, with no medical service to oversee their health needs; unsterilized milk with resulting severe digestive disorders; children dirty and ridden with all manner of skin diseases such as impetigo and scabies; no clinic service.

Plunging into this situation, Dr. Lealtad accomplished virtual miracles in no time. "I didn't know where to begin first," she confesses, "but after working like an idiot for three weeks, we have a morning clinic 9-11 for school children with an Hungarian refugee doctor, a sick bay from 11-12, a baby clinic and toddlers' clinic in the afternoon with a woman doctor. I set up a ten-crib ward for infants under two years for mild illness—serious cases go to Heilbron Hospital; a feeding center for fifty-nine babies with an Esthonian refugee nurse who prepares the bottles. I got the camp carpenters to make low tables and benches and now over 100 toddlers have a supervised feeding center.

"In the first six days, during routine school examinations, we evacuated six children with active T.B. and last week eleven more cases." 10-27-45

"The T.B. rate among refugee children is tragic. Yesterday I was at headquarters at Karlsruhe and the director wants us to go to a nearby camp of Poles where, among 500 children, they have just begun an x-ray check-up—seventy five active cases and still 200 suspects are still to be x-rayed. They seem to have decided after what I did here at Weinberg that they want me to go from camp to camp to set up a children's medical service."

LACK OF EQUIPMENT MADE WORK DIFFICULT

Lacking many items of equipment, supply and medical assistance, Dr. Lealtad's work was beset with all sorts of difficulties.

The displaced persons with whom Dr. Lealtad is working is among the war's most tragic victims. Slave laborers, impressed by the Nazis; political, religious and racial refugees; victims of military onslaught, they hail from every corner of Europe.

Since V-E Day, UNRRA, working with the military, has helped repatriate more than five million displaced persons in the Allied zone of military occupation. The remaining million, representing the stateless and the non-repatriables are being cared for by UNRRA until the Allied powers make some plans for their permanent disposition.

Before going overseas for UNRRA, Dr. Lealtad was prominent in New York City medical circles and had extensive experience in clinic work. She received her medical education in France and has a fluent command of French as well as a knowledge of European customs which are both proving highly useful in her work.

Dorothy Doyle Named to UNRA Post in China

afro-American
Baltimore, Md.
11-24-45

NEW YORK. — Miss Dorothy Doyle, R.N., has joined the staff of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (UNRRA) and will be a member of the UNRAA health mission to China, it has been announced.

Miss Doyle went on duty with UNRRA as of Nov. 14.

At the same time, Mrs. Makel K. Staupers, executive secretary of the National Association of Colored Graduate Nurses, revealed that a second colored nurse, Miss Florence Hargett, has completed her application and procedure and is awaiting notification of her appointment to the China health mission. The association, she revealed, has taken an active interest in the applications of both Miss Doyle and Miss Hargett.

Miss Doyle is a graduate of the Mercy Hospital School of Nursing, Philadelphia, where she also served as instructor in clinical nursing. She worked as staff nurse in the surgical division of Queens General Hospital, New York City, and was instructor of practical nursing at the W. 137th St. branch of the YWCA. She holds a B.S. degree in nursing education from Columbia University, New York City.

Ethiopian UNRRA Staff Leaves U.S.

The Afro. American
Baltimore, MD.

WASHINGTON

Representatives of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration to Ethiopia sailed for London last week to begin a program in the African country designed to meet medical, welfare and educational needs.

Though Ethiopia has been designated as an invaded nation, unable to pay for relief and rehabilitation service, it is the only nation where there is no food shortage. 12-15-45

No food or other relief commodities except medical and sanitation supplies will be shipped there by UNRRA for the present.

Peterson is Aide

The UNRRA mission of 18 members represents seven nations, and is led by Dr. Willard Z. Park, formerly a professor of anthropology at the University of Oklahoma, and more recently in the Foreign Economic Administration.

Leroy Peterson, New York City, who has served with the War Manpower Commission, Resettlement Administration, and the Department of Agriculture, is deputy chief. The health program director is Dr. D. A. Messinezy of Greece.

Projects Listed

The mission will set up facilities for training replacements for leaders, both technical and vocational, who were killed by the Italians during the occupation.

Other projects include a welfare program to care for homeless children; demonstration centers for agricultural and vocational training; and beginning medical and nursing training in the six hospitals remaining in Ethiopia. 12-15-45

Colored UNRRA Workers 'Unwelcome' in Ethiopia

Baltimore, Md
Afro-American

By MABLE ALSTON

WASHINGTON

The AFRO attempted to verify the report from the Ethiopian Legation here that Emperor Haile Selassie's government had informed the United Nations' Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, "that the use of colored Americans was unacceptable to Ethiopia."

8-11-45

Blata Ephrem T. Medhen, Ethiopian minister, was en route to Europe to attend the UNRRA conference, and Getahoun Tesenma, charge de affaires, was out of the city. Attempts to contact him at the New York consulate were unsuccessful.

Gerard F. Price, who went with an UNRRA mission to Ethiopia in December, 1944, to consult with the emperor and other government officials about sending a mission to their country, explained to the AFRO that the government of a country is given the privilege to determine who should work there.

Not Acceptable

He pointed out that according to information which he gathered, the reason for the objection was that Ethiopians still looked upon colored Americans with disdain because they are descendants of slaves, and are looked upon as inferior by the whites at home.

According to Mr. Price the Ethiopians are generally uninformed about the progress of the colored people in America, and class them with tribes they themselves had enslaved prior to their admission to the League of Nations.

8-11-45

Masses in Ignorance

He explained that blame for this condition and the general backwardness of the country could be placed at the door of the Ethiopian ruling clique of about 50 families who, for their own purposes, have kept the masses in ignorance.

According to Mr. Price, the one and only official church is also a contributing force in keeping the people in darkness. An example of this is shown in the fact that at the instigation of the church, sanitation facilities installed by the Italians were destroyed and reservoirs built in the hills for the purpose of purification of water were also eradicated because of a Biblical adherence to an ancient theory that water should not be tampered with.

Red Cross Worker Gets UNRRA Post In Germany

The Defender Chicago, Illinois

9-15-45

Helen Chiquita Lonewolf, who spent 19½ months overseas as a Secretary for the Red Cross, is now enroute to Germany to work with the Bureau of Displaced Persons of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration.

Miss Lonewolf left for Germany early in August, after undergoing the training for overseas workers at the UNRRA training center at the University of Maryland.

In Germany, Miss Lonewolf will act as a stenographer and clerk to one of the Assembly Center staffs and probably take charge of a small staff that is locally engaged. The Assembly Centers, for which UNRRA now has some 349 teams abroad, are charged with the care and repatriation of the millions of persons in Western Germany who have been uprooted from their homes and countries by the war.

Miss Lonewolf's overseas experience with the Red Cross in North Africa and in Italy involved a variety of duties, heavy responsibilities and contact with the army. As Secretary of the Red Cross director of the North African theater, she was responsible for keeping and coordinating the records of all the Red Cross clubs in the theater, assisting the director and running the office in his absence. She also made several inspection trips for him.

9-15-45

In January of this year, she was sent to Naples to become secretary to the director of Transportation of the American Red Cross for all ARC personnel travelling via air, water or land. This entailed liaison work with the army, charge of the baggage department and of the Red Cross motor pools and all Red Cross cars.

A native of Wichita, Kans., Miss Lonewolf attended the College of St. Catherine in St. Paul, Minn., and received her degree from the University of Minnesota.

In working with displaced persons, Miss Lonewolf will be at the heart of one of the most tragic after-effects of the war. Slave laborers of the Nazis, victims of military onlaught refugees from political, racial and religious oppression, the displaced include every nationality in Europe. In Western Germany alone where UNRRA operates, they still number more than a million. Since V-E day, UNRRA and the military have succeeded in repatriating more than four million.

Gathered in the assembly camps the displaced persons are given food, clothing and medical attention. During their stay, they are also supervised in constructive activities. For most of them, this is the first experience in living outside of chaos in more than six years.

In addition to managing displaced persons services, the United Nations through UNRRA have shipped acs of July 1 '45 more than a quarter of a billion dollars worth of critically needed relief and rehabilitation supplies into the liberated countries of southeastern Europe.

Harry F. W. Edward Gets Assignment In Greece With UNRRA

The New York Age
New York N.Y.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Harry F. V. Edward, displaced persons specialist for the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, was recently singled out for the complex and difficult task of repartiating displaced persons in northeastern Greece, from Salonika to the Turkish border. His base of operations is in Kavelle, Greece, about 50 miles east of Salonika.

10-27-45

In coordinating the care and movement of displaced persons in the area, Mr Edward will be dealing with delicate problems in Greek - Bulgar - Turkish relations, minority problems and numerous Greek political and economic questions. The very number of displaced persons in Greece, the proportion of Greek, other Allied Nations and stateless, is undetermined Provisions for their care, determination of their destination and their repatriation will all be part of Mr Edward's job.

Mr Edward brings unique equipment of background and experience to his job of repatriating displaced persons, particularly the tragic victims of Nazi tyranny. Born a British citizen in Germany, he spent four years in a concentration camp in Berlin during the first World War, where he got first-hand knowledge of what many of his charges have undergone. He has a fluent knowledge of both French and German. Now an American citizen, he resides, when in this country, in Mercer County, N. J.

10-27-45

In a recent letter, Harry Edward shed valuable light on the progress and prominence in UNRRA's overseas operations of Negro workers. Before flying to England and proceeding to Granville-Jullouville, in Normandy UNRRA's training and staging center for European operations, he completed a three-weeks' training course at UNRRA's Training Centre at the University of Maryland.

Child Care Expert Flies To New Post In China

The Defender
Chicago Illinois

WASHINGTON—Vinita Virginia Lewis, prominent authority on child welfare, formerly with the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor, has joined the staff of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration for child welfare work in China. 9-15-45

She will go on loan to the Chinese Relief and Rehabiliation Administration to work under Dr. T. F. Chang, who is well known in American social work circles. Miss Lewis is scheduled to fly to Chungking this month.

Miss Lewis' appointment was approved by the Chinese government while she was still at the Children's Bureau. Generally regarded as the best qualified person for the post, she was urged by social worker groups and the National Council of Negro Women to accept on the basis of the service she could render. This consideration shaped her decision.

In China, Miss Lewis will be bringing into play all of her distinguished experience in the child welfare field, which has included work on a state and national basis, throughout this country. She will be working directly with the Chinese government, and through the Chinese Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. She will also work with national figures in the Chinese child welfare movement, and with voluntary religious organizations which have a long history of achievement in child care in China.

VINITA VIRGINIA LEWIS

Background Impressive 9-15-45

Miss Lewis' appointment to UNRRA climaxes a brilliant record of training and experience in child welfare and social work. At the Children's Bureau, she was in direct touch with child welfare programs in rural and urban areas throughout America and participated in the major child welfare programs in operation in most of the states in the USA, and has particular knowledge of the facilities in Virginia, South Carolina, Mississippi and Ohio.

Before coming to the Children's Bureau in 1936, Miss Lewis was case supervisor in the Wake County Emergency Relief Administration in North Carolina and also did a study of work conditions among American tobacco workers under the direction of Fisk University's Dr. Charles S. Johnson.

A native of Louisiana, Miss Lewis' first social service job was that of case worker in child placement for the Joint Service Bureau, a University of Chicago agency. It was here that she received her basic experience with problems of children in families of the exodus from below the Mason-Dixon line.

Her early schooling was obtained at the American Missionary Association school. Following her graduation from the University of Chicago, she went on to finish Columbia university's New York School of Social Work. The recent UNRRA appointee is an active member of the National Council of Negro Women, the National Committee on Housing and the National Conference of Social Work.

Finds Overseas Personnel of UNRRA Of Very High Order

Journal + Guide Norfolk, Va.
10-13-45

WASHINGTON, D. C.—In a recent letter to Congressman A. Clayton Powell, Harry F. V. Edward, displaced persons specialist in the United Nations Relief Rehabilitation Administration, shed valuable light on the importance of UNRRA's overseas operations of Negro workers.

Before flying to England and proceeding to Granville-Jullouville in Normady, URRA's training and staging center for European operations, Mr. Edward completed three-weeks' training courses at UNRRA's Training Centre at the University of Maryland. He describes his encounters with his colleagues to Congressman Powell as follows: 10-13-45

"During my three weeks' stay at College Park, Md., I met W. Baynard, J. Francis Price, Herman Washington, Norman Baker and W. Buford. All of them proved themselves to be good mixers. They integrated themselves with ease and confidence and contributed valuable technical experience. Baynard had done engineering in Egypt and West Africa, J. Francis Price had received his MA in German, Herman Washington's extensive experience in housing and welfare Work was recognized by faculty and students and Buford spoke with authority about conditions in Europe having returned from a number of assignments there with the American Red Cross.

"Their abilities were even more noticeable at Jullouville. They integrated easily wth European personnel, they were keen students of the French and German languages, took leadership in games and class discussions. The director of Training at Jullouville remarked to a Californian that he found the selection of American Negro personnel of the highest order. He stated that from his experience at Jullouville no one could even faintly sense that there was such a thing called "A Negro Problem in the United States."

"Of course, much credit should be given to the student body, highly selected from among many nationalities and to UNRRA's administrative staff in its attempt to put UNRRA's high principles into practice. Special praise should be reserved for the training staffs at College Park and Jullouville who continously emphasized the importance of an international spirit as a prerequisite to doing an important international job.

"At Granville I found A. L Kidd of Pittsburgh in the position of office manager controlling all UNRRA stores and supplies there and doing it most efficiently. 10-13-45

"As a touching scene which proved that "A man is a man for all o' that" I shall always remember the July morning when Herman Washington left Jullouville as Principal Welfare Officer attached to a team going to Germany. The huge crowd that clustered around his truck, shook his hands, waved and shouted wishes of good luck was heart warming proof that character and abilities are recognized by fair minded people and transcend racial prejudices. Herman Washington, quiet, sincere and unassuming surely had established himself in the hearts of his co-workers."

Mr. Edwards was recently singled out for the complex and difficult task of repatriating displaced persons in northeastern Greece from Salonika ot the Turkish border. His base of operations is in Kavelle, Greece about 50 miles east of Salonika.

In coordinating the care and movement of displaced persons in the area, Mr. Edward will be dealing with delicate problems in Greek-Bulgar-Turkish relations, minority problems and numerous Greek political and economic questions.

Mr. Edwards brings unique equipment of background and experience to his job of repatriating displaced persons, particular the tragic victims of Nazi tyranny. Born a Britisl. subject in Berlin, Germany, he spent four years in a concentration camp in Berlin during the first World War, where he got first-hand knowledge of both French and German. Local Doctor First Woman in UNRRA Unit

WASHINGTON — The first Negro woman to fill a position with the health division of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration reported here last Friday. She is Dr. Catherine Deaver Lealtad of New York City. Her assignment will take her abroad where she will work among displaced persons in Central Europe, according to Dr. Wilbur A. Sawyer, director of the division, who made the announcement.

Dr. Lealtad leaves a private practice to accept the UNRRA appointment. She is a former employee of the New York City Board of Health where she specialized in child hygiene. She will be a surgeon in the public health service, Federal Security Agency, with the military rank of Major during her foreign assignment. 4-28-45

Dr. Lealtad was reared in St. Paul, Minn. She was graduated in medicine from the University of Paris, and did her interne work in Providence Hospital in Chicago. She has been practicing here for approximately eight years. She received the master of science degree from McCalister University in St. Paul, Minn., and was the valedictorian of her class.

The physician is now taking an orientation course under UNRRA sponsorship at the University of Maryland. She will be there for a month before going overseas. She is expected to be sent to France or Germany.

The clothing drive, which opens April 1 and will continue throughout that month, will seek from the American people contributions of 150,000,000 pounds of serviceable used clothing for the destitute men, women and children of the war-devastated lands. 3-10-45

Serving on the national committee with Bishop Gregg are former President Herbert Hoover, former Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels, Philip Murray, president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations; William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor; Eric Johnston, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce; Edward Scheiberling, national commander of the American Legion, and outstanding leaders in other phases of American life.

WOMAN PHYSICIAN SAILS FOR UNRRA DUTIES IN EUROPE

Washington Tribune 4-28-45

Dr. Catharine D. Lealtad, 50, of New York City, first Negro woman to fill a position with the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration's Health Division, has been appointed a medical officer and reported to UNRRA headquarters, last week, before going abroad to work with displaced persons in Central Europe, it has been announced. 4-28-45

She will be a surgeon in the Public Health Service with the military rank of major during her foreign assignment.

Dr. Lealtad studied abroad for seven years before receiving her degree in medicine from the University of Paris in 1933. For six years, she spent a roving internship in French hospitals, specializing in pediatrics. In 1929-1930, she traveled for eight months in Italy and Spain, and toured the Scandinavian countries the following year.

She was born in Cleveland, O., and attended Macalster College, St. Paul, Minn., and Hunter College, New York.

Deny Jim Crow In World Relief Agency In France

Chicago Defender

WASHINGTON—The War Department this week emphatically denied reports that Supreme Headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Forces had issued orders barring Negro personnel from positions of authority in the United Nations' Relief and Rehabilitation Administration in Europe. 4-28-45

"SHAEF has issued no instructions written or verbal that UNRRA Negro personnel may not be used in positions of authority or in any other positions at displaced persons camps," the War Department statement declared.

It had been reported last week that UNRRA had issued such orders to set up Jim Crow teams working with displaced persons in France.

Meanwhile, UNRRA announced this week the appointment of John Francis Price, former registrar of Shaw university at Raleigh, N. C., to an administrative position with the displaced persons program in Germany. 6-23-45

Price is now taking a special training course on the campus of the University of Maryland. He is a graduate of Howard university and was born in Williamston, N. C.

UNRRA Plans Lily-White Mission to Caribbean Area

AFRO-AMERICAN Balt., Md.

2-24-45

WASHINGTON (NNPA)—Following the established practice of the State Department, Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, director of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, has appointed a lily-white mission to eight member governments in the Caribbean area. 2-24-45

The countries to visited by the mission are Panama, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Honduras, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, and the Dominican Republi each of which has a large colo d population.

It will discuss with the government of each country its collaboration with UNRRA, and will make arrangements with all other agencies of public opinion for a continuous flow of information with regard to UNRRA.

Full Share Desired

2-24-45

UNRRA, according to its announcement, attaches special importance to this mission because "of its desire to that all of the member governments share as fully as possible in the responsibilities of administering the UNRRA program."

Except for a half-dozen colored men in its overseas service, UNRRA has no colored professional on its staff. Efforts to get one placed in a policy-making administrative spot have reportedly been rebuffed by John J. Corson, deputy administrator.

Lanier Pushed Aside

2-24-45

R. O'Hara Lanier, former acting president of Hampton Institute, was shunted off by Corson for an interview with a fifth assistant public relations official. Lanier informed them he was not "looking for a job."

T. Arnold Hill, former race relations adviser at OPA, who has been employed by the agency in an overseas assignment, is now understood to be contending for an administrative assignment at the national office.

UNRRA Welfare Officer at DP Camp Aid 8,000 Trying to Get Back Home

Afro-American

By OLLIE STEWART
AFRO War Correspondent

WORMLITZ, Germany—(By Cable)—This is first in a series of articles entitled, "Americans Abroad," and this story began when I met Leo Bohanon of Minneapolis, Minn., a graduate of the University of Minnesota.

Bohanon is with an UNRRA team of eight persons and for the past month has been welfare officer in a displaced persons' (DP) camp of 8,000, representing 21 nationalities. One other American, a white Virginia girl nurse, is on the team. Others, including the director, are French.

Interpreters Used

Bohanon, like the nurse, speaks only English, but through interpreter, he controls the activities of Poles, Italians, Russians, Dutch, and others trying to get back home.

The scene is almost fantastic with a colored American playing Santa Claus to an average of 5,000 men, 2,000 women, and 1,000 children daily and scarcely a dozen speak English.

I visited the barracks where displaced persons live. One room contained eleven persons, plus two bicycles. One hot meal is served daily plus rations.

The barracks are generally clean, but many need repairs after Allied bombings. However the plumbing works and sanitation are above par for a camp of this kind. 7-7-45

Has Many Duties

Specifically, Bohanon is responsible for the following: "Child welfare, special diet for sick, social and recreational activities, running the business office, taking care of information bureau and correspondence, taking charge of the barracks and co-ordinating the supply and health program."

Wormlitz is a transient camp, where DP persons are received and housed until arrangements are made for the home country to receive them. At least 2,000 come and go daily, but Italians and Poles are permanent so far, because nobody will receive them.

People make themselves at home by giving dances, singing, and playing games. The Poles made a church altar for worship in a garage. 7-7-45

Germans Do Dirty Work

Groups are billeted by nationalities to avoid friction which to date, is at a minimum. The Germans do the repair and dirty work around the camp. Newcomers are sent through a delousing chamber and special prenatal and postnatal care is given mothers.

Says Bohanan:

"It's not a bad life and not at all dull. When I first arrived, everybody stared at me, but now even the children run to me, if only for candy.

"Many difficulties over which we have no control present themselves, but with Army co-operation, we feel that we are doing a worthwhile job."

Secretary Is Interpreter

German is the language of the camp, but Bohanon meets his difficulties with the aid of a secretary, who speaks German and English. To his office come people with varied problems. I sat listening for two hours. Two Frenchmen came in to report that in their group were two Italians, but the Italian barracks were full. What should be done?

Bohanon asked his secretary to interpret, but she spoke no French, so the director was called in to translate. 7-7-45

Then a woman wanted milk for the hospital, but she spoke German, so the secretary could handle her.

After translating for Bohanon, she told the woman what Bohanon said in reply. It's just like the League of Nations.

Lives in Villa

Bohanon lives in a villa overlooking a lake and eats with the UNRRA team. Prominent on his desk is a photo of his wife and son.

Wormlitz is near Leipzig, with rolling wheat land all around, and is the home of Felix Von Luckner, a German Naval hero. I talked with a woman who admits she is sorry the Germans lost the war, because she lost all her money. She said coffee has been absent for years and also tea, but butter, meat, bread and German cigarettes have been fairly plentiful.

Rich Germans, she added, have had French lipsticks, rouge, powder, liquors, shoes and movies. All fear the Russians, hate the French and pretend always to love Americans. 7-7-45

They believed the war was lost only after the Americans crossed the Rhine, but expect a new strong Germany in twenty years.

Former Lanier Leaves Hampton

Houston, Texas

WASHINGTON, D. C. —(NNPA)—Dr. R. O'Hara Lanier, dean of the faculty of Hampton Institute, has been appointed as an assistant administrator of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. The appointment was confirmed last week. Dr. Lanier is expected to report this week to assume his new duties. 4-14-45

The naming of Lanier comes after considerable unfavorable publicity given UNRRA because of a vacillating racial policy, despite non-discrimination clauses in the resolutions governing the agency. Six Negroes are now serving overseas for UNRRA, but problems involving their service have become complex because of reputed attitudes on the part of the Army.

Lanier's work will be in the bureau of areas, a coordinating policy bureau. He will have duties largely administrative concerning training phases of UNRRA. His salary will be $6400 a year.

DR. R. O'HARA LANIER

He was the first Negro dean of instruction at Hampton Institute, from which institution he is resigning to accept the UNRRA post. Formerly he had been in administrative positions at Tuskegee Institute, Florida A. and M. college, and at Houston Municipal college. Before going to Hampton, he was assistant to Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune in the Office of Negro Affairs of the National Youth Administration.

When Dr. Malcolm M. McLean resigned as president of Hampton, Lanier was named acting president, and was at one time considered for the presidency. He served as the first Negro head of the institution from Jan., 1943 to Feb., 1944.

He is a native of Winston-Salem, N. C., father of two daughters, and a member of the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity, the National Vocational Guidance association, and many other organizations. 4-14-45

What Negroes Are Doing

BY OSCAR W. ADAMS

When we read newspapers, magazines and other periodicals, it is evident that the Negro in America has a great many more friends in opposite races than he has enemies. While we find a few who are discrediting the Negro's worth and service, there is a great multitude who are extolling his virtues and worth as an American. This, indeed, is encouraging, and there should be no dispairing attitude on the part of any of us because of the critical expressions of others about us.

As a minority group Negroes should do all things necessary to create a larger and more substantial friendship. Friends are more to be desired than silver and gold. Friends will prove of larger worth to us than material values.

* * *

IN CHICAGO DURING THE SEVENTH WAR LOAN DRIVE, Justice Hugo L. Black, of the United States Supreme Court, spoke freely of the loyalty and worth of the Negro.

The occasion was a bond sale rally at the Morris Hotel, and Justice Black said:

"I am particularly glad of the opportunity afforded by this interracial bond gathering to assure every person who is listening to this speech that in every bond drive, as in all the rest of the war effort, the American Negro is doing his job. Thinking only of the common cause, he has said to himself, 'This is my war for my country, and I will do my part,' and he has done his part.

"I do not know how many Negroes have bought bonds, nor do I know the dollar value of those bonds. It is, very wisely, not the practice in this country to keep books by racial groups. I do know that one Negro organization reports that its members alone have $12,000,000 in bonds, and $11,000,000 was sold through one series of interracial meetings.

"You have all heard the tale of Joe Louis, who early in the war risked his title without compensation at a bond benefit fight. Before the fight one person said to him, 'You are fighting for nothing tonight, Joe.' 'No,' replied Louis, 'I'm fighting for my country.'

"It is a tragic fact that a great number of Negroes have all too little with which to buy bonds, so that each contribution is proportionately more of a sacrifice than it is for many of the rest of us. But I hope our country will always remember the spirit of the Negro woman in Los Angeles who sold her home so that she might buy bonds; of the 11-year-old Negro boy who saved 1,875 pennies with which to buy a bond; of the Negro farmer in Georgia who brought $750 in a flour sack to a bond station so that he might purchase a $1,000 bond."

Justice Black lauded the interracial group, dedicated to promoting better understanding between white and Negro citizens, as the aspiration of the common men and women of all walks of life in America towards tolerance and understanding.

Jackson, Reed And Clement Head United Fund Campaign

Effort Starts September 13, Closes Sept. 30

ANNOUNCEMENT WAS MADE Saturday that the Reverend Maynard H. Jackson, pastor of Friendship Baptist Church, R. R. Reed, Editor-Publisher, The Colored Morticians Bulletin and Executive Secretary of the Atlanta Business and Trade Association and W. A. Clement, Director of Agencies, North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Co had accepted the responsibility of heading the Unclassified Negro Division of the 1946 United Community and War Fund Campaign.

The campaign this year will begin on September 13 and will terminate September 30 about two weeks earlier than usual.

This year, more than ever, it is important that the Fund obtain its goal in order to adequately serve the millions of soldiers, sailors and marines and other war personnel, and also because of the increased demands which will be made upon local community agencies during this year of transition from war to peace.

VOLUNTEER WORKERS

More than 15,000 volunteer workers throughout greater Atlanta will go forth in this United Effort. Co-chairman Jackson in an interview stated that he was confident that Colored Atlantans would again do their full share and that although this was his first Community Effort since coming to Atlanta, he had accepted the responsibility confident that the Colored Community would accept its full responsibility.

R. R. Reed, also co-chairman and a man who has worked tirelessly in previous campaigns, stated that he too had no apprehension as to the outcome of the Colored Division. Co-chairman W. A. Clement reiterated what Mr. Jackson and Mr. Reed had said about the confidence they had in the achievement of the financial goal. In addition, Mr. Clements is taking special responsibility for an Initial Gifts Committee.

TO LIST WORKERS

The complete roster of the workers and the leaders of the various sections will be announced in an early edition of the World. Atlantans are urged not to wait to be called upon but to volunteer their services in this gigantic United Effort. More than 250 people are expected to actively work in the campaign which will be known as the Victory Campaign. The General Campaign office will be located at the Butler Street YMCA and has already been set up. A special Committee meeting is being called for Monday, August 27, at 8 p. m. at the Savoy Ball Room and another Committee meeting at 6 p. m. Thursday, August 30, also at the Savoy Ball Room. The first All Workers Meeting will be held Sept 10, also in the Savoy Ball Room.

$24,000,000 in Bonds Bought by Insurances

Philadelphia Tribune Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

2-22-45

By WILLIAM PICKENS

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Although one of the companies, which has always been among the heaviest investors, has not yet sent in its report to C. L. Townes, the chairman of the War Bond Division of the National Negro Insurance Association the report sent in by 40 of the 43 companies shows that a total of more than 20 million dollars in War Bonds had been purchased by these companies as of July 10, 1945. More than five million dollars of that amount was bought during the 7th War Loan and more than four million dollars during the 6th War Loan.

The largest holder of war securities in this last report is the North Carolina Mutual with $4,760,900 invested. Other companies that hold more than two million dollars in war securities are the American Woodmen and the Atlanta Life, the latter not yet reporting its 7th War Loan achievement. Still other insurance companies that hold more than a million dollars in War Bonds to date are: The Afro-American (Jacksonville, Fla.), the Supreme Liberty Life (Chicago, Ill.) and the Universal Life in Memphis, Tenn.

Those holding between a half million and a million dollars are Domestic Life and Accident, Metropolitan Funeral System, Mammoth Life and Accident Great Lakes Mutual, Excelsior Life, Southern Aid, Pilgrim Health and Life, Golden State Mutual and Victory Mutual. Many other companies hold securities in six figures.

Robeson to Receive 30th Spingarn Medal

PAUL ROBESON

NEW YORK—The 30th Spingarn Medal will be presented formally to Paul Robeson, internationally famous actor and singer, on Oct. 18, at a dinner in the Hotel Biltmore here, it was announced last week by the NAACP.

The presentation address will be made by Marshall Field, Chicago publisher.

Robeson was awarded the medal by a special committee last spring, but because of his theatre and concert commitments, including a USO tour overseas, the formal presentation has been delayed until now. The citation accompanying the award stated it was for "distinguished achievement in the theatre and on the concert stage."

11-Year-Old Earns Sixth Bond; Afternoon Jobs Aid Purchases

Richmond Times Dispatch Va.

By Edith Lindeman

Margaret Hawkes, an 11-year-old student of Washington Park School, recently purchased the Victory Bond which brought her a total of six bonds bought with her own money. 11-17-45

"Maybe a lot of other people have a lot more bonds," said Margaret, "but six were all I could get because I don't make much money."

Margaret really earns the money which she puts into bonds. She has a small allowance from her parents with whom she lives at 4407 Corbin St., and all of this goes into weekly stamp purchases. After school she runs errands or does odd jobs for some of her relatives. When they reward her efforts with cash, those dimes and quarters also are turned into stamps, which she purchases weekly from her school teacher. Then, whenever a bond campaign comes along, Margaret finds that she has enough stamps to turn them into a bond.

"When I get through school," she says, "I hope I can go to college, and if I save now, I can help my parents pay some on the college course."

Margaret is encouraged in her stamp buying by her principal, Mrs. Emma Randolph Washington, after whom Washington Park School was named.

"I was glad when the saving stamp idea came along," says the principal, "for I would like all my students to get the habit of saving, and they like to watch the stamp books fill up. Our children have had a good record of stamp and bond buying throughout the war. It has been the best method we have found to teach them the value of thriftiness and the principles of patriotism."

Margaret and her teachers are consistent bond buyers, and many of the students have worked hard on the school children's Victory Loan Campaign, through which the boys and girls of local schools are attempting to sell $1,000,000 worth of "E" Bonds before the end of the Victory Loan Campaign on December 8.

"E" Bonds sold in Richmond through November 15 now ring up a total of $1,072,984 toward the campaign quota of $6,000,000. Sales of other bonds to individuals total $2,788,000 or more than half the quota of $4,975,000, according to Federal Reserve Bank figures.

A Navy bomber yesterday bombarded the city with Victory Bond messages sent over a loudspeaker from a height of 5,000 feet. The volume of the speaker was of sufficient strength to be heard over a 10-mile radius. Va.

Further stimulus to Victory Bond purchasers has been offered in the form of a Victory Bond Show to be presented at the Mosque on Monday night by the Korn Kobblers and Joan Brooks. Seats are nearly sold out for the show which is given free to the purchasers of $25, $50 and $100 "E" Bonds, but some seats are still available at Miller & Rhoads, Thalhimer's, Berry-Burk's, Kaufman's and Hutzler's. A limited number of tickets also will be put on sale at all motion picture houses over the week end for the benefit of bond purchasers who cannot come down town.

S. Treasury bond in the seventh war loan drive. This was not only the biggest bond bought by ny Negro institution in the Tri-States but topped the entire community for the week.

7-7-45

Universal Life has bought a total of $1,400,000 worth of U. S. Theasury bonds, $100,000; worth of U. S. Savings bond, $100.000 U. S. American bonds and $100,000 bonds of Series G.

Memphis Negroes Pass $1,000,000 Quota

Philadelphia Tribune

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—As a tribute to Capt. Luke Weathers, Negro air ace and native of this city, Negro citizens of this city purchased $200,000 worth of War Bonds at a dinner and a rally held in his honor here last week. The $200,000 purchase carried the total War Bond purchases of Memphis Negroes above the $1,000,000 mark.

Negro Air Ace Luke Weathers To Headline Bond Show Here

The negro division of the War Finance Committee was electrified at its meeting Saturday with the report of the sale of more than $500,000 in Seventh War Loan Bonds among Memphis negroes last week.

Equally electrifying to members of the division was the news that Capt. Luke Weathers, Memphis negro air ace, and a squadron of negro pilots from the 99th Pursuit Squadron, stationed at Tuskegee, Ala., Army Airfield, will definitely be present for an air show and citywide War Bond parade, mass meeting and dance Monday, June 25. The occasion will be designated "Capt. Luke Weathers' Day," and will be used to stimulate additional purchases of Seventh War Loan Bonds, behind the slogan of "Buy a Bond for Luke Weathers Day."

Buyers Are Listed

J. A. Swayze, chairman of the insurance group of the negro division, sparked the week-end meeting with his report of $528,600.20 in Bonds sold by his unit. The Insurance Group's report easily excelled all others in the division, according to Lieut. George W. Lee, chairman.

He said that "Swayze, swept on by his own ardor, personally sold on the morning of the meeting more than $4000 in Bonds . . . this amount, plus $8475 from the division's Bond headquarters, plus $37,065.20 from the Federal employes' group, headed by Matthew Thornton Sr., along with $2497.85 from Porter School, reported by Prof. Blair T. Hunt of the school division, and $1500 from the Junior Chamber of Commerce (negro), reported by Lewis Johnson, chairman, gives a grand total for the week of $578,139.25, the best single week's report in all our Bond efforts."

To "Bombard" City

The biggest sendoff for the Insurance Group's report was the purchase of a $500,000 block of Seventh War Loan Bonds by the Universal Life Insurance Co., of which Swayze is vice president, representing the largest single purchase of Bonds by any negro institution in Memphis. This brings the company's total purchases of War Bonds to $1,700,000. Swayze is vice president of the firm.

The negro division was informed by telephone Saturday that Capt. Weathers will fly to Memphis from Tuskegee accompanied by four other pilots flying their own planes. Advance plans call for the group to arrive at Municipal Airport next Sunday. Time will be sought for the fliers to give a flying demonstration. On Monday they will "bombard" the negro sections of the city with leaflets announcing the parade, mass meeting at Handy's Park and "Victory Ball" at Beale Avenue Auditorium, all to be given in their honor and in celebration of Capt. Luke Weathers Day, Monday evening and night.

All persons who purchase Bonds during the week of the 25th may have their names inscribed on the "Luke Weathers Victory Scroll," which the division is preparing. The scroll will be hung on the walls of Beale Avenue Auditorium, and a copy given to Captain Weathers. A Bond salesman will be dispatched to the home of any person wishing to buy Bonds during the week by calling the Bond headquarters at 8-1027.

Plans are under way for the organization of a parade to celebrate Luke Weathers Day, with a committee, consisting of Robert Wright, Maurice Hulburt, Nat Williams, Hollis Price and Rev. W. T. Brewster Sr., working to enlist a representative cross-section of negro civic life. Any groups or organizations desiring to take part may contact any one of the above committee members to register for participation.

N. C. Mutual To Invest $1,800,000 In Bonds In 7th War Loan Drive

DURHAM, N. C.—In the Seventh War Loan Drive, as in all previous drives, North Carolina Mutual has gone "all out" in support of the government. The extent of the company's participation in the several drives is reflected in the fact that the subscription of a million, eight hundred thousand dollars worth of bonds during this, the Seventh War Loan Drive, will increase the company's holdings in War Bonds and other government securities to $6,155,900 (par value). One million, two hundred thousand of the bonds subscribed to are for immediate delivery, the remaining six hundred thousand to be delivered before the close of the drive.

Through their investments in War Bonds, the officials of the company are fully cognizant of the fact that they are investing in securities that not only represent the ultimate in safety, but at the same time are supplementing the War Bond purchases of their individual policyholders by placing a large portion of the reserve funds held in trust for them at the disposal of the government.

REPRESENTATIVES AT FRONT

With scores of company representatives fighting on the far-flung battle fronts of the world North Carolina Mutual considers it a privilege and an obligation to support these loyal representatives, as well as other millions fighting at their side, by helping make available the necessary funds whereby guns, tanks, planes and ammunition may be supplied in sufficient quantities to crush a cruel, frantic enemy. They feel that no sacrifice is too great or no effort too taxing that will hasten the day when aggression, and the brutality with which it is being perpetrated, will be banished from the earth.

Whole-hearted support of the government's program will speed the day of victory and hasten the return of our valiant fighting men and women. It is for this reason that N. C. Mutual has gone "all out" in support of the Seventh War Loan Drive, and is urging others to do likewise, that peace, prosperity, and justice may again assume their rightful place in human relations.

Birmingham Won't Let U.S.S. Franklin Hero Appear With His White Buddies

the Call

By EMORY O. JACKSON

BIRMINGHAM.—(ANP) — One of Alabama's own black heroes—a survivor of the USS Franklin—came to Birmingham June 26, in the interest of the lagging E bond sale in the Seventh War Loan drive, only to be denied a chance to appear with his white mates.

This black hero was P. O. 2-c Frank Steger, 22, of Tuscumbia, Ala., who volunteered for the navy June 2, 1941.

Petty Officer Steger was a member of the team of 10 survivors who came here Tuesday, June 26, with Capt. Leslie Cehres, USN.

Arriving at the Birmingham Air base at 11:45 a.m., after leaving New York city at 7:35, P. O. Steger, rode into town with his white buddies, was separated and turned over to A. G. Gaston, chairman of the Negro War Finance committee. 7-6-45

I rode with Mr. Gaston to the air base to meet the hero, but we were late. Steger was rushed to the headquarters of the white bond group and later sent him down to Smith and Gaston, where I interviewed him.

No plans had been worked out at this time for letting the black navy hero participate with his other survivor mates. A jumped up schedule was improvised for him to address a session of the Pythian Grand lodge. It was suggested that he visit some of the war plants and speak to workers. This could not be arranged.

Steger told me that he had let his captain know that he was not anxious to make the trip to Birmingham because he did not believe that he would be permitted to remain with the team as he had done in Syracuse, Buffalo, Boston and New Haven. He was troubled, jimcrow sick, spirit-broken at the way they ditched him without considerations.

He was shown to the guest room at Smith and Gaston. No more was I to see him.

Wednesday, June 27, I went down to 19th St., heart of Birmingham's trading center, where the survivor crew appeared. I listened to the speeches, looked for the absent Steger, sweated in the crowd where there was no jim crow. I could not understand a situation like this, although I am familiar with segregation, discrimination and racial insanity.

Someone told me that Steger left Tuesday for his Tuscumbia home and said that he would be back for the bond-selling demonstrations Wednesday. I tried to find the answer to the riddle, "why didn't Steger appear with his buddies?" Nobody who could tell me anything officially could be reached. 7-6-45

Steger said that 97 of the crew of 3,300 on the Franklin were Negroes, of which six were lost. He said that 1,800 of the crew had been listed dead and missing. It was March 19, 50 miles off the coast of Japan, when the 27,000 ton carrier ship was attacked, crippled, but came to port.

DR. HART'S $20,000 PURCHASE is CLIMAX IN WAR BOND DRIVE

In the Mighty Seventh War Loan Drive Dr. Terry M. Hart, one of the country's outstanding dentists, has once again shown his intense faith in a Democracy threatened first by an enemy now conquered and still confronted by the Japanese.

Dr. Hart's purchase of $20,000 worth of War Bonds in the present drive comes as a result of his knowledge that they are the safest investment in the world, although some investments are certain to yield a greater return. Commenting on his recent purchase of War Bonds, Dr. Hart declared:

"At a time when the nation needs civilians' money I think it my full patriotic duty to comply with the government's request."

Concerned about the welfare and the future of America's Negro youth, Dr. Hart in the purchase of War Bonds is serving as an inspiration to Negro youth to be thrifty and useful in the life of the nation.

BIBLE IS DR. HART'S FOUNDATION FOR HIS BRILLIANT SUCCESS

St. Louis Argus

In the 24 years he has been a resident of St. Louis Dr. Terry M. Hart has won a place in the esteem of thousands for his recognized ability as one of the nation's top-flight dentists, as a devoted churchman and for his level-headed business acumen.

Dr. Hart has been commended for his thrift, frugality and his business acumen, but those who know him best realize that he considers being a trustee at the Central Baptist church one of the significant achievements of his career, and the attainment of a Bachelor of Arts degree at Lincoln university in Pennsylvania a truly wise cultural decision of his life. 7-6-45

Dr. Hart received his Doctor of Dental Surgery degree from the famous University of Pennsylvania.

DR. TERRY M. HART

In his childhood at his home in Americus, Georgia, Dr. Hart was taught being a credit to the race was the supreme goal of right-minded youth. A credit to the race he is.

When asked, recently, how he accounted for his success and remarkable achievement, Dr. Hart declared "The Bible is my guide."

He is especially fond of the fourth chapter of the Philippians and the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians. These scriptural readings are the foundation upon which Dr. Hart conducts his business, his thinking and his dealings with his fellowman.

Dr. Hart tells youth if they will apply these chapters to their lives, success will be inevitable. A favorite verse from the fourth chapter of Philippians is:

7-6-45

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

In addition to his nieces Dr. Hart has made his two sisters, Mrs. Oziebel Hart Turney of Milwaukee and Mrs. Mattie Sue Hart Statham of Chicago as beneficiaries who will share equitably in all of his War Bond purchases which he started in 1939.

Following the teachings of the scriptures Dr. Hart is a liberal financial supporter of worthy community organizations and projects. Being a firm believer in youth, he has assured a college education to 12-year-old Walter Grimm, an enterprising lad who does chores for him.

For 15 years Dr. Hart has been supervisor of the Municipal Dental Clinic now located at Leffingwell and Laclede. An oral surgeon, he has administered gas to more than 60,000 children without a fatality. He does extractions for pre-school, public and Catholic school children in the elementary grades. He devotes mornings to clinical duties and from 12 to 9 p.m. he is busy at his office.

Dr. Hart is an Omega Psi Phi fraternity member.

Education, believes Dr. Hart, is an important factor in modern success and for that reason he is assisting in the education of two nieces, Miss Viola Hart Turney, a student at Chicago University and Miss Mattie Hart Turney, a student at the University of Wisconsin. Both are of Milwaukee.

Dr. Hart is shown purchasing $10,000 worth of War Bonds in 1944 in the Fourth War Loan Drive from Mrs. J. E. Mitchell, right, and Mrs. A. C. Phillips.

National Beauty Culturists' League Organizations Assist In Selling $847,000 in Seventh War Loan During Drive

The Call

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Organizations of the National Beauty Culturists' league in three southern cities assisted their War Finance committee in selling $847,000 worth of war bonds during the final week of the 7th War Loan Drive, the Treasury Department announced this week.

In New Orleans, La., beauticians cooperated with War Finance committee representatives in the promotion of a series of rallies, a luncheon and a cabaret supper party that prompted the sale of $500,000 worth of war bonds.

Taking the leadership in the war-bond activities of Baton Rouge, La., beauticians gave impetus to a mammoth parade and war bond rally, at which sales amounting to $40,000 were recorded. Later on in the same day of the parade-rally, the beauticians staged an auction sale at which $37,000 worth of war bonds was sold, bringing total sales for the day to $77,000. Commodities ranging from a crate of live chickens to pieces of furniture were donated by local merchants to be auctioned off to war-bond bidders.

Mrs. Carrie Taylor, Baton Rouge beautician, heads the war bond activities of the National Beauty Culturists' League in this city.

Spurred by Mrs. Ruth Jackson, Birmingham (Alabama) beauticians cooperated with WFC officials in the sponsorship of war bond programs that resulted in the sale of $270,000 worth of war bonds. 7-20-45

Organized within the National Beauty Culturists' League is the Beauticians' Volunteer Corps, to which is delegated the responsibility of promoting the sale of war bonds throughout the year. During the periods of war-bond drives the BVC undertakes special promotions to encourage greater war-bond sales in addition to increased purchases among the members of their profession.

During the 6th War Loan Drive, the BVC was credited with the sale of $806,600 worth of bonds. For the 7th War Loan, the group accepted a quota of $1,123,000.

At this writing complete reports have not been received from the 20 cities that are participating in the BVC program. However, Mrs. Nell Hunter, promotion specialist of the International Section of the Treasury's War Finance Division, who recently visited several of the cities where the project is in operation, reported that the enthusinasm among the beauticians is great. She said there was little doubt in her mind that the BVC would reach its goal.

Mrs. Cordelia Green Johnson of Jersey City, N. J., is president of the league, while the BVC is headed by Mrs. Maude Gadsen of New York City. 7-20-45

Jackson Is Cited As Bond Champion

Atlanta Daily World

6-10-45

By SPIKE WASHINGTON

Back in his home town highly elated and refreshed from his trek of last week to Washington, the nation's capitol, where he was given a salute and a rousing as well as a warm welcome by President Truman, Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, United States Senators, Congressman, and other national officials, is Navy Chief Petty Officer Graham Washington Jackson, of the Georgia Naval Recruiting Station. 6-10-45

That smile of the patriotic and loyal Jackson, well known to Atlantans and people of all sections of Georgia, was even broader when he stepped from a fast train at terminal station late Wednesday and moved off hurriedly for home at C Street, the madam and the two pups. He was loaded with photographs of various members of Congress, autographs from each who gave him pictures, and the John Hancocks of those who were not able to furnish the Atlanta accomplished musician and entertainer, and other prizes that are much cherished by the Navy Specialist, who has much to his credit in the war effort. 6-10-45

SHOOK HANDS WITH TRUMAN

Officer Jackson, who has done a most remarkable job, and who has been acclaimed nationally as Georgia's number one war bond salesman for individual effort, on his having sold more than two million dollars worth of war bonds through his entertainment programs, was called to Washington to spend a week at the capitol with the various governmental dignitaries, at the White House where he was lauded highly for his war work by Pres. Truman, and where he was presented his sixth citation for outstanding work in the Sixth War Loan Drive by Secretary Morgenthau. Jackson has several illustrious firsts to his credits, and prides in the fact that he was the first Negro to play for the President in the White House. He also brought back an autograph of the President and proudly showed three pieces of stationery from the White House which is done gold on white. He autographed one in his neat little home and gave the writer, presented one to his madam, and kept one for himself. 6-10-45

Atlanta's famed musician took Washington. There were speeches, banquets, and a whirl of reception activity that dimmed the fanfare surrounding Washington, a place during this time of war. Jackson, the late President Roosevelt's favorite musician, stayed in DC more than a week and while there he was kept busy here and there playing the piano and the accordian and signing for the many distinguished figures with whom he came in contact. 6-10-45

On last Monday he gave an hour-long concert to a large group of Senators and last Saturday night he entertained the President at a farewell buffet dinner affair given by newsmen to former Presidential Press Secretary Stephen Early. Before these observances Jackson was awarded another Citation of Merit, his sixth, by the Secretary of the Treasury, for services rendered in connection with the several War Loan drives. Sandwiched in he found time to play for a group of Washington officials on the piano and the accordian. 6-10-45

ORDERED TO CAPITOL

Jackson, who appeared in more than a score of performances before the late President, was ordered to DC last week by his State Recruiting Commander, Stanley A. Jones, with headquarters in Macon. Jackson stated that President Truman shook his hand at least seven times and that among those he was happy to greet was Georgia's own Senator George, who presented him with an autographed painting of himself, and inquired of him how things were back in Georgia. He played "Old Kentucky Home" for Senator Barkley of Kentucky, and for Senator Bilbo of Mississippi he played "The Last Roundup." He played in the office of Senate Secretary Leslie Biffle, and also has a photo of him, he played in the offices of Senator George and President Truman was so overjoyed with the Atlantan's playing that he requested him to pay the Hungarian Rhapsody by Litz as a special encore, following his performance at the Early farewell dinner party.

He is back home now resting a bit, but will be off sometime today or early tomorrow for his headquarters in Macon and from there he will be out selling war bonds giving programs and recruiting additional Negro youths for Navy duty, in his effort to boost his bond sales up near the three million dollar mark. He is an honor to his home town, his race and his nation.

Randolph School Has General Whose Bond Sales Top $5,000

Times-Dispatch — Richmond
5-23-45

Among Richmond's school children who spearheaded the Seventh War Loan Campaign for the beginning of the drive, none was more energetic than the Negro school student. A particularly high record has been run up by Randolph School, whose principal, Charles Borrell, states that his boys and girls buy stamps each week throughout the school year, and that the stamp total never goes below $150 per week.

Randolph School also can boast of two top-ranking generals. One, 12-year-old Bernard Brown, is a general of the army, with five stars on his insignia. Another, Joseph Bright, Jr., is a four-star general, having sold bonds to the amount of $4,325.

Bernard, the son of Mr. and Mrs. N. H. Brown, of 12 South Morris St., admits that his tremendous bond total is due to the fact that he secured some big denomination bonds through his family. His five stars were awarded him because he is one of the few young bond salesmen of the city who have topped the $5,000 mark. Bernard is the ranking bond salesman of Randolph School and his schoolmates come to attention as he arrives on the playground at recess. He has learned to return their snappy salutes with the ease and precision of a veteran. According to his principal, Bernard will hold his rank throughout the school term, and will not relinquish his treasured five-star insignia until Summer puts an end to class work.

Joe is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Bright, Sr., of 1319 Wallace St. In addition to having sold the second largest total, Joe also has sold a great number of individual bonds, nine in all. He has solicited his friends, relatives, doctors and neighbors. Since the children will continue their bond-selling efforts throughout the campaign, even though their concentrated drive is over, Joe thinks that perhaps he, too, can win the extra star before school is out.

To date, Randolph School's pupils have sold a total of $29,900 worth of "E" Bonds, an impressive sum that ranks with the best school record of the city.

Reports Incomplete

Complete reports from the School Children's Campaign are not available as yet, but it is known that the youngsters have added several hundred thousand dollars to the total of "E" Bonds sold thus far. Richmond's "E" Bond quota is $8,875,000, of which $2,493,066.25 already have been sold, according to Federal Reserve Bank figures through May 21. Other bonds to individuals have been purchased to the extent of $1,671,373, against a quota of $8,225,000.

"Here Is Your Infantry," the spectacular infantry show which will tour Virginia as a feature of the Seventh War Loan Campaign, will come to Richmond on Wednesday, June 13, it was announced yesterday. Demonstrations will be staged at City Stadium, and there will be no War Bond admission, though bonds may be purchased from booths placed at convenient points.

The unit which will come to Virginia is one of 28 teams of about 50 men each which underwent intensive training for these events at the Infantry School, Fort Benning, Ga. The show will last one hour, and will be repeated at intervals throughout the day.

"Here Is Your Infantry" is divided into two parts. First, there will be an exhibition of the weapons of the infantry—bazookas, mortars, machine guns, sniper's rifles, Garand rifles, tommy guns and so forth. Expert infantrymen will take apart, reassemble and explain each weapon to spectators.

The second portion of the infantry show will demonstrate an assault on a pillbox. A jungle assault unit of 37 men, reinforced with a section of heavy machine guns, will simulate an attack on a Japanese pillbox, using smoke, practice grenades, flamethrowers, demolition charges and bazookas.

All of the men who will stage the demonstrations have been decorated for bravery as the result of actual combat in the European and Pacific theaters of war.

$10,000,000 Worth Credited To Organization

Daily world — Atlanta, Ga

TUSKEGEE ARMY AIR FIELD, Ala.— (SNS) — Members of the famous 613th Army Air Forces Band were presented United States Treasury Department Citations for services rendered in national war loans, by Colonel Noel F. Parrish, Commanding Officer of Tuskegee Army Air Field, at a concert last Friday night in the Post Chapel.

In presenting the citations, Colonel Parrish commended the Band for its outstanding record in the sale of war bonds in the states of Alabama and Georgia. Also, he praised the men individually for their excellent records as soldiers as well as musicians, and for their contributions as a morale-sustain- influence on the Post.

The Band under the direction of Captin Frank L. Drye, former bandmaster at Tuskegee Institute where he developed some of the bands in America, has in less than three years made one of the most outstanding records of all Service bands. Particularly in war loans has the band distinguished itself.

2-24-45

In cooperation with the War Finance Committee for Alabama and Harry Simms, Negro Promotion Specialist, the Band has centered its service chiefly in the smaller towns of Alabama and Georgia, reaching people who otherwise would not have been reached and causing as amazing response to the appeal.

To date the band has been officialy credited with the sale of aproximately $10,000,000 worth of bonds.

2-24-45

The band's activities usually consist of a parade through the streets of the town, serenades on the way to schools and plants and a really interspersed with music at the courthouse. Here the Band sold its music for purchases of "shares in freedom."

Muriel Rahn Covers Over 10,000 Miles on Bond Wagon; Total Sales $5,000,000

Afro American 1-13-45

NEW YORK—One of the most popular young people riding Mr. Morgentheau's Bond Wagon these days is theatre and concert star Muriel Rahn. And the reason for all this popularity is very simple.

The former singing star of "Carmen Jones," who is now in the midwest on a concert tour, has traveled over 10,000 miles selling bonds during the past year and was instrumental in totaling nearly $5,000,000 in the process.

La Rahn figures she must have appeared in more than 50 bond sales meetings during the year to reach this mark, and has covered ground from New York to Texas while doing it.

Given Skyride on Tour

The Treasurey Department itself arranged a little plane trip for her from New York to New Orleans and return during the Fifth War Bond drive and this little jaunt alone netted over $1,000,000.

MURIEL RAHN

When the "Sixth" rolled around, the Treasurey Department asked her fly out to the midwest and open the drive in St. Louis.

However, concert commitments made for a conflict, so she just appeared in bond meetings whenever or wherever local townspeople asked her during her tour.

Purchases $1,000 Bond

Though she has been interested in selling bonds from the very first, her interest really reached "fever heat" in the Fourth War Bond drive when she personally bought a $1,000 bond for herself.

After that, she got the war bond bug and now she can hardly wait for the "Seventh," in which she hopes to aid in raising at least another million. 1-13-45

Selling bonds has become a hobby with Muriel Rahn.

Janitress buys $100-war bond every month

Los Angeles Tribune 1-8-45 Cal Lif.

Led by a Negro office janitress, the 350 employees of the 11th and Flower office of the United States Employment Service went over the top with 9% to spare in the 6th War Loan Bond Drive.

Running only 96% of quota just before Christmas, the holiday spirit brought the grand total of sales to 109% or $24,326.27. 1-8-45

Mrs. Annette Dixon, the janitress, has purchased a $100.00 bond every month since July, 1942. Shortly before war broke out she planned to retire, but Pearl Harbor convinced her that her part would be to take a war job and buy bonds. Her regular subscription represents more than 50% of her monthly salary. Mrs. Dixon lives at 807 E. 23rd st.

Alabama Negroes Organized For War Loan Drive

Chicago Defender 6-2-45

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — Negroes in towns of nineteen rural and semi-rural Alabama counties had organized war bond campaign organizations to spur the Seventh War Loan Drive weeks before the drive officially got underway.

Every county in the state has pledged to far exceed its quota for the drive, the Department of the Treasury has been informed by its field personnel.

Before the drive opened, at least two Negro War Finance Committees had held bond rallies. In Monroeville, Ala., a small rural community, $23,000 worth of bonds were sold in a pre-drive rally. Eufaula, Ala., also staged a pre-drive rally.

Mrs. Nell Hunter, promotion specialist, interracial section, Treasury Department, recently visited Alabama in connection with the work of the Negro War Finance committee that have been organized throughout the state. 6-2-45

The Treasury representatives was highly impressed with the manner in which the Negro citizens of rural areas were proceeding in arrangements for the Seventh War Loan.

The War Bond Saving program among Negroes in Alabama is under the direction of Harry Simms of Tuskegee.

Negro Chairman Reports Big Sales For 7th War Loan

E. E. Farley, chairman of the colored division of the War Bond Committee, Saturday reported on work of his committees in the Seventh War Loan.

G. H. Strickland, chairman of the businessmen, said the business men had pledged to double their purchases and in some cases triple them. Dr. W. G. McCoo reported purchases of $10,000 by Negro medical men. Sapp reported on the fraternal organizations. Francis C. Jones disclosed that life insurance companies were not only purchasing "E" bonds through local representatives, but that several home offices had authorized puchase of the "F" series.

Spencer High School, headed by Miss Ethel Spencer and the Tri-Hi-Y, reported that they would sell enough bonds to purchase 10 jeeps, while Fifth Avenue School, headed by Prof. B. H. Price, pledged to buy a heavy duty Field Ambulance. B. F. Moseley, chairman, of the county schools, stated that Radcliffe junior High School had pledged $3,000 in "E" bonds.

"Black Boy" Carries War Bond Message

Philadelphia Inquirer

NEW YORK, N. Y.—The back jacket of Richard Wright's best seller, Black Boy carries this War Bond message by the famous author: 6-30-45

"Down South where I was born we called our good clothes our 'Sunday Best,' and we wore them only on Sundays. Today we are all making big war money, but there aren't enough goods to buy. So I'd say let's put our money away in War Bonds until peace (Sunday) comes. Don't be a dude: All dressed up and nowhere to go. Dudes usually get into trouble. And you'll get into trouble INFLATION if you spend war dollars unnecessarily. The war is far from over; millions of boys overseas want to come back home. So pull off your "Sunday Best'—shed your dollars—and buy WAR BONDS. That's the sensible way to do it!"

Negroes' Part In War Lauded At Bond Rally

Playing Heroic Role, Says Drive Chairman

Before the largest audience so far at any of the Seventh War Loan noonday Bond rallies at Lafayette Sq., American Negro Day in Erie County's Mighty Seventh was launched yesterday with a program of music by the U. S. Coast Guard's Sea Landers Band, and with addresses by heroes of the U. S. Air Forces, including Negro pilots.

Daniel W. Streeter, chairman of the Erie County War Finance Committee, opened the rally with a tribute to the Negro population of the Niagara Frontier.

"We have more than 25,000 American Negroes living in Buffalo and vicinity," Streeter said. "Most of these men and women are working in our war industries, and particularly in those classified as the heavy industries.

Bearing Heavy Burden

"It is upon these plants that we now must place the heaviest part of the burden of supplying war material to our gigantic forces in the Pacific. Our Negro workers in the heavy industries here are playing a heroic part in that phase of our war production. Today we wish to pay an especially high tribute to these loyal and patriotic Americans."

Introduced by Martin J. Travers, chairman of the Junior Chamber of Commerce committee in charge of Seventh War Loan outdoor activities, William L. Evans, executive secretary of the Memorial Center and Urban League and chairman of American Negro Day, told the bond audience that more than "800,000 American Negroes now are in the armed services, and we who live in Erie County will do our part to support them."

"This is our sixth American Negro Day War Loan celebration. It is unique in Erie County and has furnished a pattern for similar programs in other cities. Our quota in the Seventh War Loan is voluntarily set at about $150,000. We expect to double that amount and possibly to triple it."

First Negro to Win DFC

Capt. Charles B. Hall, an original member of the 99th Fighter Squadron of the 15th U. S. Army in Italy, the first all-Negro Air Squadron to be formed, described his experiences in the African, Italian and Sicilian campaigns, where he won the first Distinguished Flying Cross presented to a Negro pilot. He was personally congratulated by Gen. Eisenhower.

Capt. Hall participated in 108 missions and is credited with shooting down the first German Messerschmitt in the Italian campaign.

Another Negro Army officer who spoke was Maj. George J. Cole of Ft. Dix, N. J., special service officer and adjutant to the area commander. In this capacity he has under his supervision more than 4,000 service men who have been in every theater of war and is responsible for their housing, feeding and work detail while they are waiting reassignment.

Officer pilots of the U. S. Army Air Forces, who brought the Armada of combat planes into Buffalo Airport, were introduced by Travers. They urged the audience to visit the airport today between 1 and [illegible] p. m., when visitors may enter and inspect the planes.

El Alamein Veteran Speaks

Other speakers included Capt. Fred J. Collett of the British Army's Lancashire Fusiliers and now attached to the British Army staff in Washington. Capt. Collett described his experiences in the Battle of El Alamein, where his unit was cut from 132 men to seven.

At a luncheon in the Hotel Statler Iroquois Room following the Lafayette Sq. program, Comptroller George W. Wanamaker announced the city had bought $250,000 in War Bonds to be allocated to the American Negro Day bond sales.

Later, Chairman Streeter reported that individual War Bond sales in Erie County up until last night amounted to $17,024,175.50, or 21.4 per cent of the county's $79,300,000 quota. "This is 42.4 per cent of the $40,300,000 quota set for industrial buyers," he said.

GIs a Swell Audience, Say Actors, Back From Pacific

Daily Worker

BY BETH McHENRY

Porgy and Bess, the 10-year old Gershwin musical has had many happy receptions in its day but none so warm and friendly as in the South Pacific during the past six months.

Seventeen members of the cast of the USO-Camp Shows' production of Porgy and Bess returned to their home base this week, tired but satisfied with the last half year's work. The seventeen, all Negro actor musicians, had doubled and tripled roles in the show, making up for what was originally a cast of 100.

In an interview at USO - Camp Shows headquarters in New York City, the Porgy and Bess cast told of entertaining and being entertained by GI's in New Caledonia, Guadalcanal, and New Hebrides. They sometimes put on four shows a day and in addition they sang with choral groups of soldiers and participated in religious ceremonies of all faiths. They returned laden with gifts and good will from the boys overseas whose appreciation made the cast as a whole want to get back to the front as fast as they can go.

ABOUT JOHN GART

Porgy and Bess was sent abroad last November and while some of the cast were from the original show, like John Garth, who played "Porgy," others were brand new to the show and had to learn their scores while traveling across the Pacific.

Mr. Garth, who had been a featured vocalist at the Cotton Club took over in the lead role of "Porgy," thereby satisfying a long time ambition. For Mr. Garth had created the role of Undertaker in the original "Porgy" and had been friends with George Gershwin. He had hoped to step into the "Porgy" role, but Gershwin died and Garth's chances apparently disappeared. However, the talented singer had learned "Poggy" by heart and when the USO approached him for the Pacific tour he went willingly.

GIs FRIENDLY 6-18-4

All members of the cast seemed to think that the GI's had been wholehearted in their acceptance of them. They recalled no instances of ill treatment or poor reception. Sol Bryson, a member of the cast, said he thought American soldiers who had been in combat had pretty much altered their ideas about Negroes and other minority groups.

"I'd like to illustrate what I mean by telling you about a soldier I met on the train when we were going west to embark," Mr. Bryson said. "This soldier was from Georgia and he had been through hell over there in Europe. But he had seen Negro GI's go through hell too. He had seen Negroes killed and he had slept with them in fox holes and he told me that he had vowed to himself, 'if ever I live through this I am going back to America and tell everybody what I've learned. There must not be any more discrimination. We've shed too much blood to let it go on anymore'."

Paul Robeson, noted baritone has just returned from a five weeks' camp show tour of Germany and Czechoslovakia. In Mr. Robeson's unit were Lawrence Brown, his accompanist, and Miriam Solovieff, violinist. Sgt. Eugene List, pianist, who played for President Truman and Generalissimo Stalin at the Potsdam Conference, joined the group in France and toured with them. 9-17-45

Mr. Robeson was deluged with requests for Negro spirituals and "Ballad for Americans." He also sang French, English and Russian folk songs. His program included Mendelssohn's "Lord God of Abraham," which the Nazis had banned from Germany.

The group broadcast from Paris and Munich and played in the Wagner Oprea House in Bayreuth, as well as in numerous small theatres and concert halls.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN ASSAM. — (ANP) — GI's in this area have had a chance to lose some of their blues by the appearance of the "Rhythm and the Blues' show, the first Negro USO-Camp shows unit to play the China-Burma-India war theatre. The show is making a six-months tour of here.

A variety show, "Rhythm and the Blues" is headed and managed by Alberta Hunter, singer, and includes Mae Gaddy, singer; Taps Miller, dancer and writer of "Flat Foot Floogie" and the three Rhythm Rascals, an instrumental-song trio. 3-23-45

In bringing entertainment to the boys here, the troupe has dodged air raids, braved tigers and wildcats of the jungle to reach spots where no other unit has played before.

Sepians Contribute Share To USO Shows

Pittsburgh Courier 1-27-45

NEW YORK—Including the first all-colored hospital show, which took to the road a couple of weeks ago, the number of colored performers who are daily working with USO Camp Shows to bring entertainment to men and women of the armed forces has now reached the 127 mark, which is a pretty fair percentage. Among these are eight tabloid units and the recently formed hospital unit working in the United States, and two variety units, one concert unit, one band unit, and the seventeen member "Porgy and Bess" legitimate troupe, who are serving overseas.

Since the organization was formed back in 1942, 414 colored performers have worked for and with the group, representing approximately 212 acts. According to estimates this represents approximately ten per cent of the total number of performers hired, which is in keeping with the ten per cent Negro population of the United States. 1-27-45

EQUAL PAY

Besides being evenly representative, it is also felt in some quarters that average Negro actors and vaudeville artists are being given equal opportunities of presentation and salary as comparable with white artists. In fact, in many instances the theory is advanced that due to the shortage of colored talent to fill Army demands, in many cases the colored acts are receiving more money than white artists of the same calibre.

Also in preparation for overseas showings is the first all-colored sports unit, which will go over like the vaudeville artists under the sponsorship of USO Camp Shows. Present plans call for the group to include Olympic track star Jesse Owens, boxer Henry Armstrong, UCLA football star Kenny Washington, Cornell football star Brud Holland, and pitcher Satchel Paige. The unit is set for a three months stay in the war theaters and is expected to get under way by mid-February.

dance and song team of Grace Smith and Johnny Berry; Louise McCarroll, pianist and vocalist, and Geneva Turman, petite singer and dancer, the unit presented one of the best shows to visit this base. 5-5-45

The Smith-Berry team stole the spotlight. Berry really knocked his GI audience out when he fell out in a black and white checkerboard zoot suit for his number, while Miss Smith broke up the show in her song-plea for a "two-fisted, double-jointed, rough and ready man." 5-5-45

Miss Smith has been starred in theatres and night clubs throughout the country and has been featured in several of the Oscar Micheaux "Million Dollar" movie productions. In Baltimore, she played the Royal Theatre and Club Astoria with such bands as Andy Kirk, Danny Logan and Tiny Bradshaw.

Berry has also played the Loew's and RKO Circuits. Miss McCarroll, tall, svelte and brownskin, became the favorite of the nation with Don Redman's orchestra several years ago, while Miss Turman, an Eastern lass from Newark, N.J., held the boys spellbound with her terrific ballad and swing singing.

USO TROUPE THRILLS DOUGHBOYS IN PERSIA

Pittsburgh Courier 1-13-45

PERSIAN GULF COMMAND—The No. 339 USO Troupe, led by Chauncey Lee of New York, recently arrived in the Persian Gulf Command to bring a little cheer to the boys. The 380th Port Battalion, the 675th Port Company and the 153rd Bakery Unit had the first opportunity to welcome the group and they put on a rousing reception.

Miss Lillian Thomas, Mrs. Wittie Wyles and Miss Cora Green were the first American Negro women that the boys had seen in almost two years . . . Dinners and parties were planned everywhere and the boys loudly applauded the smartly attired ladies each time they made an appearance. 1-13-45

The show was a howling success. Dave Wiley, the efficient master of ceremonies, started the show at a fast clip and the 418th Army Swing band set a smart rhythm pattern. Wittie Wiley brought down the house with "Is You Is Or Is You Ain't My Baby," topped off with some smart dancing. "Lil" Thomas played the "St. Louis Blues" with a solid bass that brought raves from the packed house and climaxed her several encores by singing in a sultry sweet and low voice, "My Ideal." 1-13-45

Chauncey Lee (introduced as Joady) kept the boys in stitches the whole time he was on the stage and then showed superb musicianship by playing "Blue Skies," an own original number on the guitar . . . Miss Cora Green was the last to make her rendition of "The Laziests Gal in Town" and "Stormy Weather."

Wherever the group played they were received and the entire Command is looking forward to one of the most successful tours of the season to be put on by the No. 339 USO Unit.

Originally Camp Shows wanted to send Rochester out in a unit of Negro girls, thinking this would appeal to Negro GIs most, but Rochester held out for white bandsters. Even though there have been some mixed units in this country, and the treatment afforded Negro units overseas is above reproach, Camp Shows prefers sending all-Negro units abroad. For one thing, the Army in its requisitions asks for Negro units, although Rochester might be classified as a personality tour and be in a special category.

There's no question of deprecating race equality here, it's understood, but simply the practical matter of two Negro musicians getting the job instead of the whites. Negro talent is aware of and grateful for the opportunity Camp Shows has afforded for equal pay and recognition, and simply wants to take full advantage of the situation by filling all the jobs available.

Largest Servicemen's Center In U. S. Under Harlemites' Noses

By FLORENCE MURRAY

Few Harlemites know that right under their noses is the largest single center for servicemen in the country. It is the Salvation Army Service Center, on 124 st, just around the corner from the Hotel Theresa. By the largest center, we mean that it covers the largest area and accommodates more men than any other. It is financed exclusively by the Salvation Army, and, of course, welcomes men of all races, creeds and nationalities. Its staff is all-Negro, but among its 1,200 voluntary hostesses are at least fifty young white women.

Thus far $189,000 has been spent to equip the huge building, which can sleep 600 men in an emergency. Director Walter Roark explained. Three hundred beds are kept in apple-pie order at all times, and 300 more can be set up when needed.

Last month the center had an attendance of 51,186 servicemen. 8,000 slept there and 63,000 ate at the lunch counter.

There is the usual snack bar, which serves full-grown meals at nominal charges, cooked by an expert chef, an honorably discharged Navy man, Perry Holliday. The food tastes like home sweet home—probably better than many mothers can prepare. The pies and cakes are strictly home-made. This is not an advertisement for the lunch counter, for only servicemen can eat here.

BRUSH-UP ROOM

The pet pride of the management, pointed out Assistant Director Cornelius Davis, is the center's brush-up bsaement. Here a man can wash and iron his clothes, mend the snags, sew on buttons, shower, shave, shine his shoes, and get ready for a date or his trip back to the post, in twenty minutes flat. This service is open at all times to servicemen, whether they stay overnight at the center or not, and there is no charge for it.

There is a chapel where services are held on Sundays by various ministers. There is, of course, a parlor where entertainments are given—and many well known stars come here to do their bit. There is a play room, with pool tables, ping pong, cards, checkers and all the popular games that good fellows like to play.

The entertainment program is one of the most unique, too, in these parts. Artists come to the center on certain nights and make various contests are given free long distance telephone calls home or to their friends. Good-looking hostesses help the boys make merry and serve their food on Sundays and holidays. There are other items of interest on the weekly programs which are too numerous to mention here.

British, Canadians, Free French, and soldiers, sailors, marines, coast guardsmen, of a number of allied nations drop in. Many of them are just learning about the club and more and more white servicemen are dropping in to spend the night and enjoy the fun.

Other members of the staff are Mrs. Georgia Roark, chief housekeeper, who keeps things in spotless order; Miss Beatrice Madison, head of outside activities (hostesses make trips to nearby posts, especially the embarkation centers where the men are house-bound until sailing time.). Mrs. Clare Hart is in charge of the eats. Other assistant directors are Alber Willis and Maurice Dawkins. P. J. Sidney is chief of program director.

Seamen Of All Colors Welcome At USS Clubs Throughout World

Chicago Defender

By RAMONA LOWE
(Defender New York Bureau)

NEW YORK—In Oran and Algiers, in Calcutta and far off Karachi, in Honolulu and Hvalfjordur can be found a place of rest and recreation for the men who man the ships of America's merchant fleet.

They are the residential and recreation centers of the United Seamen's Service. Whatever the race, color or creed of the men the rules of the USS say they shall be welcome.

Marx Bowens

Organized in 1942 to take care of the thousands of courageous merchant seamen who unlike the soldiers and sailors were left to fend for themselves in port, centers equipped to bring a bit of America to homesick boys at sea have been established all over the world. Such homey, but morale building touches, as electric fans in New Caledonia and cold beer in Iran are part of the set-up of the residential clubs. And for those torpedoed and war-wracked seamen there are medical facilities and rest centers.

One of the first problems the USS faced was the setting up of residential facilities in this country. Men would come into crowded ports and find that they were not considered essential to the war effort by harrassed hotel keepers. They had to sleep on park benches, in hallways, dives—any place that would accept their sea-weary bodies. So residential clubs were established in the chief ports throughout the country.

Dixie Problem

Since Negroes make up a proportion of the merchant seamen special problems arose in connection with their housing below the Mason and Dixon line. William S. Newel in a survey of conditions in Pacific and Gulf ports noted that in New Orleans providing services to Negro merchant seamen where the laws and customs require segregation created complications. A local committee recommended complying with local laws, so separate establishments were set up. A similar plan was carried out in Norfolk and will probably be repeated in other Southern ports.

The New Orleans unit is the George Washington Carver Hotel, 837 Iberville street. It can accommodate more than 60 seamen in its 27 rooms. It is completely staffed by Negroes and is reported to have one of the finest recreational set-ups of USS clubs in the country.

Manager and recreational director is Alvin H. Jones, former Xavier university economics professor who has a leave of absence from the university.

One Worker Overseas

The Norfolk Prince George Hotel which is also completely staffed by Negroes has accommodations for 50 seamen. Manager of the hotel is Alex Riviera, son of Dr. Alex Riviera of Yonkers, New York. Riviera was formerly employed in Naval Intelligence in Norfolk and was a Journal and Guide photographer.

At these hotels accommodations range in price from 75 cents to $2.00. Food is sold at cost.

At this writing the only Negro USS worker overseas is Marx Bowens who is serving in Calcutta, India. Bowens, son of the late Dr. J. J. Bowens, USS Consul to Martinique, was a member of the New York City Department of Welfare and a former track star at Amherst college. As a personal service worker he has a variety of duties in the foreign port which may begin with giving aid to the survivors of maritime disasters and may end with supervising a wedding.

Theodore H. Smith, special field representative and adviser on services to Negro merchant seamen explained that each Port Area committee, which takes charge of USS activities in the area, is patterned after the National Executive committee. It includes representatives of shipowners, operators, unions, the War Shipping Administration and the public. An attempt has been made to get Negro representation on the Port Area committees rather than to establish separate advisory committees.

Advisory Committees

In Mobile, Alabama, and Norfolk, Va., there are three Negro members of the Port Area committee. In Mobile they are J. S. Leflore, B. F. Baker and C. E. Powell. In Norfolk they are Horace G. Christopher, David E. Longley, and W. T. Mason. In Galveston, Texas, J. H. Clouser is a member of the committee. In Houston, Tex., Rev. J. H. Scott is a member.

The Negro Advisory committee in Norfolk includes J. Eugene Diggs, John W. Ward, F. W. Lewis, Rev. W. L. Hamilton, P. B. Young, Sr., and David Alston.

Houston's Committee includes W. C. Craver, F. L. Lane, C. A. Shaw, C. W. Wesley, Dr. B. J. Covington, Mrs. Theodore S. Harris, Rev. A. A. Lucas, L. J. Jones, Rev. L. H. Simpson, Dr. C. W. Pemberton, R. L. Crawford, Freeman Everett, A. E. Norton, Mrs. J. White, J. B. Ury and C. L. Ransom.

In New Orleans, F. L. Rousseve is chairman of the committee. T. L. Duval is chairman in Charleston, S. C., and Dr. J. Blackburne Matthews is chairman in Port Arthur, Texas.

The chief problem in New York has not been residential accommodations, but hostess' attitudes in the recreational centers. "We have had the problem of educating hostesses," Mr. Smith said. "But that is being corrected and Negro seamen are being made to feel part of the picture."

Mrs. Osceola Adams, a member of the Executive committee of the Stage Door Canteen, was recruited to help with the education of hostesses who had not had the advantage of wide contacts.

There is a National Negro Advisory Committee to Douglas Falconer, executive director of USS. The members are Samuel Allen, Commissioner Samuel Battle, who is chairman, Judge Hubert Delaney, Lester Granger, Judge William Hastie, Rev. John Johnson, Ferdinand Smith, Dr. Channing Tobias, and Dr. Max Yergan.

Negro Soldiers and Morale

Richmond Times-Dispatch

Editor of The Times-Dispatch:

Being a Negro soldier, I should like to make a few observations upon some of Senator Eastland's statements. I shall assume for the sake of argument that some Negro soldiers did all that he accuses them of doing, and that the 92nd Division was as bad as the "general" informed him. The "general" could also inform him that morale is one of the most important factors in the success of an army.

An army with a low morale, despite superior equipment and training, will be defeated by an inferior foe. Examples are the Russian army in World War I and the French army of 1940.

Having been trained in Jim Crow camps among hostile communities in which many were murdered by civilians, subjected to gross indignities, insulted by officers who called them "niggers" and "boys," and held up to the world as moron and despoilers of women by Southern Congressmen, if the Negro troops had a will to fight at all, they were supermen.

As for the Senegalese, the American Negro troops had no more to do with the conduct of French troops than with that of the Germans who raped French and Russian women.

To give Negroes preference in jobs would not be fair. The Fair Employment Practice Committee was created to insure a fair deal to all in the matter of jobs. It does not seek to give job preference to any group.

To say that something must be kept pure implies that it is pure. According to the best authorities on the subject, there are no pure civilized races. Moreover, if giving the Negro economic justice is going to mongrelize the white race, its moral fibre must be woefully weak.

Mr. Eastland's remarks will not improve the already low morale of a half-million Negro troops, nor will it serve to increase racial good will and harmony.

If Messrs. Eastland, Rankin and Bilbo must be allowed to utter these hate-inspired and hate-breeding tirades in the halls of Congress, I suggest that all newspapers that desire to promote tolerance, mutual understanding and good will between the races refuse to print such articles.

Senator Eastland's Charges

Richmond Times-Dispatch

Editor of The Times-Dispatch:

Your June 30 issue had a front page article under the caption, "Negro Army Units Called Failure By Senator Eastland" (D-Miss.). Now what could be the cause of this if Senator Eastland's statements are true? Our Negro units in World War I had splendid records, both in fighting and morals. Neither the army nor the navy has yet disclosed a thing regarding the Negro units' fighting or their behavior in the army in this war, but I feel sure that if it was as bad, or in part, as Senator Eastland put it, it would have been divulged by someone, as Drew Pearson brought the Patton soldier-slapping to the public.

It is well known the world over that Washington did let John L. Lewis get by with a lot of un-American stuff, but I don't believe the army and navy would have let the Negro soldiers and sailors get by with the atrocities Senator Eastland accused them of without something being done about it. 6-6-45

Our Nation's Negro Soldiers

by Doxey Wilkerson

Daily Worker

THE Senate of the United States of America has again listened "courteously" to the lying and filthy voices of Bilbo and Eastland, both from the political cesspools of the Deep South. In the course of their filibuster to prevent a democratic vote on the FEPC appropriation, they sank to new depths in their slanders against the Negro people and especially against Negro fighting men in the Armed Forces of our nation. 6-26-45

Eastland, for example, had the insolence to declare: "I state that the conduct of the Negro soldier all vore Europe was disgraceful to the flag of their country." (He also told a cock-and-bull lie about French Senegalese troops, Negro colonials, allegedly raping 5,000 German women in a Stuttgart subway—a completely irresponsible charge which the local French consulate has formally protested to our State Department).

This poison was spewed forth for days, completely tying up the urgent legislative tasks of "the greatest deliberative body on earth." Yet, not one voice was raised in the Senate to protest this most disgraceful performance ever witnessed in any democratic governmental assembly—anywhere!

Nor has our War Department spoken up to refute what it knows to be demoralizing lies against Negroe soldiers, despite the fact that we are still in the midst of a hard war which will tax the morale and efficiency of all our fighting men to the utmost.

It is amazing that this could be. More than that, it is downright ominous. A Senate and a War Department that can tolerate such fascist racism as that preached by Bilbo and Eastland last week, without making vigorous and overwhelming protest, could very easily accommodate themselves to the ranting of an American "Hitler." They are, indeed highly unreliable guardians of the democratic liberties of the American people.

Generals Speak Up

But there is no dearth of expert testimony with which to refute the Bilbo-Eastland slanders against our Negro soldiers. Listen to what some of our top-flight generals in the European War have had to say about Negro troops under their command:

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, Supreme Allied Commander: "I have seen Negro soldiers in this war and they have rendered valuable service. In late November, 2,000 of them volunteered for front-line service in Germany and they did good work."

Lieut. Gen. Mark Clark, Commander of the 15th Army: "Negro troops in the 15th Army Group have served in many roles during this campaign and have made a substantial contribution to its success."

Maj. Gen. M. S. Eddy, Commander of an army group with which the 761st all-Negro tank battalion fought: "The speed with which they have adapted themselves to the front under the most adverse weather conditions, the gallantry with which they faced some of Germany's finest troops and the confident spirit with which they emerged from their present engagements entitle them surely to consider themselves 'The Veteran 761st.'"

Maj. Gen. Terry Allen, of the famous mixed (Negro-white) 104th Timberwolf Division, who has just returned to America (while awarding heroes' medals to his fighting troops): "We are proud of you."

Brig. Gen. Charles Trueman Lanham, also of the 104th Timberwolft Division: "I have never seen any soldiers who have performed in combat better than you."

Lieut. Gen. Ira C. Eaker, under whose command the justly famous Negro flyers fought: "The 99th Fighter Squadron and the 332d Fighter Group have done well. By their efforts and performance they have won a place on the great Air Forces team. The fact of discouragement, doubts, and difficulties did not stop them any more than did the Jerry aircraft or flak they encountered. They demonstrated the stuff from which champions are made. Anybody can coast along when the going is smooth. It takes heart and guts to push on when the way ahead is rough and rocky.'

I wish I had space to supplement this contemporary testimony with that of American history. In every one of our wars, Negro soldiers have always performed with heroism and gallantry, and have received the enthusiastic plaudits of their commanding officers. Incidentally, this better than anyone else, and has recorded the glorious tradition of Negro fighting men in great detail for use in the training of white and pro-fascist officers.

Negroes must speak up to demand it.

Write to Sen. Alben Barkley, Majority Leader, and to your own Senators. Insist that they act to have the Senate rebuke Bilbo and the disgust- Eastland for their disgraceful performance from formance during the anti-FEPC filibuster. 6-26-45

Patterson Praises Negro Soldiers

Atlanta Constitution

WASHINGTON, July 5.—(AP)—Undersecretary of War Patterson said today the Army is proud of its Negro soldiers and that he knows of no high ranking general who has condemned their performance. 7-6-45

Patterson thus took issue with Sen. Eastland, Democrat, Mississippi. The latter declred last week during senate debate on the fair employment practices committee that high ranking generals told hi mon a recent overseas trip the Negro troops "would neither work nor fight." Eastland called them an "utter and abysmal failure."

An Infamous Slander

Star of Zion

Senator James O. Eastland, of Mississipi, who probably occupies a seat in the Senate in violation of the Constitution, misrepresenting approximately 80 percent of the voters of his state, has the unmitigated gall to maliciously, wicked and viciously slander and malign American Negro soldiers, who have died on the battlefields of the world in defending a democracy and freedom, without which this charlatan could not utter his falsehoods against the brave patriots who fought in defense of their country. 7-5-45

Speaking to "only a half dozen Senators," the majority of the ninety probably absent because of utter disgust of this ignoramus' exhibition of prejudice, Senator Eastland was filibustering against continuance of the FEPC, which was made possible by the late President Roosevelt and the permanence of which has been urged by President Truman.

That the statement he makes that he was informed by "high ranking generals" that Negro soldiers "would neither work nor fight" is utterly without foundation is proved by the fact that General Eisenhower, General Clark, General Bradley, General Patton, General Simpson and General MacArthur have repeatedly praised the valor of American Negro fighting men, and others of equal dependability have paid high tribute to the bravery and fortitude of the Negro soldier, to say nothing of the many citations which Negro service men have received.

The Senator from Mississippi attempts to make much of a so-called mass raping of German women by French Senegalese and Berber troops, and would apparently link them with American Negro soldiers because they happened to have been "wearing American lend-lease uniforms." The maligning Senator makes no attempt to give any figures of rapings committed by white soldiers, or the reportedly thousands of illegitimate children left by them in occupied areas and in England, some stories of which have shocked the American people.

Moreover, if he had had the decency and fairness to do so, he might have given some very interesting figures on the number of cases of rape committed by white men upon Negro women in the state of Mississippi and the resultant intermixture of the races in his backward and benighted state.

By all of his rantings the Senator simply proves to what length ignorance and prejudice will go in an attempt to circumvent the operation of democracy and fairness in employment, which the decent people of America have demanded; indeed, no stronger endorsement of the FEPC and urgence of its passage has been forthcoming than one from fair-minded and liberal people of the South. 7-5-45

Definitely Below the Belt

Hardly anything could be calculated to deal a severer blow at cordial relations between the Caucasian and Negro races in the United States, to inflame animosity worse, than the irresponsible utterances in the senate Friday by Senator JAMES O. EASTLAND of Mississippi regarding the conduct of Negro soldiers in this war, utterances aimed at undercutting the fair employment practices commission. Mr. EASTLAND's statements demand an answer from the war department giving detailed facts, because thier vague generalities and internal evidences of exaggeration lay them open to suspicion of open slander.

The episode has the flavor of a desperate attempt regardless of the means necessary to defeat a measure in which the opponent had a large personal interest. It is not at all unlikely that this extremism may set up a revulsion which will effect the very aim Mr. EASTLAND seeks to circumvent.

He has made some deadly charges against the Negro in the present war. He says some "high-ranking generals" (whom, inexplicably or otherwise, he fails to name) informed him while in Europe that Negro troops would neither work nor fight; that the 92nd division, officered by Negroes commissioned for political reasons, was an "utter abysmal failure"; that it was necessary to disarm a good many Negro soldiers because they forced Frenchmen to stand aside while they raped French women; and that French Senegalese troops locked 5,000 German women in at Stuttgart and raped many of them.

Now all that is extremely broad. No doubt, there have been crimes committed by individual Negro soldiers; but that is true of white soldiers as well. Mr. EASTLAND's charges condemn every black man we have in the ranks. And why drag in the Senegalese, far below the scale of American civilization, even if the charge against them can be fully substantiated? They are utterly irrelevant.

If anything like the grave condition implied by Mr. EASTLAND's outburst exists among our Negro troops, both white and Negro sections of the American population are entitled to know it. If such conditions exist, it means that our entire investment in Negro military personnel is a liability rather than an asset. Mr. EASTLAND's outburst is not convicing, and is symptomatic as well of distortion of the facts to fit a momentary purpose.

Unless he can thoroughly substantiate his charges, Mr. EASTLAND has offered a grave insult to the Negro section of the American population. If his charges are not accurate, they should be fully rebutted, and then he should be required by his senatorial colleagues to offer an adequate apology. All this is entirely apart from the merits of the advisory fair employment practices commission. It betrays him as guilty of the very racial antipathy which the fair employment practices commission was designed to destroy through counsel and advice.

Norfolk Editor Cites Proof of Negroes' Valor

Not 'Abysmal Failure' In Highest Generals' View, Young Says

What generals supposedly furnished Senator Eastland of Mississippi with the purported facts upon which he based his charge that Negro troops in this war have been "an utter and abysmal failure" is difficult to imagine, in view of the high praise which our top generals in all major theatres of operations have publicly accorded those same fighters, declared Editor P. Bernard Young, Jr., of the Journal and Guide, described as the largest Negro newspaper published in the South and one of the five most widely circulated Negro weeklies in the country, in a statement Saturday.

The Negro editor documented his assertion with quotations from statements by famous American generals and with rebuttals by three war correspondents of the Journal and Guide who, between them, have spent 28 months in active war zones with our troops and on the high seas with Navy personnel.

Before the European war ended, or since they have returned to this country, the Journal and Guide editor pointed out, Generals Dwight Eisenhower, George Patton, Mark Clark, Ira C. Eaker, Lucien K. Truscott, M. S. Eddy and E. M. Allmond, to name a few, have publicly furnished testimony on the valor and performance of Negro soldiers that repudiate the sweeping claim by the Mississippi Senator.

"Was it these generals to whom Senator Eastland says he talked?" asked the Guide editor. "Hardly."

General Douglas MacArthur, Maj. Gen. Raymond G. Lehman, Navy Secretary Forrestal and others have similiarly rated the Negro soldier and sailor highly on the basis of performance in the Pacific, Young added.

The Norfolk newspaper's war correspondents, Thomas W. Young, Lem Graves, Jr. and John Jordan, on the basis of their first-hand experience with our troops in combat, took sharp issue with Eastland's unqualified indictment.

Each of the correspondents cited contradictory appraisals of Negro servicemen given to them in interviewing famous combat generals.

For instance, Jordan declared: "Did the soldiers do a good job? The Germans thought they did. And so did Gen. Mark Clark, and I know they did."

Correspondent Thomas Young said: "A great number of Negro soldiers and many fighter pilots are going to be quite surprised and a little bitter when they learn on authority of Senator Eastland that they have been 'utter and abysmal failures'—but, fortunately, they will be spared that suffering—because none of them returned from their missions. They died in the service of their country."

With special reference to Senator Eastland's direct reference to the Ninety-second Division, Correspondent Graves declared: "Maj. Gen. E. M. Allmond, who commanded the Ninety-second Division in Italy, on the day after V-E Day declared that his 'artillery, tank, and engineer units had maintained throughout the final phases of the Italian campaign the same magnificent performance for which they had previously been cited many times by General Truscott and Gen. Mark W. Clark, commanding general of the Fifteenth Army Group in Italy.' General Allmond made this statement while seated at dinner in the Hotel Columbia in Genoa on May 9."

Crime Wave' Soldiers Celebrate Anniversary

P.M. N.Y. 4-8-45

More than 2000 Negro soldiers stationed at the Fox Hills cantonment, Staten Island, took time out from Army routine for a few hours Friday, to laugh, cheer, and applaud a special morale-boosting show of professional and GI entertainment in Stapleton's Paramount Theater.

These same soldiers have been under attack from civilians living near the cantonment who accuse them of being responsible for a Staten Island "crime wave."

The soldiers saw a performance, highlighted by such Negro stars as Bill Robinson and S/Sgt. Joe Louis, which was part of a day-long program celebrating the first anniversary of the founding of the Fox Hills cantonment.

The show featured several stars from the forthcoming Negro musical comedy, Memphis Bound, including Thelma Carpenter and Ida James, both singers. The GI entertainment featured, among others, the dancing talents of Cpl. Charles Atkinson of Camp Kilmer. Master of ceremonies was Sgt. Jules Munshin, from Camp Shanks.

The heartiest laughs came when Cpl. Harvey Stone of the Port Special Services Dept. who lumbered onto the stage, and began telling jokes about the trials and tribulations of the GI.

District Attorney F. H. Kane, of Richmond, who on Mar. 14 announced that the Grand Jury would investigate the "crime wave" in the area around the cantonment, was invited to attend, but he did not put in an appearance.

Negro GIs Hold Review on S. I.

Daily Worker-N.Y. 4-7-45

Negro troops at the big Fox Hills Terminal base in Stapleton, Staten Island yesterday, marked Army Day by staging an impressive review in which port companies competed for trophies on the parade field.

About 150 white and Negro civilians watched the review, as well as a group of white and Negro officers from other bases who were guests of the Fox Hills cantonment. Several thousand Negro troops at the Fox Hills base are being trained for military stevedoring work. The men are trained in rotation and shipped all over the world.

The ceremonies began with a show staged at the Paramount Theater in Stapleton, where Bill Robinson, famous dancer, Joe Louis, world heavyweight champion now in the armed forces, and other entertainers performed. Spectators applauded lustily when a company of Negro WACS went through intricate marching tactics. Capt. Richard T. Green and Capt. Peter M. Depp were judges of the port companies contest. Other troops staged a demonstration of loading and unloading of supply ships on board the Fox Hills training "land ship."

Southerners Blast Eastland's Tirade

New Orleans, La. Louisiana Weekly

Nashville, July 3.—Prompted by Sen. Eastland's scurrilous attack on the heroic record of Negro servicemen on the senate floor, the Southern Conference for Human Welfare sent the following telegram Saturday to the President and to Secretary Stimson and Secretary Forrestal: 7-2-45

"Believing yesterday's statement by Senator Eastland of Mississippi slurring record of Negro soldiers does great damage to war effort here and on front lines, earnestly beseech you to set the record straight and call to the attention of the country the real story of the heroism of our Negro soldiers and sailors."

The telegram was signed by Clark Foreman, president of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, liberal organization with thousands of members throughout the south.

Opinions of the People:

To "A Proud Mother of a Sailor Son": Your very words "If I was of the Negro race, etc.," speaks volumes in itself alone. Your conception is that the Negro is lesser than other people. You don't seem to grasp that they, too, are Americans just like your boy who enlisted after Pearl Harbor. Would you honestly in your heart deny another American the same rights and courtesies that your boy is fighting for?

They don't ask to be placed in separate armies, drive trucks, do stevedore work and wait on your boy, just because of a difference in pigmentation of the skin. It is you and your like that have some misguided conception that you are superior, that prolong these practices.

If and when these injustices are curbed, we Americans will suffer together, or rejoice together. Would you deny a fellow American that right? I don't see where race comes into the picture.

Fire Fighter Saves Many, Perils Himself

Atlanta Daily World

7-14-45

MIAMI BEACH, Florida — (SNS) — More than on airman owes his life to Private First Class Clarence Gammon, although none of them know who he is. As a member of the 1245th Engineers Fire Fighting Platoon in Italy, Gammon was stationed at an airfield near Pompeii where he pulled fliers to safety after they had crash-landed and been trapped in the flaming wrecks of their planes.

7-14-45

"At least one plane a day crashed at our field and sometimes there were as many as three," said Gammon, 20-year-old-son of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison Gammon, Sneads, Florida. "It was all in a day's work putting out the fires that followed the crashes, and rescuing the men inside whenever we could.

"We never knew who they were, and they never knew us because they were taken away in ambulances immediately to have their injuries treated."

HAZARDOUS WORK

Gammon admitted that fire fighting was hazardous work because of the danger of explosions—and a cane he carries at the AAF Regional and Convalescent Hospital in Miami Beach bears testimony to that fact. Until recently he was in traction with a broken leg, but is healing rapidly now.

"I was sitting in my fire truck at the edge of the field one day last September," he said, "when a P-47 came in out of control. "It headed right for where I was and I began to make tracks.

7-14-45

"The plane crashed and exploded, I stumbled and fell. At first I didn't know what happened. When I tried to get to my feet again I found I had been hit by a fragment that broke my leg." Gammon has been hospitalized ever since.

BRADENTON MAN TO BE PROXY IN NEGRO WEDDING

BRADENTON, June 4.—(Special.)—W. B. Shelby Crichlow, prominent Bradenton attorney, will take the marital vows for Frank Robert Taylor, Bradenton Negro soldier serving in the Pacific, when Taylor is married by proxy to Geneva Austin within the next few days.

Crichlow appeared at the county judge's office today with the 21-year-old Negro woman and in behalf of the 27-year-old Taylor signed an application for a marriage license. The application will be posted for the three days required under Florida's new marriage law.

Crichlow said he would appear for Taylor when the ceremony is performed. He left at the judge's office an agreement executed by Taylor designating him as the Negro's attorney-in-fact and authorizing Crichlow to take the vows in his name at the ceremony.

Asked how he happened to be picked for the job, Crichlow said the Austin woman and her mother had been employed by his family for a number of years and that he handled a recent action in which Taylor divorced his first wife. Taylor is overseas with an army engineers' unit.

Appalled By Grossly Unjust Congress Talk

Memphis world

NEW YORK— (S N S)— The American Veterans Committe has registered a vigorous protest against the slurring remark against Negro troops made by Senator Eastland on the Senate floor recently.

In a telegram sent to Senator James Mead, Senator Robert F. Wagner and Senator Albin Barkley, the chairman of the new veterans organization, Charles G. Bolte, stated, "The American Veterans Committee is appalled by the grossly unjust statement on Negro soldiers made on the floor of the United States Senate last Friday."

RECALL IS URGED

7-10-45

In protest to the remark of Senator Eastland of Mississippi that Negro troops had been "an utter and abysmal failure" the telegram continued, "As men who have fought beside Negro troops on every front we know this to be a rank calumny on the heroism of our colored fighting men, and urge you to recall to the Senate and the people the individual and unit accomplishments of our Negro troops."

The American Veterans Committee with executive offices at 554 Madison Ave., in New York, is a new organization for men and women veterans of World War II. Its Statement of Intentions sets a definite policy against discriminations based on race, color or creed.

Accused of Violating 93rd Article of War; in 'White' Side of Bus Waiting Room

Iowa Bystander — Des Moines, Iowa

8-9-45

Louisville, Ky.—Following acquittal of the three Negro WACs accused of violating the 93rd Article of war for sitting on the "white" side of a bus waiting room in Elizabethtown, Kentucky, the Louisville NAACP announced the possibility of taking specific action against the civilian policeman who brutally beat Pfc. Helen Smith and Pfc. Georgia Boson. Private Smith was beaten over the head with a blackjack and dragged across the bus station floor when the women objected to being called "nigger wenches."

8-9-45

J. H. McKinney, president of the Louisville branch NAACP, has secured an affidavit from Pfc. Smith which may form the basis for action against the policeman.

The girls were charged with violating the 93rd article of War dealing with disorderly conduct.

The only defense reported as failure to "move fast enough" when ordered out of the white waiting room. They sought to explain that the "colored waiting room" was crowded with men and the lights in there were out. One witness reported that a policeman began beating the girls in uniform with his nightstick and yelling, "when we tell n—— to move we mean for them to git." During the melee, another white officer arrived and assisted in dragging one of the WACs to jail.

With the military charge dropped, the WACs are considering filing a civil suit against the policeman who beat them.

8-9-45

J. H. McKinney, president of the Louisville branch NAACP, has secured an affidavit from Pfc. Smith which may form the basis for action against the policeman.

McKinney says that Elizabethtown is a hot bed of prejudice; that the Negroes there are intimidated and the situation is difficult, but that his branch plans to press the case to the limit.

Pfc. Smith was on her way back to Ft. Knox from Memphis when the incident occurred. Because the train was late and getting later because of being placed on sidings for troop trains, Pfc. Smith decided to get off at Elizabethtown, take a bus and try to get to camp on time in as much as she had never been cited for any violation or regulations and held a good conduct medal.

Overcrowded

After purchasing her ticket at the bus station and finding the "colored" section overcrowded she sat down on the "nearest bench to the colored section." According to her explanation it was not long before several other colored WACs joined her and eventually a civilian policeman appeared cursing and calling them "nigger wenches" and telling them they would have to move because that section was for white people only.

He threatened arrest if they did not move whereupon Pfc. Smith told him he should call an M.P. Angered the civilian policeman replied he had no need of anyone telling him how to handle "nigger wenches." At this point Pfc. Georgia Boson of Texas rebelled and said they had heard enough about "niggers" and they would not stand more .

The civilian policeman then took out his blackjack and started beating the WAC over the head. When she attemped to intervene, Pfc. Smith was dragged across the bus station floor by the policeman who twisted her ankle and skinned her elbow.

The WACs go neither sympathy nor support from their commander who reportedly reprimanded the women for failing to observe the jim crow laws and patterns of the community.

Negro Soldiers Nabbed In Paris 'Black Market'

Chicago Defender 1-6-45

1-6-45

PARIS.—The gigantic, GI-operated black market in Paris was made public here this week by the United States army.

Cracking down on the black market which involved an untold amount of army equipment sold to French civilians at fabulous prices, a number of white and Negro soldiers were convicted in army court here for burglary and the illegal sale of government material.

As disclosed by the army the cases included those of Private Morris L. Fredericks, white, who, together with Private Herman Coleman, colored, held up a cafe in the Montmarte district of Paris on the night of Oct. 13, and obtained 2,100,000 francs—($42,000)—worth of jewelry, bonds and cash.

Earlier the two soldiers had gone A.W.O.L. and lived for two months in a Paris hotel, with Private Turner Harris. All allegedly supported themselves on profits from the sale of government gasoline to the black market.

The night following the hold-up Fredericks and Harris were arrested by military police and the night after that Coleman was picked up by M.P.s at another hotel.

Another case involved Private Herchel Maze Jr., Private Calvin Perry and Private Robert T. Williams, all colored. 1-6-45

Bought Smokes From G.I.s

These men were said to have lived in a hotel in the Paris suburb of Malakoff with 11,000 packages of American cigarettes and smoking tobacco. Operating a black market of their own, the men claimed they had bought the cigarettes from a truck driver.

For illegal possession and sale of government property Maze and Perry were convicted and sentenced to 15 years imprisonment and Williams to 10 years.

At the time of his arrest Williams carried 165,000 francs—($3,300)—which was returned to him after his conviction on the ground that the court never had proved this particular currency was obtained illegally.

Other cases involving Negroes were listed as follows:

Private Raymond Maddox who was convicted of selling 600 gallons of gasoline to the black market. Arrested with him were three French civilians, one of whom had a United States army automatic pistol. Maddox was sentenced to 25 years. 1-6-45

Private Robert S. Jackson was convicted of attempting to get gasoline under faked orders and sentenced to 10 years.

Private Elbert L. Hufendick, a truck driver on the Red Ball supply route, who was sentenced to 10 years for selling 225 gallons of gasoline to a French civilian. When arrested he had 14,000 francs and carried two German automatics.

Private Efrid King, who was convicted of going A.W.O.L. with a truckload of American food rations, cigaretts and post exchange supplies and disposing of them in the black market. He was sentenced to life imprisonment.

Private Eddie Hackworth was sentenced to five years for attempting to obtain gasoline on forged tickets while impersonating a non-commissioned officer. 1-6-45

Private Edward Frazier was convicted of disposing of 1,055 gallons of gasoline in the black market and sentenced to five years imprisonment.

As yet, no addresses of these men have been made available by the army.

African Troops Lead Advance On Burma Japs

Chicago Defender 1-6-45

Chicago, Ill.

By GEORGE PADMORE
(Defender London Correspondent)

LONDON—Because of their outstanding achievements in the Burma campaign, African troops are for the first time getting head-line credit for leading the advance against the Japs. 1-6-45

Military spokesmen in London reveal that at the time of writing this dispatch, a race is going on between the 11th East African Division and the British 36th Division to see which force will reach Mandalay, the former capital of Burma, first. The advanced positions of the East Africans driving southwards from Kalewa to Shwegyin are roughly 209 miles away from Mandalaya.

According to dispatches reaching London military circles from the South-East Asia theatre of operations, the East Africans, after crossing the Chindwib from Kalewa under the cover of darkness established a firm bridgehead on the east bank, and they are now reinforcing their position against strong Japanese resistance. It is reported that except for stragglers in the Kalewa area, the Africans have cleared the Japs from all the areas west of Chindwin and the north-well-defined pattern.

In the upper Chindwin sector Fourteenth Army troops have established on the east bank a wide bridgehead in the area southeast of Sittaung. Naba, on which the British troops are advancing, is about seven miles south of Pinwe, which is a junction from which a 15-mile railway line runs southeast to the of the Myitha river.

Military medals have been awarded to Cpl. Malakwen Sitieri and Pvt. Kasulu Nyaka, serving with the King's Royal East African Rifles, who under heavy enemy fire unhesitantly brought accurate machine-gun fire and grenades to bear on the position, and so silenced the Japs and enabled the platoon to take the position.

"The initiative and prompt action of Corporal Malakwen and Private Kasulu in silencing the enemy's fire," says the official War Office citation, "undoubtedly saved many casualties being suffered by the two advancing platoons, and their actions are worthy of the highest praise."

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA)—A declaration expressing supportt for the mixed combat unit policy employed by the War Department in the defeat of Germany, and urging its rapid extension to all branches of the service will shortly be submitted to President Truman by the National Negro Congress. The statement has been endorsed already by a number of Congressmen and Senators and by outstanding leaders throughout the country. 6-13-45

The statement declares that the assignment of Negro troops to mixed combat units on the Western Front climaxed "a series of positive development to break down discrimination in the Armed Forces with a definite change in the traditional segregated policy of the Army." It quotes the official Army magazine, "YANK," as saying "the results of the policy have been to increase combat manpower against the enemy in the most crucial phase of the war, and a boon to the morale of our fighting men as well as millions of Negro and white people at home.

Russia's Decision Believed Assures Enemy's Surrender

Nashville, (Tenn) Globe

There was great rejoicing in Nashville over the news released by President Truman Wednesday that Russia had declared war on Japan. The rejoicing came not only from civilians but from men in the uniform of their country, many of whom expected to be called upon to go to the Pacific to fight the Japanese until they submitted to unconditional surrender. It was not believed by either citizens or civilians that Japan would surrender on the demand of the United States and Great Britain. But with mighty Russia coming into the war, it was believed the mere declaration by Russia that she would fight Japan, leaves that little nation nothing else to do but to submit to the inevitable. Holding out in a fight against the combined might of the United States and Russia is a sheer impossibility, either for Japan or any combination of nations, it is believed.

However, Wednesday it was not known whether Japan's capitulation would come suddenly or not. Nevertheless, the indications were that the thousands of Americans who would be called upon to invade Japan and face such savage resistance as the Japanese gave Americans on Iwo Jima and Okinawa, would not not have to do so. That means that there is as much happiness among the people back home as there is among the soldiers at the front.

It is no secret that Negro soldiers and civilians, while 100 per cent patriotic, have had no desire to wage any "race war" on Japan Negroes have not appreciated the appeals to race prejudice that characterized so much of the talk of the arm-chair strategists who have been appealing for the complete obliteration of the Japanese Those engaged in hurling epithets about the color of the Japanese, very generally are Negro-baiters also, and no self-respecting Negro has wanted it to appear that he was willing to be used to carry on a race war against anybody in the world.

The general attitude of Negroes hereabout has been that the was against Japan ought to be fought with all that we have, with a purpose of getting done with the bloody mess as soon as possible, and in order that all of the conscripted boys in the Pacific speedily could be brought back to their homes and loved ones.

Americans were quite skeptical about the statesmanship of President Truman when he ended up his visit with Generalissimo Stalin, apparently without having gotten the Russians to consider declaring war on the Japanese in appreciation of the part American men and arms played in making Russia victorious over the Germans. And then there was the talk about American taxpayers being called upon to lend the Russians six billion dollars, which would come out of the pockets of the little as well as the big taxpayers of the country. It was hard to believe that "Uncle Sam" would be that generous to the Russians and then continue to carry the whole burden of the war against the strongly-entrenched Japanese. Average Americans have never put any stress on what the British could or would do to defeat the Japanese. In this whole war, the facts are the British, on the side of the Allies have been just abouft as potent as the Italians were on the side of the Axis powers.

With Russia having decided to come into the war against the Japanese, many will see the beginning of the end of British imperialism—the hastening of the day of liberation of the people of India. The end of colonial oppression, the besetting sin of the British, ought to promote world peace better than anything else. Russia is on record as denouncing imperialism; that was the theme of the great speech made by Mr. Molotov at San Francisco. Since then, the Winston Churchill government in Britain has fallen and has been replaced by a Labor Government. The laborites are themselves opposed to the kind of Tory exploitation of the darker races which Winston Churchill always extolled.

Russia, it would appear, will be in the war to end Japanese imperialism and oppression of the Chinese and other Asiatics. It can be presumed that they will also insist that Great Britain, also, climb down off the backs of the Asiatic natives she has so long "worked" for a living. Russia's coming into the war to end Japanase imperialism will not make sense unless soon afterward she expresses herself as being opposed to British imperialism.

Americans overwhelmingly have been embarrased with carrying on a war for liberation and being, at the same time, tied up with the British, whose empire thrives on human slavery.

Undoubtedly the report of what the atom bomb is capable of doing has caused people to predict that Japan would shortly be knocked out of the war. But there has been considerable revulsion among Christian people here against the use of so destructive a weapon.

The feeling now is that the weapon may not have to be used; that Japanese leaders will see the futility of continuing the war and come to terms with their conquerors. The news of such a surrender, which is looked for within a few days or weeks, will [illegible] off just about the biggest c[illegible] in Nashville and thro[illegible] United States that has [illegible] place.

Negro Sergeant Patton Pallbearer

N.Y. N.Y.

One of the half-dozen men that bore the casket of their former chief, General Patton, was a Negro sergeant, William Meeks of Junction City, Kansas, who had been General Patton's orderly for the past eight years. Meeks had served with Patton in North Africa, Sicily and northwest Euorpe.

Peoples Voice

As Meeks handed Mrs. Patton the American flag that covered the general's casket, she, for the first time, broke down. There were tears in Meek's eyes, and his face was strained as he bowed slowly and handed her the folded flag. He saluted with a gloved hand and peered directly into her eyes, exchanging a final message of condolence.

The Part Negro Troops Played in World War 2

The Call
Kansas City, Mo.

(This is the second of a series of weekly articles reviewing the part that Negro troops played in World War II. This week's article continues the discussion of combat troops begun last week.)

COMBAT TROOPS (Continued)

In early November the 761st Tank Battalion, commanded by Lt. Col. Paul L. Bates, of Boonton, N. J., was committed as attached armor of the 26th Infantry Division in the Third U. S. Army, becoming the first Negro tank unit to go into action.

The 761st fought in six European countries, France, Holland, Belgium, Luxembourg, Germany and Austria, and was at various times attached to the Third, Seventh and Ninth U. S. Armies. During these campaigns the battalion furnished tank support for the 26th, 71st, 87th, 79th, 103rd Infantry Divisions, and the 17th Airborne Division during the battle of the Bulge. 8-24-45

40 Bronze, 8 Silver Stars

Eight enlisted men of the unit won battlefield commissions. Decorations included 40 Bronze Stars, 8 Silver Stars, three of them posthumously awarded.

These Negro tankers spearheaded the famous "Task Force Rhine," which crashed through the rugged mountain defenses of the Siegfried Line in the Nieder Schlettenbach - Reisdorf - Klingenmunster area. "Task Force Rhine" consisted of the 761st Tank Battalion, the second battalion of the 103rd Infantry Division's 409th Regiment, a detachment of combat engineers, and a recon platoon from the 614th Tank Destroyer Battalion, a Negro outfit. In three days the task force opened up a big hole in the Siegfried defenses through which passed the 14th Armored Division on March 24.

Aid in Rhine Crossing

Another Negro tank unit, the 784th, arrived in Europe in time to assist the 35th Infantry Division in crossing both the Roer and Rhine Rivers and the subsequent fighting that followed these crossings.

Probably no other Negro combat unit in Europe achieved as brilliant a record, both in terms of consistently outstanding performance in battle and excellence of morale, as did the 614th Tank Destroyer Battalion. Commanded by Lt. Col. Frank S. Pritchard, a white officer from Lansing, Mich., the unit was mainly officered by Negroes.

The unit moved into position with the 95th Infantry Division in front of Metz in November, but soon after was transferred to the 102nd Infantry Division of the Seventh Army where it remained as attached TD support until the end of the war.

Get Unit Citation 8-24-45

For "uotstanding performance of duty in action against the enemy" at Climbach, France, on December 14, 1944, the Third Platoon of Company "C" of the 614th TD Battalion received a Distinguished Unit Citation. The citation itself tells graphically the grim, heroic nature of the action:

"The Third Platoon was an element of a task force whose mission was to storm and capture the strategically important town of Climbach, France, on the approaches of the Siegfried Line. Upon reaching the outskirts of the town, the task force was halted by a terrific hail of fire from an enemy force firmly entrenched in the surrounding woods and hills overlooking the route of approach. The only position available for direct fire upon the enemy was an open field.

Suffered Heavy Casualties

"As the Third Platoon moved into position, its commander and several men were wounded. Undeterred by heavy enemy small arms, mortar and artillery fire, which was now being directed against their position, the men of the Third Platoon valiantly set up their three-inch guns and delivered accurate and deadly fire into the enemy positions.

Casualties were mounting; two of their four guns were knocked out; nevertheless, the remaining crew members heroically assisted in the loading and firing of the other guns. At the height of the battle, enemy infantry converged on the positions from the surrounding woods, threatening to wipe out the platoon's position.

"While a few members of the gun crews remained firing the three-inch guns, others manned machine guns and individual weapons, laying down a devastating curtain of fire which inflicted numerous casualties on the enemy and successfully repulsed the attack. 8-24-45

During the fire fight an ammunition shortage developed, and gun crews were reduced to skeleton size, one man loading, aiming and firing, while the other men repeatedly travelled a distance of 50 yards through a hail of mortar and small arms fire, to obtain shells from a half-track which had been set on fire by a direct hit from an enemy mortar shell.

"Heedless of possible injury men continuously exposed themselves to enemy fire to render first aid to the wounded. In this engagement, although the platoon suffered over 50 per cent casualties and lost considerable material, its valorous conduct, in the face of overwhelming odds, enabled the task force to capture its objective.

"The grim determination, the indomitable fighting spirit and the esprit de corps displayed by all members of the Third Platoon reflect the highest traditions of the Armed Forces of the United States."

Negro Soldiers In World War 2

The Call Kansas City, Missouri
The Call Kansas City Mo. 9-7-45

(This is the third in a series of articles reviewing the part that Negro troops played in the European phase of World War II.)

SIGNAL CORPS

During the campaign against the German Army in Europe, 5,500 Negro Signal Corps troops belonging to 20 signal units participated in the vital battle of communications.

These troops worked in two main types of Signal Corps units— light and heavy signal construction battalions and companies.

Negro units that participated in various campaigns were the 25th, 29th, 37th, 40th, 41st, 42nd, 43rd and 44th Signal Construction Battalions, and the 258th, 259th 261st, 267th, 268th, 269th, 270th, 275th, 534th, 535th, 537th and 496th Signal Construction Companies.

Negroes comprised seven and one half per cent of the total Signal Corps personnel in the European Theater.

Several of these units made communications history. Negro Signal outfits laid wire from the hedgerowed fields of Normandy, across France, Luxembourg and Belgium deep into Germany.

A recent estimate of communications wire put in by Negro troops released by Communications Zone headquarters included these figures: over 10,000 miles of open wire set up; over 500 miles of field wire, and over 500 miles of rubber and lead "Spiral 4" cable.

The 29th Signal Construction Battalion arrived in France on D plus 9 and 10. Its first major mission, rehabilitation of the Chef du Pont- Valognes railroad pole line, was accomplished in the face of enemy snipers, mines, and artillery fire.

After this, the 29th moved into Carentan on June 22, shortly after the towns had been liberated by U. S. forces, and repaired damaged telephone lines frequently under heavy German artillery fire.

Another Negro Signal Corps unit, the 41st Signal Construction battalion, arrived on the continent on D plus 20 and was assigned to the rehabilitation of damaged French lines. The first line started at Valognes, Normandy and ran into Cherbourg where the 41st signal men worked before the city was completely cleared of enemy resistance. 9-7-45

The unit set up about 200 miles of open-wire pole lines and 40 miles of underground lead-covered cable. This latter is reported to be the longest underground cable laid in Europe by any one signal unit. The 41st also installed the communications system for the Continental headquarters of Communications Zone during the Normandy campaign, and assisted with the installation of communications for the first SHEAF Continental Command Post.

The 41st Signal Construction Battalion was officially commended for its work in Normandy by Major General W. S. Rumbough, Chief Signal Officer of the ETO who said: "This is to commend the officers and enlisted men of the 41st Signal Construction Battalion upon the construction work in connection with the establishment of the Headquarters Communications Zone signal system. The work was done at high speed, and the men worked far in excess of their normal working schedule to accomplish their job." 9-7-45

What the Negro Soldier Wants

The Daily Worker
New York, N.Y.

Brooklyn.
Editor, Daily Worker: 9-10-45

Reading Sadie Van Veen's A Negro Soldier's Story today and noting her reactions on meeting a Negro GI back from ETO, it seemed that instead of feelings of embarrassment and shame she should have felt and expressed anger and thus resolve to attack, attack, attack and destroy the fascists who are still active in our midst. I thought the day was gone when people felt penitent for the acts of foul fascists like Bilbo.

The Negro soldier doesn't appreciate Miss Van Veen's shame, and of course he didn't talk much. He's had too much sympathy and too little fight in his behalf. When you're in a struggle you need allies, fighting, vigorous allies, and sympathizers make you sick at heart.

The Negro soldier comes home filled with misgivings and certain that his fight for freedom still must be fought in his own backyard. He was heart and mind and body in the struggle to liberate the French, Belgians, Italians. Despite Jimcrow and a hundred bitter abuses in his own army, abuses which never reached the public, he made his contribution to victory. Now, turning homeward, he looks for his fighting allies to win his freedom. Let's not feel sorry for him. A soldier hates being patronized. He's stood on his own feet and asks that his friends show him respect, give him concrete aid to win his final battle.

He wants his job with equal pay and he wants to become a full and equal citizen of his country. Give him aid to this end and we can no longer feel sorry nor embarrassed any more than John Brown felt "sorry or embarrassed" at Harper's Ferry many years ago.

Reveal Secret Report Praised Negro GIs

Daily Worker

Daily Worker Washington Bureau

N.Y.W.W.

Negro soldiers are "the best troops you'll find anywhere," said a combat captain overeas when Army investigators interviewed him in a check up on the attitude of white soldiers towards mixed infantry outfits.

"They (the Negroes) just did their job and did damn well," said the commander, "and finally the white soldiers accepted them on their merits."

Many other officers and enlisted men joined in lauding the Negro GI's when the Army investigators asked their opinions.

The report of their testimony is a smashing refutation of the slanders made by Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss) during his anti-FEPC filibuster.

The Army investigators report suppressed by Ben. Brehon Somervell has recently become avaiable to Washington reporter.

Soldiers' comments on the fighting quality of Negro troops were given in answer to questions as to whether they wanted Negro platoons within their companies.

The policy of having white and colored platoons fighting side by side together is big step away from the policy of Jimcrow divisions. It does not bring as much white and black unity, however, as comes when no distinction of race is found within the platoon.

The great majority of 1,700 white officers and men interviewed agreed that colored soldiers fought well and got along well with their white buddies.

10-22-45

FOUGHT "VERY WELL"

Eighty-four percent of the officers voted that the Negro GI's performed "very well" in combat.

Sixteen percent said "fairly well."

None put their marks in the columns headed "not so well" or "not well at all."

The O.K. was unanimous.

White platoon sergeants were almost unanimous in praising theired colored troops.

Eighty-one percent voted under the "very well" line.

Seventeen percent said that the troops fought "fairly well."

Only one percent voted "not so well," with another one percent "undecided."

Three quarters of the white troops declared that "their feeling toward the colored soldiers has changed since first serving with them in combat. They report increased respect and friendliness," says the suppressed report.

Many officers and enlisted men are highly enthusiastic in their comments on their colored fellow fighters.

WHAT OFFICERS SAID

A company commander (First Lieut.) from Connecticut said: "They are very aggressive as fighters—really good at fighting in woods and at close-quarter work. The only trouble is getting them to stop: they just keep pushing.

"Good on teamwork," commented a field captain from Virginia: "This colored platoon of 35 men with no prepared positions was counterattacked by 90 Germans. The platoon commander has just been captured. They killed 46 and took 35 prisoners, without losing any gorund or having any casualties."

A company commander (First Lieut.) from California remarked:

"They're the best platoon in the regiment. I wish I could get a presidential citation for them."

Racial prejudices broke down during the fighting.

Whites and colored troops "got along fine in combat," said a platoon commander (Second Lieut.) from Rhode Island. "Team work

SOMERVELL
Held Back Report

couldn't have been better," he added. "A lot of boys from the South didn't like the idea at first, but a few days fighting with them changed their minds."

Said a captain from Pennsylvania:

10-22-45

"Never had a bit of trouble in this company."

A Nevada captain remarked: "Relations are very good. They (whites and colored) have their pictures taken together, go to church services, movies, play ball together. For a time there in combat, our platoons got so small that we had to put a white squad in the colored platoon. . . . The white squad didn't want to leave the platoon. I've never seen anything like it."

A Georgia platoon sergeant said: "There never has been any sign of trouble. We like them and they like us. I've got every respect for those boys . . .; seems like that platoon is the life of the company."

One Alabama first sergeant admitted that "I didn't want them (the Negro troops) at first. Now I have more trust in them. I used to think they would be yellow in combat, but I've seen them work."

A South Carolina platoon sergeant said: "When I first heard about it I said I'd be damned before I'd wear the same soulder patch they did. After that first day when we saw how they fought I changed my mind. They're just like any of the other boys to us."

Some elements of Jimcrow feeling remain of course. Some soldiers praise the Negroes with reservations. But a large majority want them in their companies.

The majority in favor of bringing Negro platoons into the companies is not so high as the majority finding that Negroes fight "very well." But it is still substantial. Seventy-two percent of enlisted men and 55 percent of the officers interviewed voted for the platoon idea without any qualifications. Twenty-six per cent of the enlisted men and 25 per cent of the officers support the idea for combat but not for garrison duty. Only two percent of enlisted men opposed the idea in any form, while 15 percent of the officers thought it was good only for colored volunteers, and five percent were "undecided" about the whole issue, and none opposed it entirely.

Wives and Veterans, Inc.

Don't Like Powell, So Atlantans Secede

The Pittsburgh Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

ATLANTA (ANP)—The Atlanta chapter of Wives and Veterans, Inc., formerly W.I.V.E.S., Inc., last week withdrew indignantly from the national organization because Adam C. Powell Jr., New York Democrat and husband of Hazel Scott, pianist-singer, will be the principal speaker at the national convention.

The Atlanta white group charged Wives and Veterans, Inc., with being a New York-controlled pressure group which propounds non-representative, "too leftist" views in the name of the entire membership and expresses anti-Southern and anti-Fascist sentiments while failing to condemn communism. The executive committee had "embarrassed" the Atlanta group on certain resolutions sent Congressmen and other public officials, accordingly.

10-23-45

DIDN'T LIKE DAR REMARK

The resolution severing its connection with the national organization declared: "We feel that we cannot allow ourselves to be associated with a group which has as its principal speaker at a national convention a Negro Congressman who only a few months ago called the wife of the President of the United States "the last Lady'." (The resolution was made by Representative Powell during the controversy over use by his wife of Constitution Hall in Washington.)

"We feel," the Atlanta whites "that the national organization has cast slurs on our section of the country by its approving motion pictures as "The Southerner" and by giving the impression that they were representative in the South."

ALLOWED NO VOICE

They further charged that the action of the recent national convention "did not allow us any voice in any matters of sectional interest." It was also stated that the national group had approved books including "Strange Fruit."

Train Colored Air Resupply Squadrons at Fort Benning

Afro-American

3-3-45

FORT BENNING, Ga. — Air Corps Resupply Squadrons, composed of colored enlisted men and white officers, the first to be trained in the United States, have been under training at Lawson Field here during the past five months.

Resupply squadrons are capable of dropping everything from delicate radio equipment and fresh eggs to heavy combat material from the open doors of Troop Carrier Command aircraft.

While the job of resupply is done generally by aircraft or glider, when condittions prevent landing, the task of supplying troops is carried out by parachute and free drop.

The Skies Their Highway

These squadrons are employed when land communications do not exist, roads are blown out or impassible, in supplying troops in tactical operations, to recover a stalmated offensive or to supply isolated fighting units.

Members of the squadrons have been selected for their aptitude, intelligence and ability to learn in a short time the technical work of dismantling, crating, loading and transporting by air many heavy implements of warfare necessary to our fighting forces.

A 'GI Heaven'

The Worker

That's how our soldiers describe the Atlantic redistribution center which is host to 2,500 returned overseas vets each week. the Worker

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

AFTER five months of operation in the processing of returned veterans, this huge and luxurious Army Ground and Service Forces Redistribution Station is a proven success, said the War Department. 6-17-45

Geared to serve 2,500 returnees a week, the elaborate project was set up in December 1944, to determine the military job for which each returnee is best fitted according to his skill and physical conditions. Since its organization, thousands of returnees and their wives have passed through the station, 25 per cent of them being Negroes.

Long experience has convinced the Army that a true picture of a soldier's abilities can be attained only when he is completely relaxed and comfortably situated. To achieve this end, nothing has been spared in providing the returnees with every recreational activity that ingenuity can provide.

From the window of his once $30 a day room overlooking Atlantic City's world-famous Boardwalk, the returned veteran looks down on a world eager and well-equipped to satisfy his most idle whim for the next fourteen days.

When he arrives at the Station, his pay check is waiting for him. If his wife is with him, she is greeted with a gift from the commanding officer; if the soldier is alone, an Army hostess stands by to plan his day for him.

All the returnee has to do is make up his mind whether it's going to be a day outdoors or one spent inside--the Army does the rest. 6-17-45

If it's indoors, he finds red ball, table tennis, billiards and pool to keep him occupied. Or he may go over to famed Convention Hall on the Boardwalk for archery, badminton, basketball, boxing, wrestling, ping pong, volley ball or tennis.

The call of the outdoors ranges from a boat cruise along the Jersey coast to a bicycle ride down the renowned Boardwalk, with lounging in a beach chair, swimming in the surf and deep sea fishing inviting his every idle moment. New York

When night falls, there is dancing with attractive hostesses from Atlantic City, the latest films at the War Department Theater or a stage show put on by the GIs themselves. Each evening there is some special form of entertainment among the social activities for the returnees and their guests provided by the Special Service Officer. N.Y.

Typical comment of soldiers passing through this station is, "This ain't the Army—this is a GI Heaven!"

The man responsible for the success of this undertaking is Colonel James G. Cooper, veteran infantryman of 28 years' service, who was on duty in the Army of Occupation in Europe following the World War.

Holder of the Victory Medal, Occupation of Germany Medal and Italian Order of the Crown for the World War, Colonel Cooper also wears the American Defense Medal and the Asiatic-Pacific Campaign for his participation in the present war as commanding officer of the 34th Infantry Regiment in Hawaii.

Asked by the correspondent of a metropolitan daily how he had achieved such a democratic atmosphere in the Redistribution Station, Colonel Cooper replied: 6-17-45

"I do not know. I suppose it is one of those things that just happen. I did call the entire operating personnel to a meeting upon arrival and laid down this policy: That the men coming here, regardless of race, creed or color, have laid their lives on the line, therefore, all soldiers are alike and will be treated as such at this installation as long as I am in command. If there is anyone here who cannot subscribe fully to this program, I will immediately accept his request for transfer. No one requested transfer and the program worked."

Chemical Warfare Service

Negroes Form Vital Link In Chemical Warfare Work

Atlanta World

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The successful use of smoke screens to hide important ports from air attack and to cover river crossings and other troop movements, thereby helping to reduce American casualties, is due in no small measure to trained and efficient Negro troops of the Chemical Warfare Service who operate mechanical smoke generators, the War Department announced today. Sixteen CWS Smoke Generator Companies have Negro personnel. 5-18-45

Various other chemical companies originally organized for specialized work in event of gas warfare, are meanwhile performing a variety of duties useful and applicable to current needs. The list of Negro units in this category includes five Chemical Decontamination Companies, two Chemical Processing Companies, and two Chemical Service Companies spread out around the world. 5-18-45

One of these ouits won a Clasp to the Fifth Army Plaque for providing a protective smoke screen in Italy. More than four-fifths of the men of this company were on the job nightly for an entire month in maintaining 38 mechanical smoke generators and thousands of smoke pots at 100 different firing points.

On the other side of the world, a Chemical Processing Company was awarded a Meritorious Service Unit Plaque "for superior performance of duty, and the achievement and maintenance of a high standard of professional and military proficiency.

While there are no Negro Chemical Mortar Battalions, the CWS has one crack Negro Mortar Co., whcih is highly proficient in operating the "goon gun" (4.2-inch rifled chemical mortar) which fires 25-pound shells of white phosphorus or high explosive with remarkable accuracy.

Four Negro WACs; 50 Negro Seamen; 73 Negro Soldiers, Courtmartialed for Mutiny

Northwest Herald

At Fort Devens in Massachusetts four Negro WACs were court martialed and sentenced to one year in prison at hard labor and dishonorably discharged the other week.

In California 50 Negro seamen were sentenced to a total of 588 years in prison and at hard labor.

In the Hawaiian Islands, 73 soldiers were convicted and sentenced to terms ranging from eight to thirty years at hard labor.

All this adds up to one thing: The "New Negro" is making his appearance and taking his stand against the intolerance, prejudices, and racial abuses which he and his ancestors have been subjected to ever since the first boatload of African slaves was unloaded at Jamestown.

Where others have refused to stand up and face the issue, the "New Negro," as found in the armed forces of the United States in this modern age, is asserting himself and showing that he is willing to pay the price, however heavy, to blazon the path we all must trod if we will be totally free.

4-10-45

The four Negro women involved in the WAC courtmartial were Pvts. Mary E. Green, Houston, Texas; Johnnie Murphy, Pittsburgh; Alice E. Young, Washington; and Anna C. Morrison, Richmond, Kentucky. They were penalized, were these intrepid Negro women, because of a refusal to obey a direct command under highly controversial circumstances.

The trial, conducted by a court composed of nine officers, including two Negro officers and two WAC officers, handed down its verdict in twenty minutes.

Testimony at the trial brought out the accusation by three of the women that Col. Walter H. Crandall, commander of the hospital at Fort Devins, had stated at one time that he "didn't want any black WACs in the Fort truck pool." The defendants testified that the remark was made following the request of one of the women from an orderly's job to one in the pool.

Pvt. Alice Young was reported to have said that a "colonel" had found her teaching another WAC how to take temperatures and had asked what she was doing, to which her superior replied, after the WAC had informed him that she was a medical technician instructing another girl, "I don't want any black WACs as medical technicians around this hospital. I want them to scrub and do the dirty work."

The women on trial, it was said, testified that they were required to do menial and dirty work which was not assigned to white WACs at the hospital.

The 50 Negro seamen who were handed the aggregated total of 588 years in California, were put in jail because they refused to continue loading ammunition, a highly dangerous procedure, after hundreds of their mates had been killed in the tragic Port of Chicago explosion.

The 73 Negro soldiers convicted and sent to prison in Honolulu, Hawaii, were said to have been sentenced because they "refused to obey orders of their superior officers to report to a work formation on a company area at an airfield on Oahu." This was said to have come about because of the army's "work-but-not-fight" policy for Negro soldiers.

4-10-45

It is a known fact that most Negroes in the army are assigned to labor and stevedore battalions. The refusal to obey orders and continue their work as common laborers on the airfield took place on the night of July 31, 1944.

It may be strange, but the record shows that Negro soldiers, sailors and aviators have never mutinied in combat. The exigencies that brought on the situations outlined in the Fort Devens WAC case, that of the Port of Chicago seamen and the Hawaiian labor battalion, are highlighted by the fact that the unanimous protests of thousands of colored servicemen in all branches find its most concrete and direct expression in the outright refusal of these comparatively few "martyrs" who refused to continue doing themselves injustices.

The dreary argument that orders must be obeyed; that "these Negroes have done their race a great disservice at this time," etc., are to be dismissed with impatience. Our people—and by "our people" I mean those who are wholly Negro in their thoughts, hopes and ambitions, are tired of being deluded and shunted off by professional race problem solvers who take the white man's gold to keep us quiet.

For the last 20 years a new kind of Negro has been swarming onto the scene. In all sections of the country you find them—in the crowded tenaments of Harlem, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Chicago, in the so-called "black belts" of the cities as well as in Los Angeles, Cleveland, Detroit, Columbus, Ohio, and in Newark and in Washington D.-C. They find their own kind in southern cities when the young Negroes from Atlanta, New Orleans, Tulsa, Birmingham, Natchez, Winston-Salem, and elsewhere in Dixie shake off the shackles of the South and come North.

Three Negro Soldiers To Face Mutiny Charge

Birmingham News 5-30-45

FT. McCLELLAN, Ala., May 30—(AP)—Three Negro soldiers will go before a general court-martial here tonight to face charges arising from an incident April 30, when members of a work detail from the stockade were charged with assaulting a guard.

5-30-45

Pvt. Samuel L. Richardson is charged with causing a mutiny, and Pvts. Clinton Robinson and Norman Harris with joining in a mutiny.

All three were prisoners at the time. Home addresses were not given.

Soldier Attendants Blamed In Beatings at Northport

New York Times
6-15-45

By SAMUEL A. TOWER

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, June 14—Incompetent and dissatisfied soldier personnel were assigned by the Army to take care of veteran patients at the Neuropsychiatric Hospital at Northport, N. Y., Col. Louis Verdel, manager of the institution, told the House Veterans Committee today. He said this was mainly responsible for mistreatment of the patients.

More than half of the more than 300 soldiers assigned as attendants were unqualified and would have been rejected by him as "unfit" for the work, he said. Of the five Army doctors at the hospital, he reported, only three were on duty, with one absentee "suffering from an ear condition" and the other away following an Army "diagnosis of neurosis."

The colonel explained to the committee, investigating charges of violence to patients of Northport, that a contributing factor was his inability to take disciplinary action against enlisted personnel because of a system of divided authority whereby soldier-attendants were in charge of a company commander.

"Authority Over Civilians"

In the cases of civilian attendants guilty of abuse he had the authority immediately to suspend them and recommend their dismissal to the General Offices of the Veterans Administration in Washington, he testified.

Previous testimony before the committee has revealed that thirteen Negro soldiers have been court-martialed for mistreatment of patients and that seven white civilian attendants have been dismissed on similar charges.

Speaking of the courts-martial, Colonel Verdel stated he regarded the use of Negro soldiers in mental hospitals as inadvisable and that he had asked the Second Service Command for the substitution of white troops, but said that his request had been met only in part.

He stated that there was widespread discontent among both white and Negro soldiers over assignment to hospital duty and that this dissatisfaction "had a bad effect on the patients and other attendants."

Nevertheless, he suggested that "caes of civilian attendants and soldiers striking patients were acts of impulse."

"I do not believe we had any affairs of sadism," he said.

Both Departments Criticized

Colonel Verdel's testimony, made made according to his words, under the handicap of being both an Army officer and an employe of the Veterans Administration, brought criticism of both departments from members of the committee.

"I resent the War Department's attitude toward these hospitals," said Chairman John E. Rankin, Democrat from Mississippi.

Representative Bernard W. Kearney, Republican of New York, accused the War Department of "not playing the game with veterans," adding that he felt also that there was "too much red tape between the central office of the Veterans Administration and its regional facilities."

The committee then went into closed session to hear Colonel Verdel's report on the treatment of specific mental patients and the administration of the hospital which followed in general his open testimony, according to committee members.

When the meeting was reopened, Harry Stansfield, an investigator for the Veterans Administration, testified on cases of mistreatment uncovered by undercover operators for the agency. Both he and Colonel Verdel contended that both soldiers and attendants followed a code of not "peaching" on one another, making substantiation of charges difficult.

6-16-45

Witness Tells of Beatings

Nevertheless, the agency's operators had witnesesd or received incontestable evidence of cases where patients were beaten and kicked by both military and civilian attendants, and sometimes choked with towels, not only in efforts to restrain patients but as a result of irritation.

Joseph MacQueen, counsel for the committee, announced that data on the seven civilian attendants had been requested by the new Attorney General, Tom Clark, and by the United States Attorney in the Second District of New York, and were being turned over immediately.

At the conclusion of the day's session, Chairman Rankin disclosed that the committee intended to summon representatives tof the War Department to appear before it and explain the Army's policy on veterans' hospitals.

"It seems to me that these cases involved negligence on the part of the War Department rather than the Veterans Administration," he said. "We are going to try to find out just why they assign such men there."

McDonald Making an Inquiry

Miles F. McDonald, United States Attorney for Brooklyn and Long Island, said yesterday that his office was making an inquiry into the charges of mistreatment of patients at the Veterans Hospital at Northport, L. I. T. Vincent Quinn, Assistant United States Attorney in charge of the criminal division, is in charge of the investigation.

Mr. McDonald said that the investigation was the result of a request from Edward E. Odom, solicitor of the Veterans Administration in Washington. The Brooklyn prosecutor said he expected material would be presented to the Federal grand jury next week.

6,000 Seek Pardon for Mutiny Group

Detroit Free Press
Michigan
9-9-45

Approximately 6,000 Detroiters have signed petitions addressed to President Truman asking pardon for 50 Negroes who were sentenced to prison for mutiny.

The charges grew out of the explosion of an ammunition ship at Port Chicago, San Francisco on July 7, 1942.

The petitions were signed during a meeting here of the National Negro Baptists Convention. It has been in session at Olympia and will end Sunday. There are 18,000 delegates attending.

* * *

THE PETITIONS were distributed by Edgar G. Brown, of Washington, director of the National Negro Council. Brown said that he hopes to get 20,000 signers in Detroit and a total of 30,000 for Michigan.

9-9-45

It is planned to have 1,000,000 signers in the United States, one for each Negro in the Army and Navy.

Dr. D. V. Jemison, Salmo, Ala., president of the convention, was first to sign the petitions at Olympia Saturday. He was re-elected president for the fifth consecutive year.

Discharges of Servicemen

The Advantage in a Disadvantage

Black Dispatch

All lovers of justice are disturbed these days because of the injustices exposed in the point system now used by the armed services which governs the discharge of soldiers. Those soldiers used in combat duty are given a higher point rating than those who, while actively engaged in the war, serve in essential military posts behind the lines. It is understood that those who serve in engineer units and in supply depots are not considered as combat troops and therefore are not qualified for immediate release.

A news release last week exposed the fact that only 75 out of a total of 2500 discharged on the first day of demobilization were Negroes, which is equivalent to around three per cent, and the argument is made that most Negroes, when they finally reach home from the war zones, will find their old jobs in the hands of white GIs. We think this is true, and the situation respecting the old job opportunities will be exactly as suggested above, when the Negro soldier returns from foreign battle fields. We are even inclined to believe it was planned that way. We hear now that those who have higher combat points are to receive higher post-war compensation. We do not think this is an after-thought; we believe it also was planned that way. 6-9-45

But even so, we are looking for the advantage in a disadvantage. The Black Dispatch is not interested in the Negro soldier returning to look for his old job. The experience of twenty years ago shows the black trooper who looked for a new job rather than the old one almost instantly improved his social, political and economic status. Why should the American Negro soldier who has visited the four corners of the earth, return, emotionally and spiritually stirred, to reclaim his miserable post-war job pittance of fifteen and eighteen dollars per week? We refer to the mass of Negroes who come from the Deep South. Many of them have spent three years in an atmosphere of freedom. Why should they return to jim crow, segregation, disfranchisement and a beggar's wage? Okla. City, Okla.

Following the last world war more than two million Negroes poured into the North and East. These black soldiers, dissatisfied with their former habitat, are the folk who today form the huge Negro centers in Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Chicago, Detroit, New York, Cleveland, and a score of other American cities. These Negro soldiers not only secured better jobs, but during the past twenty years have been the political pivot upon which the presidency of the United States rested. In the next twenty years we want that same dissatisfaction in Negro life to sweep millions of Negroes from Dixie into other sections of the United States to newer opportunities and newer phases of employment. We are hoping that the movement of Negroes into the North and Northwest will mean that in the national elections in 1950 the black vote will control a dozen states instead of five. Booker Washington's theory of "Let down your bucket where you are" is all right so long as there is water in the well, but when the well goes dry, the Black Dispatch urges every black man to move, and move quickly. 6-9-45

Those who planned the army point system intend for the water in the well of job opportunity to have evaporated when the black man returns, so it is strategic for Negro leadership to say now, boldly and in the open, that the Negro ex-serviceman, when he returns should seek new climes and fairer economic fields. The government is offering new lands in the agricultural west. Irrigation projects, cattle lands and mineral wealth beckons. Alaska holds opportunities. South America already offers racial equality, and many soldiers are interested in foreign climes where they have visited while in the armed services. It is with this thought in mind that the Black Dispatch suggests that those who lament about the old jobs of Negroes who went to war, forget the past and turn resolutely towards the future with its new hopes and unquestioned advantages.

When the Negro leaves the South his place must be taken by other laborers. Those laborers will come as a liberalizing influence. If that new labor is drawn from the North and East, the South will have to scrapheap its ancient customs and sanctions. Regional wage scales will rise, and the South will doubtless have to withdraw its weather eye from the Negro and face a militant group believing in collective bargaining and a higher type of social services than the South has hitherto been willing to sanction. This will in turn immeasurably benefit the Negroes who remain below the Mason and Dixon line. 6-9-45

Then too. suppose the Negro is held longer than the whites to police Europe and Asia. White men, who are free, may reason that the years taken out of their lives in military service are lost, but Negro youth needing to be aroused, and emotionally stirred; Negro youth needing to shed provincialism and feel at home in any country, will be getting rich experiences that are priceless and immeasurable in their value. The longer Negroes stay away from the South the more they will be dissatisfied with Dixie. In occupational service across the sea the black boys will learn something about administration. They will get a glimpse of executive powers. Let's forget about the point system and start looking for the advantage in a disadvantage.

There are those who strenuously object to Negroes serving in engineer units and supply depots. The argument is made that these military units are nothing more than glorified labor battalions. Perhaps this is true, but we seriously wonder whether the white boy who carried a gun in war secured as much information and training respecting the paths of peace as the black boy in an engineering unit, who was forced to build bridges, roads, buildings and "whatnots" of military expediency with the latest and most modern tools of civilization. While laboring constantly under a barrage of death thousands of black boys secured intimate knowledge respecting arts, crafts and industrial life that would never have been offered him in any public school in the South. "God works in mysterious ways, his wonders to perform." This point system, objectionable to many, may be the work of the Almighty. All of us who are pulling back just now may be in the shape of the fellow referred to in a popular old ballad entitled, "After you get what you want, you don't want it."

Army Discharges Negro Captains

Black Dispatch

Rush "Green" Officers Into Battle Without 3-Month Training

6-23-45

FORT BENNING, Ga.—(ANP)—The army is gradually eliminating Negro officers here above the grade of lieutenant through wholesale discharges, and young "green" officers, fresh from officer candidate school, face the prospect of being shipped to the Pacific. Okla. City, Okla.

All Negro captains on the post here and those coming in from overseas have been sent to separation centers within the past two weeks for discharges while practically all the other Negro officers here, including youthful graduates of officer candidate schools, some May graduates, have gone to Fort McClellan, Ala., where a small group was sent to Fort Ord, Calif., from wheer they may be rushed to the Pacific battle area. Army regulations require a three-month training course in the United States.

The army has made no statement as to why Negro captains are being given wholesale discharges nor why "green" officers are being readied for overseas assignments.

Discharges To Be Determined By War Needs

Stimson Tells Press High Point Scores Not Main Factor

Journal & Guide

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Military necessity and not high critical scores under the point system will be the controlling factor in the discharge of long-service soldiers from the Army, Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson told his press conference last week.

Norfolk, Va.

Tasks connected with the redeployment of troops to the Pacific, he intimated, necessitate the retention of a great number of service forces in the Army regardless of high scores. Both white and colored troops are in the service forces. There are more white than colored service troops, but a majority of colored soldiers are in service units.

Pointing out that in the next three months that the job of transporting, quartering and supplying troops in connection with redeployment of troops to the Pacific is the heaviest of any like period of the war, Mr. Stimson said that the rate of discharge of long-service soldiers must be slower than during the period from May 12 to July 31 when 235,000 men were released from the Army under the point system.

"We shall not let any man go whose going jeopardizes the life of the men who remain to fight," he said.

At the same time, he revealed that individual scores of all soldiers will be recomputed so as to give battle and overseas service credit for the period after May 12. This recomputation will favor men who are stationed in the Pacific.

Medics, Nurses Await Discharge

The Afro American

Baltimore, Md. 9-29-45

WASHINGTON (ANP)— Over 1000 colored physicians, dentists and nurses in the Armed forces whose discharge is governed only by an Army policy that they attend their own troops, are looking forward hopefully to an early return to civilian life.

Physicians and dentists will be discharged according to the ratio for colored troops. According to the Army public relations division, there are 556 colored offices serving as physicians and surgeons; 123 dentists, and 419 nurses.

Served Two Divisions

The largest number of medical men was at the regional station hospital at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., under the command of Col. Midian O. Bousfield of Chicago. Other medical officers attained the rank of lieutenant-colonel and several were majors.

Most of the medics were attached to the 92nd and 93rd divisions. The 92nd was the subject of much criticism recently and served long and valiantly in the Italian campaign. The 93rd is in the Pacific area.

Distinctive Record

Besides that at Fort Huachuca, there were also colored hospitals in Liberia and Burma. Colored troops were sent to Liberia—a key spot in the United Nations plans for aerial warfare—early in the war. The late President Roosevelt visited them in Monrovia.

The largest contingent of nurses went to Liberia under Lt. Sue Freeman of Howard's medical school. The second largest group went to England under Capt. Mary L. Petty of Chicago. The colored medical personnel acquitted themselves with distinction and were valuable as morale builders.

FIND FEW HAVE ENOUGH POINTS FOR DISCHARGE

Chicago Defender 5-26-45

Low Negro Percentage Among First Soldiers Released

By HARRY McALPIN

WASHINGTON (NNPA)—Of 2,500 soldiers discharged from the Army on the first day the point system was effected, only 75 were Negroes. While Negroes are almost 10 per cent of the men in the Army, this discharge rate represents only 3 per cent.

These discharged men were already in the United States at separation and redistribution centers. Those in the latter places were awaiting reassignment to other war tasks after having served overseas for long periods.

The small percentage of Negroes in this first group has increased the anxiety concerning the chances for Negroes being proportionately discharged from the Army under the War Department's point system of returning men to civilian life. The emphasis under the system that is put on battle decorations, and the expected difficulty of obtaining replacements for Negro troops because of the Army's segregation policy, puts an unfair handicap on Negro troops.

Fear Racial Tension

Fears are being expressed that the slow rate of discharge of large numbers of Negroes will lead to racial tensions later. The earlier-discharged men, mostly white, will have first choice of available jobs in the post-war period. To this handicap will be added the already existent prejudices and discriminations practiced against Negroes in industry. 5-26-45

The highest point score among the 75 Negroes released on the first day was 110. A total of 85 points is required to qualify for discharge. As result of combat awards — less available to Negroes because of their 89 per cent restriction to service troops — a white soldier has been reported to have received 278 points.

Separation point factors involve service credit, overseas credit, combat credit and parenthood credit and are entered on the enlisted man or woman's adusted serjvice rating card. One point is given a soldier for each month of Army service since September 16, 1940; one point for each month of overseas service in the same period; five points for the first and each additional award specified (since 1940), and 12 points for each child under 18 years of age as of May 12, 1945, up to a limit of three children.

Large numbers of Negro service troops were among the early arrivals at most overseas stations and battle areas, since supplies and transportation must be made available before and after the arrival of combat troops.

All soldiers who serve in combat areas receive Bronze Service Stars (battle participation stars). Service troops therefore receive Bronze Service Stars entitling them to credits of 5 points for services rendered in combat areas.

Under the provisions of the Demobilization Plan, the following Negro enlisted men at Fort Meade, Maryland, Fort Sheridan, Illinois, and Fort Dix, New Jersey were among the first troops discharged under the point system at these installations:

Army Segregated Policy Hindrance to Releases

Philadelphia Tribune

By HARRY McALPIN

WASHINGTON (NNPA)—Army policies of segregation and limited use of Negroes in combat will operate as an obstacle to the early release of large numbers of Negroes from the service under the discharge plan announced last week, an analysis of the program reveals.

According to the General Staff order, the strength of the Army Service Forces and the Army Air Forces will be reduced much less than the strength of the Army Ground Forces. Figures on number of Negroes in the Army as of February 28, 1945, showed 80 percent of the entire number are in the Service Forces. 5-19-45

The Army says through transfers of some low-score men f m the Ground Forces to the Service Forces, a proportionate share of men from the Service Forces will be released as rapidly as practitable. But it is not expected that replacements in Negro units will be taken from white troops—the Army's segregation policy prevents such a move. The 20 per cent of Negroes who are in other than Service Forces will not provide the replacements necessary.

The point credit system itself—which the Army says express the desires of the soldiers themselves—puts a premium on combat decorations. Negroes have been denied the opportunity of winning large numbers of combat decorations because of their assignment to service functions. Five points are given for the first and each additional award of the Distinguished Service Cross, Legion of Merit, Silver Star, Distinguished Flying Cross, Soldier's Medal, Bronze Star Medal, Air Medal, Purple Heart, and bronze service stars for battle participation. 5-19-45

The point credit system provides one credit for each month in the Army since September 16, 1940; one point for each months overseas; five points for each decoration; and 12 points for each dependent child under 18 years of age up to a maximum of 3 dependents. A total of 85 points is necessary to qualify.

One bright spot for the Service Forces is General Eisenhower's order that soldiers who have fought in both Europe and North Africa are not to be sent to the Pacific war zone, even if they do not have 85 credit points necessary for release—provided General Ike doesn't mean only "combat troops."

NEGRO SOLDIERS HARD HIT BY GI POINT RULE

Troops In Labor Units Are Unable To Earn Required 85

By VENICE T. SPRAGGS
(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON. — It became apparent this week that Negro troops in general would benefit little under the War Department's point system for termination of army service.

5-19-45

Negro soldiers, who have had their demands for combat service practically ignored since the war began, are now realizing the "dividends" from the War Department's jim-crow policy which assigns them, for the most part, to labor units.

Nor is there any information available which would support an intention on the part of the War Department to change its biased policy in the Pacific, despite the satisfactory record of Negro combat soldiers on the battlefields of Europe.

5-19-45

Few Have 85

Assigned predominantly to service units, the majority of Negro troops have not earned sufficient points to total the army's required minimum of 85. Long and arduous service with labor battalions, etc., mean little if the GIs battle stars and medals are nil.

According to the general staff order, army service forces and army air forces will not be reduced in strength as rapidly as the strength of the army ground forces. The latest statistics on Negroes serving in the army showed that 80 per cent of the total number are assigned to the service forces.

Already many Negro service units are headed for the Pacific theatre of war. The first combat troops from Europe are not likely to get into the war against the Japanese for six months or more under the army's redevelopment program but service forces will arrive early to clear the way.

'Negroes Only'

The army's segregation policy also throws a wrench in the replacement machinery. Negro soldiers with sufficient points for release will be obliged to wait for "Negro replacements" before they are discharged. The army plans to transfer low-score men from the ground forces to the service forces so that the few Negro soldiers who have enough points may obtain their releases, however, these replacements will hardly be white as the War Department's jim-crow program frowns on such procedure.

On the other hand, the 20 percent of Negroes serving in branches other than the service forces are not sufficient to furnish the necessary replacements.

The army's point credit system provides one credit for each month of service since Sept. 16, 1940; one point for each month overseas; five points for each decoration; and 12 points for each dependent child under 18 years of age, up to a maximum of 3 dependents.

General Dwight Eisenhower's order that soldiers who have fought in both Europe and North Africa are not to be sent to the Pacific war zone, 85 points or not, was welcomed by Negro GIs with the hope that their supreme commander was not referring to "combat" soldiers only.

5-19-45

13 Negro Combat Units

Perhaps the largest outfit of Negro soldiers is the 92nd Infantry division which is now in Austria with the fifth army. Operating from this area also is the 332nd Fighter group under the command of Col. Benjamin O. Davis Jr.

Apart from the 366th infantry regiment of Negroes, the War Department has identified three infantry regiments comprising Negro and white soldiers and two similar companies. The former are the 309th, 310th and 311th regiments, with the 78th Infantry division. There is also one company with the 66th infantry regiment and one with the 38th regiment.

So-called Negro combat outfits include five tank destroyer battalions, two tank battalions, five field artillery battalions and one anti-aircraft battalion.

There are 28 engineer regiments and battalions and eight ordnance units, 18 port companies, 32 ordnance companies, four chemical smoke generating companies, three signal construction battalions, two medical sanitation companies, and one company or detachment each of the following: amphibious truck, general hospital, medical service detachment, transportation and special service units.

New Point Policy To Aid Negro GIs

Chicago Defender

6-2-45

By VENICE T. SPRAGGS
(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON — The War Department this week clarified its point system discharge policy with respect to the eligibility of Army Service Forces to receive bronze combat stars.

Some 350,000 Negro service troops, comprising approximately 88 per cent of all Negro troops overseas are affected.

According to information given the Defender, any soldier who for any reason is already present in, or goes into a designated geographic area during a time specified by the Army as constituting a period of a major engagement will be given a bronze star. Whether the soldier is assigned to a service, combat, or any other unit makes no difference. If he is in the area in any capacity, he is eligible for the star.

The War Department then cited the records and current status of four Negro service units — two in the Pacific, and two in the European theatre, which at present have earned the Army's required minimum of 85 points for discharge. These are by no means all-Negro service units having high point scores, the War Department said, but were selected as samples.

In the Pacific, the 48th Quartermaster Battalion and the 3445th Quartermaster Trucking Company were cited. While in the European theater the 28th Quartermaster Battalion and the 3264th Quartermaster Service Company have comparable high scores.

The 48th Quartermaster battalion with a strength of approximately 1,000 men, was activated June 5, 1941. The battalion was present in the areas of Australia, New Guinea, and the Philippines during periods of major engagements.

The 3445th Quartermaster Trucking Company, with an approximate strength of 350 men was activated the same month and year. This company has seen service at Bougainville, New Guinea and other Pacific islands.

Both units were shipped overseas in mid-1942 and have 8 months' service credit in the States plus 3 years overseas. Members of both units have each received 3 bronze stars, one for each battle area in which they were present.

4 Major Engagements

6-2-45

In the European theater, the 28th Quartermaster Battalion with an approximate strength of 1,000 men, has four major engagements to its credit. This unit was activated February 10, 1941, and went overseas July 1, 1942. It was present in North Africa, Tunisia, Italy and France during periods of designated major engagements and each member has 4 combat stars to his credit in addition to 17 months' service in the States and 34 mnoths overseas.

The 3264th Quartermaster Service Company was activated April, 1942, and was shipped overseas in June of the same year. The unit has 2 months' service in the States and 35 months overseas to its credit. The approximately 350 men attached have seen service in Germany, France and Belgium. Each member has 3 combat stars to his credit.

The army's point credit system provides one point for each month in the service since September 16, 1940, one point for each month overseas, five points for each decoration (bronze stars are classified as decorations) and 12 points for each dependent child under 18 years of age up to a maximum of 3 dependents.

Many 'Essential'

The rub for these and other service troops comes in the very real possibility that many will be retained in the army, high points notwithstanding, as essential to the prosecution of the war. Army service forces and army ground forces will not be reduced in strength as rapidly as the strength of the army ground forces.

However, any veteran with a high point score who is at present in continental United States for any reason will not be reassigned unless he is specifically asked for by name and number.

Congress realizing the inequality of maintaining certain types of troops in the Armed Forces who have the required number of discharge points is now considering a bill to provide a pay boost for these men. The bill is being given favorable consideration, and stands a good chance of being passed, many believe.

Service troops have been given largely the type of technical and mechanical training which will have a valuable carry-over into civilian life.

6-2-45

To Get Old Jobs

Under the Selective Service and Training Act of 1940, all veterans meeting certain qualifications are entitled to their old jobs back when they return, or to a job of equal seniority.

Large numbers of Negroes, however, prior to their induction in the Army had no regular employment. While the Selective Service Act assures every assistance in helping the formerly unemployed and temporarily employed veteran to secure a job, serious problems may be experienced by these Negro veterans if they are retained in the Army until the labor market gets flooded with both returned veterans and unemployed civilians.

Under Age Volunteer In 1941 Had Served 36 Months Overseas, 5 Combat Points Helped

Private Pertman Gaul, 22 year old Roanoke negro, was the first Jeff Davis soldier to be discharged under the new point system. Gaul, who was at Camp Shelby, Mississippi after 36 months overseas, had exactly the necessary 85 points to win discharge under the system announced Friday and his discharge occurred Sunday, 48 hours after the new point system was announced.

Gaul won all his points without the aid of dependents. He had 44 points for length of time in the army, 36 points for overseas service and five for a combat battle star.

The Roanoke veteran who said he was "glad to be discharged" was a pre Pearl Harbor volunteer, entering the army September 22, 1941. He was in the chemical warfare service in the Pacific area and got his combat star for service in Palau. He was under 18 when he entered the service.

Southern Soldiers Find Tan GIs Good

Chicago - Ill.
Daily News
6-23-45

By EDGAR T. ROUZEAU
(Special Correspondent)

CAMP KILMER, N. J. — The Negro soldier's contribution to the conquest of Germany has never been adequately recognized, in the opinion of white soldiers who saw them in action.

The Tan GI's were rated highly in a series of interviews with newly arrived members of the Eighty-sixth (Black Hawks) Infantry Division, the first American combat division to return from Europe.

WITH THIRD ARMY

With close to 300 reporters, photographers and newsreel men on hand to greet them, the 14,280 battle-tested veterans arrived in New York's harbor on four troop ships Sunday morning with a short, but thrilling history of frontline action with General Patton's Third Army.

6-23-45

Although one of the last American outfits to be committed to action, the boys helped to overrun German defenses west of Regensburg and were the first American soldiers to cross the Danube.

They will be among the first troops to be shifted to the Pacific under the Army's redeployment program. After thirty-day furloughs, they will be called to assembly points for further training.

The boys spoke with considerable familiarity of the slight recognition accorded the role of Negro GI's in the European Theatre. They were filled with admiration for Negro volunteers who fought side by side with white troops in the Third Army. All agreed that the experiment, carried out by the Third Battalion, Thirteenth Infantry Regiment of the Eighth Division, was a signal success.

6-23-45

In reference to these Negro volunteers, Sgt. Robert E. Stoffer of Roberts, Wis., had the following to say: "I did not see these Negro boys in action myself, but I got the story direct from a man who was transferred into my outfit from the Eighth Division.

"He said some of the colored boys fought in white platoons right along with white soldiers. He told me of one platoon which was made up largely of Texans who voted to receive the Negroes.

FOUND NO FRICTION

"I understand that there was never any friction between the two groups, and that the colored boys gave an excellent account of themselves. In fact, they were so anxious to fight that they took daring chances. I was told that their casualties were high, necessitating a lot of replacements. My friend says that the Germans were scared of them."

Sgt. William B. Anderson of Morilton, Ark., recalled many stories of a Negro infantry battalion which was part of an armored spearhead working in the Ruhr pocket just to the right of his own outfit.

"The only complaint I ever had about them is that they seemed reluctant to go out on night patrols," he said, "but in the daytime they raised hell. I saw a tiger tank which a few of these colored boys had knocked out with nothing but rifle grenades. Whether you know it or not, that's going some."

TEXAN FULL OF PRAISE

Pvt. Frank Frizzell of Houston, Tex., did not come into contact with any Negroes as combat troops, but he was an eyewitness to much of their work on the supply line. "As a soldier the Negro is every bit as good as the white man," he said. "I came into close contact with quartermaster troops up at the front lines. Even had chow with them. Being up at the front makes a lot of difference. You soon realize that the Negro is a man just like yourself."

Pvt. Vernon R. Palmer of Yakima, Wash., offered his opinion in similar vein:

"They were marvelous," he said. "They brought us our food, clothing ammunition, gasoline for the vehicles, cigarettes, medicines — everything. I think it is generally conceded that we had the best supply line of any Army. I suppose you know that Negroes made up about 85 per cent of our supply line. If it had not been for them, we simply could not have done the fighting."

6-23-45

S/Sgt. C. C. Caddell of Birmingham, Ala., had heard "very good reports" about a Negro artillery outfit in the Ruhr Valley. "I did not see them myself, but I talked with men who saw them in action and who said that they were damned good gunners," he said.

"All I know from my own observation is that they did a terrific job on the supply line. They can't be given too much credit on that score. I feel that they should have been given a greater opportunity as combat troops. With proper training, I believe they would have made good."

Pvt. Frederick Butler of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., recalled a Negro anti-tank battalion which was attached to the Fourteenth armored division of the Third Army. "We were curious about them," he admitted. "I questioned some of the white boys and learned that the colored boys were giving them excellent support."

WHITE REPORTERS GET SAME ANSWERS

At least a dozen other opinions, mainly from Southerners, were given in this pattern. This reporter, in an effort to find out if these views were being dressed up for his benefit, solicited the aid of two white reporters, Frank Morris of the Houston Post, and Kendrick Kimball of the Detroit News.

Both Kimball and Morris sought out Southern soldiers and received the same sort of replies. It is Kimball's opinion that these views are significant for the future of the Negro in this country. They come from men who may some day rise to power in their home communities. It is important, we agreed, that they should cherish a high regard for the Negro's contribution to allied victory.

NEW YORK—Among the 743 hospital cases which arrived here Friday aboard the S.S. Santa Paula, were 24 colored veterans from Europe.

They were not confined to any one section but were scattered throughout the ship's hospital area.

The men received a hearty welcome, and all expressed great joy in being once again among familiar surroundings.

Colored Canadians Arrive

Earlier in the week, the Queen Mary returned with 17,000 troops aboard, among which were 50 colored Canadians. There were no colored Americans aboard.

The Queen Mary was loaded to the rails with GI's. Every inch of the spacious decks was packed, and from every porthole there protruded not one, but two heads. There was a medley of screaming sirens, whistles and horns which made Times Square's New Year celebration seem tamed.

Girls Greet GI's

Flat boats, carrying on their decks bands, USO dances, entertainers, Red Cross girls and Wacs drew up alongside the steamship and extended a hearty welcome. Three blasts from the Queen Mary acknowledged these salutes.

Overhead were planes and helicopters. GI's had no confetti or telephone directories, but they used what they had. undreds of rolls of toilet tissue became streamers and festoons along the sides of the giant vessel.

The colored band from the Fox Hill's Terminal contributed to the welcome—the first number, "Rum and Coca-Cola," bringing a deafening roar of approval from the boys.

Move Serious Cases

A group of about 50 litter-bearers lined up and went aboard to remove the more serious hospital cases to a convoy of waiting ambulances. Red Cross workers served lemonade, coffee, milk, doughnuts and chocolate bars.

At about the same time of the Queen Mary's arrival, the S.S. West Point was docking at another pier; but this ship was not greeted by cheers, but instead, by a loud chorus of boos which investigation shows were directed at some 35 Japanese diplomats who had been brought over. They were captured at the time Berlin was taken and brought here for internment.

A few of the men on the Santa Paula were available for interviews, and here in brief is what some of them told the AFRO as they lay on their cots waiting to be brought ashore by stretcher-bearers:

Pfc. Charles M. Horton, Charleston, W.Va., First Army, England. He has 50 points. Got the greatest scare of his life when he got lost and found himself in enemy territory. He received his injury when he fell from a truck on a highway. He said, "I'm getting along O.K."

Pvt. Robert Waters, Chicago. He has 50 points; was wounded by a sniper in Germany; says that he got frightened more than he got thrilled; that one night while participating in a two-mile convoy, he became so scared that the stars didn't look right to him. "When my leg gets back in shape, I will be ready to fight the Japs."

Pfc. Wilbert A. Jarvis, Tuckahoe, N.Y. He was under fire in France, Luxembourg, Belgium, Holland and Germany. "My greatest thrill was in seeing democracy practiced overseas, regardless of color, after I crossed the English Channel."

Pfc. Truman Jackson, Washington, D.C. Machine gun bullets got him. "My greatest thrill was coming home to the U.S.A."

Pvt. Clura Edney, Naples, Tex. He has been under fire a number of times; glad to be home.

T/C Johnnie Moore, Canton, Ohio. I asked him how many points he had. He said, "I have enough points in this bad leg to get out of the Army. I was scared most of the time, in fact, nearly all the time. My greatest thrill is in seeing American women once more. Greetings, wifey, I'm proud to be an American."

Pvt. Harrison L. Hill, Philadelphia. Has 80 points. "I was never frightened. I've had lots of fun I'm not anxious to go to the Pacific. Hello, Mama, I'm back."

Pfc. Harold W. Hamilton, Montgomery, Ala. He has 62 points. "I had many close calls. I won't tell my greatest thrill; just glad to be back."

Cpl. James Smith, Birmingham. He says, "I don't want to talk about it, but I'll say this—I was hit by a sniper: I had lots of fun taking supplies to the fellows. I got my greatest kick in taking the Jerries to prison camps. Greetings: Mother, I'm safely in the States."

Pfc. Edward W. Saunders, Coloredden, S.C. Sayshe, "Coloredde stroyed—I was happy that my bombed pretty well. Eisenhower Reviews Troops at West Point

General Dwight D. Eisenhower accompanied by Maj. Gen. Francis Wilby (right) superintendent of West Point, reviews a cavalry detachment just inside the gate at West Point, shortly after his arrival there.

Army Denies Slur On Negro Troops

Washington, July 5 (AP)—Undersecretary of War Patterson said today the Army is proud of its Negro soldiers and that he knows of no general who has condemned their performance.

Patterson thus took issue with Senator Eastland (D., Miss.), who declared last week during Senate debate on the Fair Employment Practices Committee that generals told him on a recent overseas trip the Negro troops "would neither work nor fight." Eastland called them an "utter and abysmal failure."

Asked at a news conference whether Eastland's views represented those of the Army, Patterson replied that he had no knowledge of any general making such a statement and that the expressed opinions of Generals Eisenhower, MacArthur and others "do not support any such conclusion."

He added that Eisenhower had commended volunteer Negro platoons in Europe and that the Army's inspector general had praised the work of the 24th Infantry Regiment, a Negro outfit, in the Marianas.

ROBERT QUILLEN

They Will Build A Better Nation

When Maj. Gen. Ray E. Porter was transferred from his command of the 75th Infantry Division of the 9th Army, he sent a personal good-bye letter to every enlisted man in the outfit.

He reminded them of the tough and valiant things they had done, including campaigns in four countries with the armies of five Allies.

Every general, colonel or captain who expresses an opinion of his boys says they are the finest he ever knew—and so they are, but they are tops only because his acquaintance is limited.

America is a way of life, and something in that way makes boys of all races develop qualities of unsurpassed courage, fortitude, gallantry and selfless devotion when the chips are down.

They aren't all alike. An army picks up all kinds, including the vilest. Fifty-four were executed for rape, or rape and murder; many molested women and snatched purses in London's blackout; thousands were convicted as felons, most of them for stealing.

But 99 per cent of the ten million have proved themselves decent, and, when the need comes, they manifest all the high qualities of manhood that our race has honored for ages.

The war didn't remake them. It only brought out what was there. A man grows up to his job only if he has the inherent capacity for it.

When these boys-grown-into-men come back home, they will not return to boyhood. And they will build a better nation, if the rest of us can measure up to the standard they have set.

Color Line And Battle Line

Atlanta World Ga.

(From New York Herald Tribune)

1-12-45

The year opens with more than 700,000 Negroes serving in our Army, the War Department announces. There are 5,804 Negro commissioned officers and 263 chaplains. Sixty per cent of the Negroes in the Army are in service overseas. The gallantry of the 92nd Infantry division, a Negro combat unit on the hard-slogging Italian front, has previously won acknowledgement and praise. Some parts of this division being sixty-eight days in front-line fighting----but the War Department's present report emphasizes that during 1944 Negro troops fought on every battle front from Alaska to Burma.

Negro soldiers were on the Normandy beaches and are now fighting in the Philippines. And Negro citations for gallantry have been many and as high, proportionately, as among white troops.

1-12-45

The four companies of Negro ambulance drivers who served finely and dangerously in the push through France are now with the First Army in Belgium. The work of all Negro medical units is being well done, the department declares, and there are 463 Negro Medical Corps officers and 247 Negro nurses now on active duty overseas.

The War Department's summary, covering as it does, all branches of the Army, pays a well-earned tribute to the brave and important part Negroes have taken in winning the war. The report should be valuable is silencing rumors of racial discrimination in the service—rumors which were so often heard in the first two years after Pearl Harbor. Such trouble-making stories are now placed officially in a discard where they should remain. For there is no discrimination in fragments of steel----as a dead statesman told us and an army knows. And, surely, the only discrimination which can exist in this war is that between the agelong human shapes of liberty and tyranny---never between those faces which, in a fight for freedom, happen to be white or black in the battleline.

Facts Revealed

NEW YORK — (ANP) — Facts behind the recent court martial sentencing of 73 Negro soldiers, all members of a labor battalion stationed at Hawaii, were revealed last week by Walter White, NAACP executive secretary and New York Post war correspondent, as the result of a no-work protest they lodge against the wholesale transfer of their Negro officers. While parts of White's dispatch was deleted by army censors, he was able to present the background of the trouble that led to their defiance of a back-to-work order and finally to their courtmarital and sentencing.

Port Unit Repeats Performance This Time Giving Blood

AFRO-AMERICAN Baltimore, Md. 1-6-45

FRANCE — Soldiers of the crack 483rd Port Battalion, holding all tonnage records in the giant port of Cherbourg, are giving blood as well as sweat in the drive of supply troops to meet the needs of troops at the front. 1-6-45

Following a special plea for block donations, the unit produced more than double the number of volunteers that the station hospital could process at one time. There is no racial differentiation made in army blood collections.

Although soldier donors are unable to take rest periods after their donations, they feel as S/Sgt. Murray Johnson, Westbury, Long Island, N.Y., felt when he said: "I have a brother up front and you can't tell how much he may need this stuff."

Fate Caught Up With Pfc. Fate Stanton Who Fought With Four Allied Armies

Journal & Guide Norfolk

STARK GENERAL HOSPITAL, CHARLESTON, S. C. — Pfc. Fate Stanton, of Tunnel Springs, Ala., former cannoneer of the 999th Field Artillery Battalion is a first class fighting man. 4-21-45

A glance at the combat record of this 38-year-old convalescent at Stark General Hospital shows that he has fought with four Allied armies on the Western Front: Gen. Hodges' First, Gen. Patton's Third, Gen. Patch's Seventh, and the fighting French First Armies. His one ambition is to rejoin his old gun crew in the 999th and fire just one more round at the Jerries from his faithful 8-inch howitzer.

BLASTED FORTIFIED TOWN

Exactly one year after he was inducted into the Army, Pfc. Stanton was sitting in a valley near the Seine River in France, thrilling to his 8-inch gun as it lobbed shells into a small French town which the retreating Germans had strongly fortified.

Stanton doesn't remember the name of the towns he has fought in—all re remembers is the name of the Army he was fighting with —all he cared about was that he was firing.

JERRIES ARE CLOSE

He first tasted action with Gen. Hodges' First Army when his unit, C Battery of the 999th Field Artillery, was ordered into the line ahead of the reserve infantry. Stanton was so close to the Jerries that his gun fired all day on "charge one," the basic powder increment that provides the shortest possible range for an artillery piece. 4-21-45

"As soon as we got our guns zeroed-in, the order came to 'Fire at Will.' That's the order I like," said the soft talking cannoneer. "Our gun crew could fire three rounds in 45 seconds and we sure let that little old town have it. After we ran the Jerries out, we passed through the town and there wasn't much of it left.

AT METZ WITH PATTON

"We left the First Army then and went over to join the Third Army and gave Gen. Patton a hand at Metz. Yep, I remember Metz, all right.

"We got in there on a Saturday night and really threw some shells around, but our ammunition ran short and Jerry pushed the infantry back so far that our guns had no protection. So we fell back and hooked up with the French First Army. If our ammunition hadn't run short, I think we would have taken Metz the first time.

"We stayed with the First French until we captured a place called Lunersville and two more places. I don't remember their names—and two more valleys—I don't remember their names, either. We were busy keeping that gun firing. We than moved back near Hetz and joined General Patch's Seventh Army.

"That's where I ran into bad luck." 4-21-45

WOUNDED AT POST

The bad luck Stanton talks about came when he was injured while performing his favorite duty—loading the 200 pound shells into his beloved howitzer.

Inducted into the Army in July, 1943, Stanton is married and has one son who lives with his wife, Leola, and mother, Mrs. Hannah Stanton, at Tunnel Springs.

He went overseas with the 99th Field Artillery Battalion in June 1944, and was returned to the States in April.

Typical of most men who have returned from overseas battle fronts, Stanton wants the world to know that his gun section was the best bunch of guys in the world.

Eisenhower Lauds Colored Soldiers

AFRO-AMERICAN

6-23-45

WASHINGTON (NNPA)—General "Ike" Eisenhower, in a farewell press conference with war correspondents in Paris, threw a bouquet at the work of colored troops in the war.

Said Eisenhower, in answer to a request to comment on the contribution of colored soldiers to the European Theatre operations said:

"To start with, I would like to say this: That I do not differentiate among soldiers. I do not say white soldiers or Negro soldiers, and I do not say American or British soldiers. To my mind, I have had a task in this war that makes me look upon soldiers as soldiers.

Did Excellent Work

"Now, I have seen colored soldiers in this war, and I have many reports on their work where they have rendered very valuable contribution and some of them with the greatest enthusiasm. In late November when we were getting short of reinforcements, replacements, some 2600 colored soldiers volunteered for front-line service and they did good work. All my commanders reported that these volunteers did excellent work. 6-23-45

"But their major job has been in services of supply, engineer units, quartermaster units, ordnance units. There, so far as I know and certainly as far as any official reports, they have performed equally with every kind of ordnance battalion, quartermaster battalion and engineer battalion. They have done their job and they have done the job given them.' 6-23-45

Just as Gen. Ike entered the military reservation at West Point yesterday, little Alan Bruce Wasser of New York rushed up to him and handed him a bouquet of flowers, which Ike graciously accepted.

Their Tribute: 'What a Guy'

The old ditty about "how're you gonna keep 'em down on the farm —after they've seen Paree," doesn't seem to apply in this war.

What most of the 29 officers and 24 enlisted men who came back with General Eisenhower want most of all is to get right back to the farm and stay there.

With few exceptions, the men, who come for the most part from farms and small towns in the Midwest, are eligible for discharge and intend to ask for it.

That was made clear yesterday as the men talked things over at breakfast at the Waldorf-Astoria, just before leaving for West Point.

Sgt. Charles Kiley, a Jersey City newspaperman in civilian life who covered the trip for Stars and Stripes, said that what impressed him most was the time one of the boys from Kansas phoned his farm-home long distance from Washington.

"He came out of the booth looking forlorn," Kiley said, "and I asked him what was the trouble.

"'There's a frost out in Kansas,' he replied.

"'So what the hell,' I said. 'You're going to meet the President, all the big shots, you'll have a wonderful time. Why worry about it?'

"'No,' he said, 'it's crop time now. They're worried about the frost. I wish I were home.'

"'See what I mean?' asked Sgt. Kiley, a tall, bronzed veteran who has been in the Army over three years and will be getting his discharge soon.

"What happened to them," he went on, "was almost too much for the boys to grasp. They lived a kind of dream. Generals Marshall and Eisenhower gave orders that everybody, from privates up, be treated like five-star generals. The idea was for these fellows to be a representative group of American soldiers, from representative divisions, and that's what they were."

For all of the 53 officers and men, the news that they were to go home with the general came as a surprise. Pfc. Vernon Janzen, 23, a brown-haired soldier who comes from Lorraine, Kan.—"sweet Lorraine," he said—was in Czechoslovakia when his commanding officer told him he had been chosen to represent his division—the First.

Janzen wore the Purple Heart and Silver Star, both won when he was wounded while evacuating injured soldiers in Germany.

A farmer, Janzen wants to settle down, he said, if he wins his discharge, and raise crops and a family.

"New York," he said, "is too big for me. The parade was pretty wonderful, of course. It makes a fellow feel good to see people waving at him—makes him feel he did bing when he feels he didn' do a thing. But I can't wait to get home."

All of the men were unanimous in their praise for General Eisenhower—"a guy who is really everything and a lot more too," according to Corp. Richard Corridan, of Lawrenceville.

They left together with Eisenhower at 9 a.m. for West Point. Several of them stood watching the photographers take pictures of the General.

"What a guy," one of them said.

Ike's Aim – One Military Unit

The Army teaches discipline, so they say. So at West Point yesterday, 5000 were on hand to greet General Eisenhower, and of course they were supposed to let him alone.

But a little boy dodged under the barrier, ran up to Ike, and offered his hand. Ike shook it, beamed at him.

The little boy probably got a talking-to from a father horrified by this breach of discipline. The boy is 8-year-old Jeffrey Yates, son of Col. Robert Yates, who's stationed at the Point.

Compared with his day in New York, Ike had a day off at the Point, although he reviewed the 700 third-class cadets and the post's 1000 enlisted men, and performed a few other pleasant chores.

It was cool and sunny as Ike arrived at 10:35 by car from New York. With him was his son, Lt. John Eisenhower, his parents-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. John Doud, of Abilene, Kan., and some of his staff.

Ike apologized to the cadets for the review, saying with an expansive grin:

"One resolution I made 30 years ago was that I'd never turn out the corps of cadets even for my funeral."

On a more sober note, he hammered home his frequently-repeated theme of international cooperation for peace.

"You must cultivate mutual understanding with anybody you think you have to get along with," he said. "To my mind that's the whole civilized world. Stick together and we can lick anybody we have to fight, but if we stick together intelligently we won't have to fight."

He said that if he had his way he'd make the Army, Navy, and Air Force one unit, with the same uniform, "but I don't suppose that Congress and the big brass would agree with me." He didn't crack a smile at the "big brass," although he's one of the biggest of them all.

He presented to the West Point Museum the dress sword, owned by Napoleon, and presented by the French Army to the American Army, through Eisenhower, for the liberation of France. This was the sword he had to hold his plane for in Washington for 13 minutes Tuesday because he'd forgotten it.

He had been on the post only 20 minutes when he said:

"I feel like a cadet again (he was graduated in 1915). The surroundings are the same, and I feel just as young as I did then."

Ike visited the rooms he'd had as a cadet—3022 in his first three years, and 2711 in his senior year—and showed his prodigious memory by reciting without hesitation the names of the men who had lived on either side of him those 30-odd years ago.

Always a man to give the GI his due, Eisenhower told the post's enlisted personnel that they were doing an essential job in turning out second lieutenants. He said:

"There is no more important post in the Army than that of the true leader. I can imagine no more important job than training such leaders. A similar job was mine in the first World War. I know how I felt. If I could make you believe that you are doing the important task I consider it, I would be very happy."

The general feeling was summed up by Don Greenbaum, of Philadelphia, who was wounded in Germany with the 7th Army and is now a cadet candidate at West Point. He'd never seen Ike before.

"Boy," said Greenbaum, after talking with Ike, "is he a great man! I really idolize him."

Eisenhower refused requests for his autograph, explaining that he didn't want to show any favoritism, that if he gave one he'd have to give hundreds, and he'd never get anything done.

He spent the night at the Point and is flying from there today to Kansas City, Kan., for a reception, after which he leaves for his home town of Abilene, Kan., for another big turnout but most of all to see his mother.

NEGRO GUARDSMEN QUIT CAMP TODAY

The New York Times
New York, New York 9-23-45

Service Medals to Be Awarded by Governor Dewey on Central Park Mall

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PEEKSKILL, N. Y., Sept. 22—Considered among the best disciplined commands of the State Guard, the Fifteenth Regiment of Harlem, commanded by Col. W. Woodruff Chisum, and the Third Separate Battalion of Brooklyn, led by Maj. Myles A. Paige, tomorrow will conclude a twelve-day training tour at Camp Smith that has been hampered by several days of heavy rainfall.

So heavy was the rainfall that on several occasions the regimental medical officers advised against the 1,400 Negro Guardsmen taking the field. On Sunday, one of the few nice days, the largest crowds of the season, nearly 8,000 persons, visited the reservation and witnessed a review of the troops by Lieut. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, commander of the State Guard.

Range Firing Delayed

Firing for record with all types of weapons was completed Wednesday, one day behind schedule, on the various ranges. Scheduled field operations embracing bayonet drills, house-to-house and street fighting, scouting, precision drills, patrolling and use of gas were then taken up and demonstrated under realistic conditions. Squad, platoon, company and battalion combat problems were included today.

9-23-45

Thursday and yesterday between field problems inspection of the Negro units was made by Capt. T. F. Stewart of the Second Service Command of Governors Island.

Despite the unfavorable conditions that prevailed throughout most of the training period, both Colonel Chisum and Major Paige expressed themselves as being more than satisfied with the results accomplished. The men's morale and health has been excellent, as has been the food.

Firing Records Good

The results obtained in rifle firing for record on the 200-yard range was very satisfactory. The 15th Regiment, with 590 firing, qualified 390 with twenty experts, fifty sharpshooters and 320 marksmen. The Third Battalion, with 199 firing, qualified 161 with seventeen experts, thirty-one sharpshooters and 113 marksmen.

Mustered in, inspected and paid off today the Negro units will break camp early tomorrow morning for Manhattan to take part in the review of more than 10,000 members of the Guard by Gov. Thomas E. Dewey in Central Park Mall in the afternoon. Governor Dewey will present fifty conspicuous service medals awarded by him.

NEGROES IN THE WAR

TAMPA.—Three cheers to Ernest B. Simmons for his recent response to Robert C. Byrd. Hats off to a man with the vision to see and the courage to call a spade a spade. I am a graduate of Tuskegee Institute and invite Mr. Byrd to visit this school or any Negro college and become enlightened.

Negro youths along with whites left their blood on battle fields so that we may have the "American way of life." A survey will show that these young men held responsible posts and were indeed a credit to their race. Are they (and others whom they represented) to be deprived of a chance of a say in the government which they fought and died to preserve, because of the pigment in their skin?

1,400 Negro Guardsmen Leave

The 1,400 Negro Guardsmen, members of the Fifteenth Regiment New York Guard, left Camp Smith yesterday after ten days of training. The regiment left in the morning so that they could get to New York City in time to take part in the review of more than 10,000 members of the Guard by Governor Thomas E. Dewey. Governor Dewey presented 50 conspicious service medals.

The twelve day training tour of the 15th Regiment was hampered by several days of heavy rainfall. It was so heavy on several occasions that regimental medical officers advised against the 1,400 Negro troops taking to the field.

Despite the unfavorable conditions that prevailed throughout most of the training period, both Col. Chisum and Major Paige expressed themselves as being more than satisfied with the results accomplished. The men's morale and health was said to be excellent.

The men were inspected and paid off on Saturday.

A Million Of The Race In U.S. Uniforms

St. Louis Argus 2-23-45 Mc.

By LOIS TAYLOR

HAMPTON INST., Va.—Feb. 20—(Special)—The more than 1,000,000 Negro men and women in uniform who are doing their part, frequently unheralded and unsung, in World War II were hailed at Hampton Institute Friday night, Feb. 16, by Dr. Henry J. McGuinn of Virginia Union University who delivered a lecture on this subject during the observance of Negro History Week at Hampton.

Introduced by President Ralph P. Bridgman of the college, Dr. McGuinn cited the war heroes of Negro history from the death of Crispus Attucks in the Boston Massacre, down to the recent feats of members of the 669th Artillery Battalion at Bastogne.

Deploring the fact that white newspapers and periodicals have, with few exceptions, ignored the Negro's contribution to the war, Dr. McGuinn declared that this information can be secured by all newspapers, upon request, from the Office of War Information. 2-23-45

Land, Air, Sea

The colored combat troops at Bougainville, the 45th Anti-Aircraft unit in the harbor of Naples, the 92nd Division in Italy, the 366th and 369th Engineers in the Battle of the Bulge, were among the Negro land units whose exploits Dr. McGuinn mentioned. In the field of aerial warfare, he said, the 332d Squadron has shot at least 73 enemy planes out of the air, while 11 members of the 99th Pursuit Squadron have won the Distinguished Flying Cross.

Naval Heroes 2-23-45

In addition to such individual naval heroes as Dorie Miller, Leonard Harmon, Charles W. David and others, 23 Negro officers and 142,628 Negro enlisted men were reported serving in the Navy last September, according to Dr. McGuinn. There are at least 15,771 Negroes in the Marine Corps and 3,367 are in the Coast Guard, with four officers. The National Maritime Union has 8,000 colored members, with three captains of Liberty ships with mixed crews. Four thousand Negro women are in the WAC, while others are joining other branches of the service as the barriers of segregation and discrimination are removed. 2-23-45

Civilians Too

On the home front, Dr. McGuinn stated, at least 300 million dollars were invested in war bonds by Negroes during the Fifth War Loan, while Negro women raised three million dollars in a two-million-dollar campaign for the steamship Harriet Tubman.

As of January 1, 1944, about 14 per cent of all civilian government employees in Washington were Negroes, while Negroes form approximately 7 per cent of the industrial war workers engaged in the making of munitions and the building of war ships and planes.

These pictures explain themselves. They formed part of a campaign of the Germans to break down the "will to fight" of Negro troops in Italy. They FAILED. Not a single Negro soldier is known to have gone over to the enemy. We know now that Nazi lies of good treatment meant starvation and in cases torture and brutal murder.

In the Pacific, where our war now shifts, the Jap propaganda will be different. They will stress the race war and play upon what Nippon believes is a revolt in America against the white man's rule similar to his fight for Pacific domination. Again America's enemy shall FAIL — under the hail of bombs and before the dauntless courage of white and black Americans and their Chines ally, all dedicated to the one principle of world democracy. 5-19-45

Soldiers Vote Against Jim Crow

The Defender

Chicago, Illinois 9-15-45

Dixie Traditions Upset

By EDWARD B. TOLES
(Defender War Correspondent)

PARIS — White GIs who fought alongside Negro infantrymen are overwhelmingly in favor of mixed regiments.

This fact was revealed here during a Army Information Education Research Survey conducted by Major R. B. Wallace, son of the former vice president, Henry A. Wallace.

The prejudice percentage among white GIs who fought in lily-white units was found to be vastly higher than those of white soldiers who fought with Negro volunteer infantrymen in Germany.

The series of interviews were conducted among GIs of the 1st, 2nd, 9th, 69th, 78th, 99th and 104th divisions and revealed that white companies were willing to accept Negro soldiers.

First Break

The mixing of white and Negro doughboys in fighting units marked the first break of the traditional Army policy of separating units according to race. Most of the Negro volunteers came from Engineer, Quartermaster and Transportation corps.

Shortly after the German surrender an army and civilian trained research team using late scientific interview research methods queried only white infantrymen in what was originally conceived as "Reconnaissance Study" of the performance and utilization of Negro infantrymen. From personal interviews and anonymous-answered questionnaires by cross section of some 1700 white enlisted men, of other field forces beside the infantry, yielded remarkable revelations of the white man's viewpoint on his attitude towards his fighting Negro comrades.

An analysis data showed that white soldiers who worked with Negroes in the same unit were much more favorable to mixed organizations than white soldiers who had little or no close contact with them. Seventy-three percent of the officers and 60 percent of the enlisted men replied "Very well," to the question "How have white and Negro soldiers gotten along together?" Thirty-six percent of the GIs and 7 percent of the officers thought "fairly well," and not a single white man questioned said "not well.

Others Say "No"

But in the white divisions having no Negro platoons in their companies, 62 percent replied that they would dislike mixed platoons. In other field forces in the same divisions farther removed from Negro troops showed some opposition to having mixed units but these also have had no contact with Negro troops. Hence, figures showed inter-racial relations improved in proportion to the increase in contact.

The company commander said that when platoons got small, white squads were put in with Negro squads. The white squads didn't want to leave the platoon. The company commander stated that he had never seen anything like it. Relations are good. They take pictures together, go to movies together, and play ball together.

In reference to their performance in battle, 84 percent of the white officers and 81 percent of the white platoon sergeants and enlisted men answered "very well" while 16 percent of the officers and 17 percent of the enlisted men said "fairly well."

A company commander, describing a Negro platoon, stated that 35 men, counterattacked by 90 Germans after the platoon leader was captured, killed 46 of the Germans and took 35 as prisoners without losing any ground or having any casualties. Another said that "running into four machine guns and tanks firing direct fire, Negro infantrymen found a covered route and took the jerries by surprise. They cleaned out the whole business."

9-15-45

Greatest Achievement

The greatest single record achievement was the changed feeling toward Negro soldiers experienced by the majority of the infantrymen after serving in the same companies with Negroes.

Before their advent, some 64 percent of the white troops had a relatively "unfavorable attitude" but after fighting together the ratio had changed to 77 percent having "more favorable attitude" toward Negro fighting comrades. That mixed platoon infantry troops would improve inter-racial understanding and avoid friction, was among reasons advanced by 85 percent of enlisted men and 62 percent officers, all members of white divisions which had Negro platoons fighting with them. Men from widely different backgrounds and viewpoints agreed in testimony on the same, with all sections of the states represented.

Negro Soldiers Bitter

The Black Dispatch - Oklahoma City, Okla.

There are many incidents happening just now that should make all true lovers of justice and fair play take a hitch in their pants and resolve more firmly to have the moral courage to stand up and be counted. Passive morality will have slight virtue in an hour when new social patterns are being cast which may last for another thousand years.

Three letters written by Negro soldiers, and lying on the desk when this writer returned to his office last week, indicate that reaction and tyranny are on the march and that murder, terrorism and an effort to place the black man in an unenviable position before native peoples of other climes is today the evil technique of race haters.

An Oklahoma City youth writes from France that white army officers are telling the French not to have any social relations with Negro soldiers and that the week before he wrote his letter a Negro soldier was shot just a half mile from the camp when it was discovered he had sex relations with a prostitute. The French women are told, according to the youth, that all Negroes are infected with social diseases.

And then from Idabel, Oklahoma, comes this letter:

"I happen to be one of the many men who have served this place called 'the land of the free,' but now that I am out of the army, I really don't see where this war meant anything to us Negroes. About a month ago before I was discharged I was out at Camp Pickett, Va., where there are many German PWs, and to my surprise they were treated better than I was.

11-10-45

"Never before in my life have I ever been in court and heard the word 'nigger' used until I returned to my little home here in Idabel, Oklahoma. I want to fight again, and this time I want to fight for the rights of the Negro. Tell me just what I can do. Will you? I want to spend the rest of my life fighting for my people. Please advise me as to how to start.—Hugh Polite, Idabel, Okla."

And on another page of this issue we publish a letter coming from a black soldier in the Philippines, who says Negro soldiers are prevented from speaking to or fraternizing with the natives on the island of Mindanao.

According to this soldier, whites are permitted to associate and mingle with the natives, but Negro soldiers, away from home and friends, are denied all social contact with men and women of a dark race. We have for many years heard the stupid argument about preventing black men from intermingling with white women, but whatever justification there is for such reasoning it is wholly lost in the Philippines, and exposes an indefensible sex selfishness on the part of white men. "They are attempting to make these natives hate us," the corporal, who asks to have his letter printed, says.

America may have dropped an atomic bomb and won the war, but already, and at this very moment, it can be seen that we have lost the peace. As Bishop Walls said to this writer recently, America ended the war the most hated nation on earth. Someone has said that every evil has within itself the seeds of its own destruction. It appears as though despite all of the danger signals, America is plunging through the red light of world affairs, totally oblivious to the fact that upright men will not much longer accept hypocrisy and hate as the habiliments of peace. There must be integrity and virtue in attitude and approach.

The three Negro soldiers who wrote the letters above are bitter. They have a right to be, but after all, it is the thinking, sober minded white people of this nation who should be bitter as they read these lines. Is it the Negro or the whites responsible for this situation? That is the reason why at the outset we suggested that passive morality will be of slight services in an hour like this. The Negro soldier has done his bit to help save present day civilization. He has a right to feel that he should have equality of opportunity in this civilization. He has a right to feel that he will be protected against the slime and lies that are today being distributed all over the world by white army officers. Peace will not be conceived in human selfishness.

THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

New York Age

NOT so long ago, it was Adolph Hitler's "Mein Kampf" which was extensively used here in the United States to show that the Nazis were advocating a "master race" theory which was distasteful to all liberty-loving people. On that basis, every segment of the population was united in a desire to wipe out the proponents of the "master race" theory who had plunged the whole civilized world into a bloody war. 7-14-45

Hitler's Nazi hordes in Germany have been defeated. We have observed V-E Day and are now concentrating on doing the job when all of us can celebrate V-J Day which will signalize the end of all wars in the world today.

But, while Hitlerism was defeated in Germany, it is still alive in this country. And it finds ready and willing backers in high places of our Government, as anyone reading the Congressional Record recently has discovered.

The most current advocate of Hitler's "super" or "master" race theory is Senator James Eastland, junior Senator from the State of Mississippi.

In the Congressional Record for June 29, 1945, in his tirade against the FEPC, he not only bitterly assailed Negroes, but also savagely attacked the record of Negro soldiers in World War II, and then, to show the depths to which he had descended, he took a 25-year-old report on the Republic of Liberia and used it as if it were as of today.

Liar, cheat and hypocrite are but the mild terms which Negroes might use to characterize Senator Eastland. Below are but a few samplings of what, under Senatorial immunity, he was allowed to say in the Senate:

"The Negro race is an inferior race. The Negro organizations which are supporting this measure know that today all the power in the world could not bring about social equality, and could not force the white people of this country to associate on terms of equality with the Negro race. 7-14-45

"Mr. President, we must have racial harmony in the United States. We must have racial tolerance in the United States. A great rift has been driven in American life. Our country has been divided and weakened, in accordance with Hitler's doctrine of divide and conquer and Stalin's doctrine of making the races and classes in each country race-conscious and class conscious in order that the state may be weakened. . . .

"What is the history of the Negro soldier in the American Army? Mr. President, I recently returned from Europe. While there, I talked to numerous high-ranking generals of the American Army, some of them in a peculiar position to know the facts. Later I shall discuss the record of other Negro soldiers, the service troops behind the lines; but, first, what is the combat record of the Ninety-Second Division, the only Negro division that has seen service in Europe?

"To begin with that division — and I state it authoritatively — had the best equipment of any division in the American Army; it had the best training of any division in the American Army for political reasons — and when I say 'political reasons' I quote American generals — they were forced to commission some Negro officers for that division. In not one instance, Mr. President, could they place a Negro officer in a responsible position. In not one instance could they place upon his shoulders the responsibility of combat, and I tell you now, Mr. President, that division could not be placed in an important position in the line. Had we depended upon it, the German Army would have gone south to the toe of the Italian boot and destroyed our armies in Europe. The Negro soldier was an utter and dismal failure in combat in Europe. When I make that statement, it is not from prejudice. I am not prejudiced against the Negro.

"In a number of instances these soldiers would desert their posts of duty, their officers would desert their posts of duty, without cause, and the whole division would, without rhyme, or reason, quit fighting. The officers told us the soldiers had no initiative, no sense of responsibility, very low intelligence, and were a failure. Yet we are asked to set up an unfair preference against the white soldier for the benefit of the returning Negro veteran, solely because he is a member of a minority group which sells its vote to the highest bidder in political campaigns. 7-14-45

"In Europe, Negro soldiers are used principally as service troops behind the lines, and I state now, on the authority of many American officers, that they were lazy; that they would not work, that it was a mistake to send them to Europe, and furthermore, that they should be returned from Europe and sent to the Pacific, where there are races of color . . .

"Mr. President, I state that the conduct of the Negro soldier in Normandy, as well as all over Europe, was disgraceful and that the Negro soldiers have disgraced the flag of their country. They constitute roughly one-twelfth of the American Army, yet they are guilty of more than half the crime in the Army. 7-14-45

"Yet, Mr. President; we have a color line in America, and it is in the North as well as in the South. Down in Dixie we are a little more open about it than people are in other sections of the country, but high racial pride, one of the finest attributes of mankind, is in the breast of every white man everywhere, no matter whether he comes from the North or from the South. In Europe the Negro has crossed the color line. He has gone with white girls of the very lowest caliber, and I know how the northern white boy feels about that. Thank God, the white soldier from Pennsylvania, the white soldier from New York, feels about the racial question today as he does the veteran from Mississippi or Georgia or South Carolina or Tennessee . . . I know what is going to happen when the soldier returns . . . the conduct of the Negro soldier in Europe, the soldier to whom it is proposed to give preference, has caused the United States to lose prestige; he has caused hatred for our country and for our people. I was told in any number of cities that decent white girls could not go out on the streets because they would be accosted by groups of drunken Negro soldiers. I know from conversations with Army officers with generals in the American Army, and with civilians, that in England, in France, in Belgium, that feeling exists in a very intense degree. He has disgraced the flag of his country. He will not fight. He will not work. Yet we give him a preference . . .

". . . The soldiers are mad. We talk of racial tolerance. This agitation for social equality has destroyed racial tolerance; and I state frankly that the white soldier is openly and avowedly waiting for his chance when he returns to the United States . . . There will be no FEPC, there will be no social equality, there will be no such un-American measures, Mr. President, when the soldier returns . . . 7-14-45

"We hear a great deal of talk about racism, and condemnation of the idea of racism in America. It is said to be bad. It is said that when one is a racist he is a fascist. Mr. Presi-

White Soldier Speaks Up

Sunday Review

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — (ANP) — Sgt. Henry Eugene Erwin, the first B-29 crewman to win the medal of honor and who is recuperating here at the Northington General Hospital from severe phosphorous burns, declared last week that the war has changed his mind about Negroes.

Sgt. Erwin, whose red hair has won him the nickname of "Red," told how he was injured aboard a B-29 bomber en route to smash Japanese military targets on Iwo Island. His best friend, Sgt. Herbert Schnipper, was a right gunner on his plane. Sgt. Schnipper saved Red's life by administering blood plasma after he was wounded by a phosphorous bomb.

"He's a Jewish boy from Jamaisa, N. Y., said the wounded hero in reference to Sgt. Schnipper. "You know in Alabama, I hadn't known many Jewish people. Not many Catholics, either. In the army you learn something about people. When you get a buddy on your plane and eat and sleep together, and borrow each other's clothes, and fight together, you learn there's not much difference in religions. This Sgt. Schnipper is a really swell guy; he'd give me the shirt off his back and there's nothing I wouldn't do for him." 6-22-45

Red predicted that the country will be better off "for what our boys are learning about these things."

His prewar opinion about Negroes has changed. Born in Docena, Ala. a little coal mining town, on May 8, 1921, Sgt. Erwin was reared in an environment hostile to Negroes. His family was poor. His father was a coal miner, who worked hard and earned little.

"Take Negroes," he continued. "You know, down south here the people don't think so much of the Negro; they think he doesn't work. Well, when I saw what the Negro engineers did in getting the blacktop down on our field at Guam, I changed my mind about them."

dent, a man bereft of racial pride is weak. There is something wrong with him I say frankly that I am proud of the white race. I am proud that the purest form of white blood flows in my veins. I know that the white race is a superior race. It has ruled the world. It has given us civilization. It is responsible for all the progress on earth. When we lose racial pride, when we tear it down and destroy it, as the Communists, the CIO, and other radical organizations and minority groups are attempting to do in this country, America will be destroyed, and the end of our civilization will be at hand . . . As a southerner I am proud of racial consciousness. I am proud that it is a part of the culture of the South. As a Senator from a Southern State, I am proud to uphold those doctrines upon the floor of the United States Senate, against the radicalism of all the negroid groups from New York, Philadelphia, and other metropolitan areas of the East."

We could quote indefinitely, but the above should give a very good idea of the venom unleashed against Negroes on the floor of the United States Senate by Senator Eastland, who on the one hand says he is "proud of racial consciousness" and is "proud to uphold those doctrines upon the floor of the United States Senate", and yet in his opening remarks declared that a great rift has been driven in American life," has been divided and weakened, in accordance with Hitler's doctrine of divide and conquer, and Stalin's doctrine of making the races and classes in each country race-conscious and class-conscious in order that the state may be weakened."

Yes, it looks as though our returning soldiers will have scores to settle, but it will be the Negro soldier with those of Senator Eastland's stripe.

America's Negro Soldier

Black Dispatch

There has been nothing in recent months bordering on subversion more than the recent address of Senator Eastland, of Mississippi, in the United States senate, at which time the Mississippi solon sought to cast ignomy and shame upon the head of the Negro soldier. We talked last week with a Negro soldier, wounded, and just from the gory, shell-torn battle fields of Europe, where he, along with thousands of other black boys, has been fighting to preserve this nation. This youth gnashed his teeth as he talked about Senator Eastland and the sinister, un-American influences behind him. As this enraged black boy talked we realized fully and completely that men of the Bilbo-Rankin-Eastland type are doing more to spread disloyalty among Negroes than any other influence.

Think of it! The army, controlled by Southerners, bars Negroes from most combat units, casts him into supply and engineer divisions, and then tells an astonished world the Negro cannot and will not fight. There is nothing in America more unholy and cowardly than the disposition of certain vicious elements in America to assert that black men are incapable of doing anything, and proving it by never letting them try.

It would be almost laughable if it were not so serious to hear prejudiced whites assert that the Negro is a cringing coward and will not fight. The Bible says, "By their deeds ye shall know them." One would have to forget the heroic record of black men, from Crispus Attucks on Boston Commons, down to Dorie Miller, when he stood a few months ago alone on an American war ship in the Pacific defending the Stars and Stripes, to believe the current, fantastic lies being told respecting Negro soldiers.

Henry Johnson and Needham Roberts, who won the Croix de Guerre in France 25 years ago for slaying more than fifty Germans during a struggle one wild, gory night in No Man's Land, did not have to go to Normandy to convince the French that black men are brove. The French know history. The French know that black generals and black strategy drove the armed might of white men into the sea when France sought to recover Haiti from Toussaint L'Ouverture, Dessalines and Christophe back yonder at the turn of the eighteenth century.

Why should white men in the twentieth century argue that black men are cowards and attempt to prove it by mere words, when history proves that at one period in the life of humanity black men invaded Europe and enslaved white people? When Hannibal crossed the Alps black men were invading Europe, and when the Moors invaded Spain, black men had social, economic and political control of white people. Why the great rock, Gibraltar, which England fortifies today to maintain her strangle hold in the Mediterranean, was named for a black man who centuries ago fought valliantly on that rock at a time when black men controlled the world. The white man has lost a great deal of information he should have by not examining Spanish and Portuguese histories. The roots of black might are not to be found written in the English language.

With all of this background of courage and fearlessness the white man alleges he is experimenting with the black. He's trying to find out whether the black man can meet the challenges and the tests of war. Even when the white man chances upon a black man with courage down in Mississippi he dodges the issue. Let an enraged Negro arise and defend his rights down in Mississippi and at once the newspapers come out and say "Crazy Negro Runs Amuck." Never is there attempt to convey the idea that a courageous black man, whose keen sensibilities had been insulted, became outraged and defended his citizenship. Every brave black man down South is crazy.

There is a trail of black blood that wends its way thruout American history. Black men have fought with white men for the perpetuity of American ideals and they have many times fought alone for the things that ought to be. Many times the Negro has had to separate himself from the white man's hypocrisy to defend ideals that were dear to the hearth and fireside of the black man. Few know, but it nevertheless is true, that most of the Indian wars, respecting which American history is dotted, were launched and led among the Indians by brave blacks who, escaping from slavery, immediately became leaders among Red men. Oseola, the famous Seminole, who fought so valliantly against early white settlement, has been positively identified today as what was classified in that period as a renegade black.

Beginning in 1526, and on up to the Civil War period, the Negro in America, unarmed and totally unprepared to war against his oppressor, unleshed more than fifty insurrections here in America. Outnumbered, and knowing they faced almost instant death, men like Denmark Vesey, Nat Turner and others planted the seed of discord among their brethren that led up to John Brown's raid at Harper's Ferry. The plots, the schemes, the bold and daring exploits of black slaves when they had nothing with which to fight but their dauntless souls and spirits, will forever identify black men as possessing that grandeur of manhood that firmly and securely places them beyond the reach of harmless aspersions as cast in their direction by men like Eastland, Bilbo and some American army officials.

Teddy Roosevelt would never have returned alive from the Cuban campaign in the Spanish-American war had it not been for the heroic bravery and valor of black troops, when white men made an error at El Caney and ran into a Spanish trap. Ask General "Black Jack" Pershing about black fearlessness in the death trap at Carrizal on the Mexican border. Jutting out from all of the pages of American history is the story of black manhood, patriotism and love of country. The man, or set of men, who attempts to sabotage that record is a Fifth Columnist of the first water, and there ought to be in America a law as there is in Russia to forever silence such criminally minded subversionists.

During the more than 200 years black men have been fighting by the side of white men, leaders of the nation have been promising the black man his freedom. One may resurrect the utterances of George Washington, General Jackson at New Orleans, the promises of Union generals during the war between the states, to discover that the black man has been encouraged to fight with the promise of eventual liberation from the thralldom of slavery and second class citizenship. It is not to the discredit of the black, but certainly to the shame of the whites that in 1945 we find such promises unfulfilled, while political charlatans openly attempt to destroy the good name, the honor and the patriotism of such loyal American citizens.

COMPARE WITH BEST U. S. TROOPS --SUMMERS

Pittsburgh Courier

CAMP KILMER, N. J. — Handpicked Negro volunteers who joined the famed Timberwolf (104th Infantry) Division at the Remagen Bridgehead and fought with it up until the junction with the Russians, were left behind when the division was rounded for furloughs home and redeployment.

According to Col. William Summers, executive officer of the Timberwolves who arrived here last week, Negro troops of the division had been left in Halley, France, and it was not known whether they would go back to their old service units or be sent to the Pacific for further combat duty.

Colonel Summers stated that these soldiers had fought bravely side by side with their white buddies and had proved comparable to the best troops anywhere.

He insisted, however, that he did not know why they had been denied furloughs home along with their white comrades.

Negro platoons composed of carefully screened volunteers from rear echelons service units fought with the First, Second, Eighth, Ninth, Sixty-ninth, Ninety-ninth and 104th Divisions.

TROOPS PROTEST SEPARATION

7-14-45

According to protests sent to The Courier last week from Negro troops, men who had fought as integrated platoons in the Thirteenth, Twenty-eighth and 121st Infantry Regiments of the Eighth Division in Europe, were taken out and sent back to duty with service troops on the eve of their unit's departure to the States.

Acting on the basis of a statement by the War Department that this was a matter of theatre policy, The Courier has cabled Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, asking an explanation of the charges.

The regiments and divisions involved are part of the victorious First Army that swept through France and Germany in the decisive stages of the war in Europe. It became integrated when, woefully lacking in replacements, General Eisenhower called upon Negro troops to leave their assignments with service troops and volunteer for front-line fighting. Many Negro troops volunteered despite a loss in rank involved.

The kind of fellowship brought about by mutual battlefield dangers is exemplified by these three ETO vets brought home on the Aquitania. They are, left to right, Sgt. H. J. Atkins, Virginia; Sgt. Edmund Waddington, 2143 N. 19th St., Philadelphia; and Sgt. Jack Wilmorth, Jackson, Miss.

Negro Soldiers Of 3d and 9th Armies Arrive

1,660 Men of 5th Armored Division Among 2,984 Troops Expected Today

The converted Liberty ship Joseph Hewes put into Pier 15, Stapleton, S. I., yesterday afternoon with 552 veterans of the 3d and 9th Armies, most of them Negro service troops. Of the contingent, 529 served in France and Belgium as truck drivers with the 3241st and 3238th Quartermaster Service Companies and the 646th Quartermaster Truck Company.

Among the ten medical officers who made the uneventful, fourteen-day crossing from Antwerp was Captain Harry Jasper, of 737 Madison Avenue, Albany, who holds the Bronze Star, the Purple Heart and five combat stars after seven months of duty in France as battalion surgeon of the 2d Battalion of the 21st Regiment of the 2d Infantry Division.

All the troops were sent to Camp Shanks, N. Y., for reassignment, as were ninety-two others who arrived at the New York Port of Embarkation yesterday on three other small freighters. The ships were the Empire McKendrick, which debarked fifty-seven troops at Pier 8, Port Newark, N. J.; the Rosemont, from which eighteen men were taken off by Hudson River harbor boats, and the Lunsford Richardson, from which seventeen men were landed at 132d Street and the Hudson River.

Today, five transports bearing 2,984 troops are expected to drop anchor at the Port of Embarkation. The largest contingent, 2,188, will be aboard the Exchange. Among the troops will be 1,635 enlisted men and twenty-five officers of the 5th Armored Division, which fought its way across Europe from Normandy to the Elbe. The men are not drawn from particular units of the division, but represent many of its components. Most are returning for reassignment. They will go to Camp Shanks.

Also aboard the Exchange will be men from the 72d and 167th Liaison Squadrons and the 86th Transport Squadron (cargo mail).

Another troopship expected today is the Lou Gehrig, which carries some liberated prisoners of war among her twenty-five passengers. She will anchor off Rosebank, S. I., and military personnel will be taken off in boats and transferred to Camp Shanks at 3 p. m. An earlier arrival off Rosebank will be the Great Republic, expected to debark fourteen men at 7:30 a. m.

Camp Kilmer, N. J., is the first destination for 738 troops scheduled for reassignment after landing from the Richard Rush, which is expected to dock at 9 a. m., at Pier 16, Stapleton. Nineteen other soldiers are scheduled to arrive on the H. M. S. Reaper, a British auxiliary aircraft carrier expected at Pier 14, S. I., at 3 p. m. The troops will go to Fort Hamilton, Brooklyn.

To the Editor of The Journal:

I wish to make reference to your recent guest editorial entitled "Eastland Is Unfair", which appeared in the Monday paper, July 9, 1945.

This is the first time I have ever written to a newspaper; but I feel that in all fairness to Negro troops —especially to those with whom I have served—I must voice an opinion.

I can't speak from any battle experience, as I have none as yet; but if and when I do get into battle, I will feel pride and confidence should I serve with colored troops.

In maneuvers and bivouac, and as an enlisted man and officer with the ground forces and the Air corps, in the north and in the south, I trained with white and colored soldiers. All the ones I knew were far from "utter and abysmal" failures.

It is just a sign of ignorance for a civilian or soldier to make any blanket statement that Negro troops are worse than the whites, or vice versa.

In OCS at Miami Beach I never knew a colored soldier to "wash out." They were praised for their perseverance and excellent officer-qualities—without exception. In spite of the humiliations of the general southern attitude, 100 per cent of the colored boys succeeded; whereas the rest of us—the whites — could not claim such a record. We weren't even close to it!

In Mississippi, Senator Eastland's state, I spent 10 months in bivouac. Four months with white troops—the rest I shared a command with another white officer (Mississippian); we trained some 50,000 Negro troops, many of whom went to the Ninety-second division, and some to the famed "Fighting Ninety-Ninth" of the Air Corps. I maintained a daily log of our training and still have it; much difficult training is recorded in it, much of which I would stake my commission the men did not use in any failures!

To all Negro soldiers near or far I say ~~that~~ not only General Eisenhower, but the junior-grade officers, those of us who have had the pleasure of serving with you and knowing you best—and your fellow white soldiers know and appreciate your sacrifices, your good temperedness in ignoring foolish remarks, and we all know; "You are as good a soldier as any in the world!"

Further, let no one think I speak as just a narrow-minded northerner, whom many accuse of partiality to the Negro against the white. That isn't so. The white troops with whom I have served are tops, too; I feel certain they agree with me that the only color in the service is in the uniform! And anyone in it and in the fight is a symbol for it's achievements—is that failure?

I hope and pray that no more rabble will be so crude and un-American as to belittle other Americans. We had enough of that in Germany.

NEGRO SOLDIERS EAT AT WHITE HOUSE WITH EISENHOWER AS HALF MILLION ACCLAIM WORLD HERO

Black Dispatch

Conqueror of Hitler Not Certain of His Views Respecting Mixed Regiments

WASHINGTON.—(By Telegraph)—Today was General Eisenhower day in Washington. The wheels of government, business and schools stopped to pay tribute to the conqueror of Germany. Oakahoma City

In the general's party acompanying him from the battlefields of Europe were two Negro GIs, part of the 23 enlisted men brought back by the general. They were Master Sergeant Sylvester Buckner and Technical Sergeant Eugene Jackson. They, with the rest of the party of officers and enlisted men, accompanied the general to the Pentagon building from the airport, rode behind him in the parade to the capitol, were guests at the civic luncheon at the Statler hotel where they stayed, and again were guests with the general at the buffet supper at the White House this evening where they were entertained by President Truman. 6-30-45

Over five hundred thousand persons turned out to watch the general and his party ride in jeeps from the Pentagon building to the capitol.

At his press conference this afternoon, the general mentioned the twenty-six hundred Negro service troops who volunteered for combat duty with the third and seventh armies in Europe.

In answer to a question as to what he thought of this experiment and what it meant to the future of the Negro in the army, he said he had formed platoons of these soldiers, gave them trained non-com and commissioned officers, and that they operated as platoons wherever there was a shortage of replacements.

Mariners Hit Hate-Dealing Of Mississippian

Say Continued Presence In Senate Is Blot On Body

NEW YORK —(SNS)— Following unanimous approval of a resolution by a National Maritime membership meeting here, N. M. U. Port Agent Joseph Stack wrote Saturday to Senator Robert F. Wagner urging him to start impeachment proceedings immediately against Sen. Theodore G. Bilbo of Mississippi.

The resolution charged Sen. Bilbo with carrying on "one of the most vile and vicious attacks on all racial minorities in the United States in the history of this country." It added that the Senator used his "prolific ability for letter writing" to slander the Negro and Jewish people and to "openly advocate the banishment from this country of all minorities or their liquidation

COPIES FORWARDED

National Secretary Ferdinand C Smith has forwarded to the Union's 45 branch halls copies of the resolution adopted in New York and of Mr. Stack's letter to Senator Wagner. Together with this material Mr Smith has sent instructions for all the ports to take similar action and to contact their respective senators.

In his letter to Senator Wagner Mr. Stack declared:

"Senator Bilbo's continued presence in the United States Senate is a blot on that high body and an insult to every fair minded person in America.

"His arrogant and unwarranted attacks upon the Negro people and persons of Jewish and Italian extraction make him unfit to sit in the highest legislative body of the nation On behalf of the merchant seamen in the Port of New York I urge you to start impeachment proceedings against Senator Bilbo immediately."

IMPEACHMENT URGED BY NEGRO CONGRESS

NEW YORK, N. Y.— (SNS) — Thelma M. Dale, Acting Secretary of the National Negro Congress, Saturday called upon all Negro Congress council leaders and contacts to join in a national campaign of pressure on Senators for the impeachment of Senator Bilbo of Mississippi.

"For the first time," Miss Dale said, "genuine national sentiment is aroused over the increasingly vicious conduct of Senator Bilbo. It is possible, therefore, to envision a campaign which will successfully result in his impeachment."

Soldiers, Waiting To Go Overseas Riot In Florida

The Call - Kansas City Mo.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—(ANP) —The Negro section known as Frenchtown was the scene of a riot last week between 200 and 250 soldiers from Camps Gordon Johnston and Dale Mabry fields. No casualties were reported from the rioting that lasted approximately two hours. Much property was damaged.

The disturbance was caused by a group of AWOL soldiers from Dale Mabry field who came into town to "paint it red" and "tear it apart." This contingent of soldiers were said to be on their way overseas. After receiving notice they were to be shipped out, they were restricted to the base. The Dale Mabry group is said to have walked four miles down the Seaboard Air Lines tracks to town.

Many of the Negro owned and operated businesses were the heaviest sufferers from the riot. Many windows were broken and doors torn down. 4-13-45

The local police were the first on the scene. They were able to quell the disturbance somewhat with the use of tear gas. The soldiers were held at bay by the police, state road patrolmen and deputies from the office of the sheriff until the military police arrived. 4-13-45

A regular riot squad of MP's arrived armed with tommy-guns and proceeded to round up and arrest the soldiers wandering around in Frenchtown.

A cordon was thrown around this section of the city and it was under martial law from 10:30 p.m. until after midnight.

It was later reported that the guilty soldiers boarded a train the next morning for parts unknown.

The local police have been complimented for handling the situation without bloodshed. Malcolm N. Yancey, city manager, has asked three military sources to investigate the riot. His request has been sent to Brig. Gen. William H. Holcombe of Camp Gordon Johnston, Col. Laurence B. Hickam, Dale Mabry field and to the fourth service command in Atlanta. 4-13-45

Chief of Police W. L. Prater announced that no arrests were made by local police. He also announced that the extent of the damage was undetermined.

Herman J. D. Carter Saw Little Race Prejudice In Army Of U. S.

Nashville Globe Tenn.

Since my return from France, hundreds of my people have asked me if I fiund much prejudice overseas. To lessen the answer to these questions, I think it wise to do this article. 3-30-45

From the day I entered the United States Army, I never saw but two instances of prejudice shown by the white soldiers. One instance was at Aberdeen Proving Ground Maryland in August 1943. There was a great need for a stenographer in the second regiment. I had taken the typist examination, and done 74 words a minute, so I was put into the pool to be used throughout the post wherever a typist was needed. That day, the representative from the Classification section came and ordered me to the 2d Regiment to take the job as a stenographer. He emphasized the need for some one to use shorthand and the typewriter. I went over as ordered. When I got there the sergeant at the desk threw up his hands and said.

"Oh, we can't use you."

"Why? I asked.

"They wouldn't approve a colored soldier in there," he replied.

There was an officer, and some other military personed present.

I said: "Well, I understand you need a stenographer. I use the stenotype, typewriter, and shorthand, and all other office machines. I am perfectly willing to serve; but if you think you can win the war by not using me, then you know best. The other instance was at Ft. Meade Maryland when I was inducted on April 8, 1943. When I came through, and the officer asked me how fast I typed. I told him. Then he gave me a test. I made 54 words a minute. He said that he had orders to hold the next soldier who came through that could type, because they could not get the men out fast enough to answer to their country's call. I was glad. I was going to do something for my native land before receiving my first shot. To my surprise, I was almost assigned before the officer in charge discovered that I was a Negro. Then I was ordered to the casualty company, where later I was sent to the finest camp in the world, Aberdeen Proving Ground, Maryland, just 72 miles from Washington where I have made my home since 1940.

I say here, that I have experienced prejudice in the army; but not by military personnel except in those two instances. It wasn't that it didn't exist; but just because I fought it with Articles of War, and Army regulations, and that wins out. The army lives by the Articles of War, and the Army Regulations The army will follow them, and whenever a military personnel diviates from them, all a military personnel has to do is remind the offender of the ciolated law, and he immediately changes hi stactics.

Overseas, I was surprised to find such brotherhood among white and Negro soldiers. We walked together ate together, and in some instances fought together. Even the white soldiers from the heart of Mississippi and Texas smoked, drank, and ate with us, and denounced prejudice. 3-30-45

One night some 88's were flying like snow flurries over a certain part of France. A certain white Virginian jumped into the first fox hole he saw. He felt another person in there with him; but he said no a word. He may have been a German, and when dawn broke the next morning, this Virginian discovered that he was in the fox hole with a Negro soldier. There was a white soldier from New York in another fox hole. He yelled to his Virginia friend,

"Hey Virginia, which side of the fox hole is for Negroes?"

"Not any, and when I get back to Virginia I'm going to do all in my power to move those signs from the street cars too. This damn segregation is nothing but pure ignorance

Letter from Soldier in New Guinea Wins $5 for Aunt

BALTIMORE

[The AFRO awards $5 for each Soldier's Letter published. The following letter was sent to Mrs. Odella Epps of 400 Myrtle Ave., by her nephew, Pfc. Frank Young, in New Guinea.]

My Dear Aunt:

Hear I am again to say hello. How are you this time? It is Sunday morning here and is the beginning of what might be a lovely day. 5-5-45

I am hoping that it will continue to be pleasant all day long, but considering the fact this is in the tropics, it would be nothing of a surprise if it should begin raining within the next few minutes.

This morning, I am thankful to have been blessed with physical strength and good health to enable me to attend church.

As always, a wonderful lessor was taught and I'm most sure that all who were present were benefited by the message the chaplain preached from the subject: "Forbidden Blood." 5-5-45

Learns Great Lesson

He spoke about the sin of causing suffering and danger to others for the convenience or comfort of one's self.

It is a pity that people seldom think of who might have to make the supreme sacrifice for their wrongdoings and sinful ways of living. 5-5-45

Yes, it was a great lesson this morning and the chaplain made everything very clear to us. I feel that I can say truthfully that all who were present at the service were very much enlightened.

I am getting along okey as you imagine. My thoughts, Aunt, are always directed homeward. Write soon. Lovingly, your nephew,

FRANK.

Six Negro Veterans in Group to Tour War Plants to Help Speed Production

WASHINGTON. — Six Negro veterans of the epic battle for Bastogne are among the 56 front-line soldiers who will make a tour of war plants to impress upon workers the urgency of speeding up the output of badly needed military supplies.

The men were returned home for 60 days to visit factories as representatives of Gen. Dwight Eisenhower as part of a campaign to speed production of war material. At the end of the tour, they will get 21-day furloughs.

All six of the Negroes included have performed heroically in the war, and four of them are wearers of the Bronze Medal for valor. The six are: First Lt. Walter J. McDowell, of Charlotte, N. C.; Sgt Samuel B Hendrix, of Claxton, Ga.; Sgt. Frederick Wheeler, of Charleston, S. C.; Sgt. Franklin D Hendricks, of South Boston, Va; Sgt. Sandy Wyatt, of New York City; and Sgt. Hugh D. Thompson, of Lufkin, Tex.

As was the case when the going was tough at the front, no racial lines will be drawn during the tour of factories in this country. Two of the six Negroes will accompany five white soldiers to factories in Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin, and the other four will be accompanied by three white soldiers to factories in New Jersey, New York and Delaware.

The entire group appeared at a press conference at the War department this week.

White Officer Praises Negro Soldiers

COLUMBIA, S. C. (ANP)—A high tribute was paid Negro troops in New Guinea last week by a white lieutenant who wrote his impressions of them and of the Progressive Democratic party to Mrs. Gennie R. Seideman, white, of Columbia.

Wrote Lt. Jack Rome, somewhere in New Guinea with the Far East Air forces:

"I have received several copies of literature about your movement. They are, I assure you, very worthwhile and enlightenng.

"The colored soldiers over here are doing a great job and are greatly respected. My impressions are that the colored troops produce more work than several of our white units. They are hard workers.

"Good luck to your enterprise. Perhaps, some day, I shall have a hand in it."

Negro Soldiers

In all fairness the disparagement of Negro troops in the European conflict by Senator Eastland of Mississippi last week ought to be refuted. The Senator is quoted as having stated that the Negro troops were an utter and abysmal failure, that they would neither work nor fight and that they assaulted members of the families of French farmers.

The charges are so ridiculous as to be hardly worth notice were it not for the fact that a large number of our better class Negro people feel badly hurt. They have given their sons and friends willingly to the armed services and they have bought generously of war bonds. They have taken full part in various home activities contributing to the success of our arms. From all the reports we have seen except that of Senator Eastland the Negro men in the services have made good and they have experienced their share of casualties.

We do not think the rantings of Senator Eastland will hurt the Negro race or impede its progress. The past few decades the race has taken long strides upward, due to the sense and good judgment of the real leaders. It has been necessary that it have the help of the white race and it will need more of it in the future. Nothing should be said or done on either side that might affect this advantage unfavorably.

We say these things in hope that they may lessen the hurt of the Negro fathers and mothers caused by Senator Eastland.

HERE ARE FAMOUS FIRSTS OF WORLD WAR II

Chicago, Ill.

First Negro woman sworn into the Waves was Miss Jean A. Freeman, 22, of Roxbury, Mass. She was accepted for the Woman's Reserve of the Navy after a long campaign against Navy jim-crow broke down the barriers against Negro women.

First Negro ever to become a general in the U. S. Army was Brig.-Gen. Benjamin O. Davis, shown riding in a tank destroyer unit in France. Davis was named an aide to General Eisenhower in the latter stages of the war and acted as a general advisor on racial ffairs.

First Negro to command an Army Air Corps unit was Col. Benjamin O. Davis Jr., ex-West Pointer who first was commanding officer of the 99th Pursuit Squadron and later became commanding officer of the 332nd Fighter group which downed more than 100 Nazi planes in combat over Europe.

First Negro to report for training in the U. S Navy and break the long discriminatory policy of limiting Negroes to messmen was Doreston Luke Carmen Jr., 19, of Galveston, Texas. He entered the Great Lakes Naval Training station where all Negro seaman have been trained in World War II.

Nine, Seven Were 'Lucky' Numbers For Colored Outfits In World War II

Chicago Defender

Chicago, Ill.

By BRUCE L. REYNOLDS

"Lucky" numbers for Negro combat units on fronts around the world have been nine and seven.

History will remember years after V-E day the way in which the Negro units helped blast to rubble Hitler's fortress and then went on to destroy the Japs. Here is the roll of honor of the "nine" units:

99th Pursuit Squadron.
92nd Infantry Division.
93rd Infantry Division.
999th Field Artillery.
969th Field Artillery.

The "seven" units are:

777th Field Artillery.
707th Field Artillery.
761st Tank Battalion.
784th Tank Battalion.

The most colorful of such units in the European scramble was the much-publicized 99th Pursuit Squadron, activated in 1942 as an "experiment" of the War Department.

5-12-45

The doughty 99th put skeptics to flight and blazed a pioneer trail in the skies for the Negro in aviation. The squadron, which left the States for Italy in April, 1943, brought down a Focke-Wulf 190 over Sicily that summer with the blazing guns of Lt. Charles Hall (now captain) in its first brush with Luftwaffe. That the Negro fliers had emerged from the experimental stage was indicated in January, 1944, when they shot down 12 enemy planes in two days.

H. R. Knickerbocker of the Chicago Sun put into words the feelings of all fair-minded persons in his article of February, 1944: " . . . Nobody regards the Negro squadron as a curiosity any more. The head of the U. S. air forces, Gen H. H. Arnold, has congratulated them. They know they are good."

The 332nd Fighter Group joined the 99th in January, 1944. Composed of the 100th and 301st Pursuit Squadrons and other units, the group chalked up 200 combat missions with the 15th AAF on February 28, this year. It was credited with more than 8,000 individual sorties and its pilots had won 63 Distinguished Flying Crosses. There had been no losses.

Two Divisions

The 92nd and 92rd Divisions, all-Negro divisions which participated in World War I, have played vital roles in World War II. Both divisions trained at Ft. Huachuca, Ariz., though the 93rd was the first to be activated for the present conflict.

5-12-45

The 93rd Divison leaped into front page headlines in March, 1944, when its famous 24th Infantry became the "first Negro American infantry unit" to engage the Japs. The action took place on Bougainville, where the 24th helped, in the succeeding months of April, May and June, to blast the sons of Nippon in this sector out of the war.

The 24th Infantry, which was activated Nov. 1, 1866, was in the Pacific theatre as early as April, 1942. Its members, however, were performing as construction engineers. They were joined by and became a part of the 93rd Division in 1944.

The 999th Field Artillery battalion demonstrated its mettle, after landing in France in July, 1944, at St. Lo late the same month. But its fame came in August, when a report from Defender Correspondent Edward Toles declared the "effective firing aided in the lightning drive at Mantes and Gassicourt, establishing and holding a bridgehead at the Seine river."

Win Bronze Stars

Col. Gerolamic, commanding the second corps of the First French army, said of the 999th: " . . . I must tell you all the satisfaction I have had to have you as the most effective firing ever I have ever had under my command."

There was a mass award of bronze stars to members of the artillery battalion for its epic stand outside Colmar with the First French army.

5-12-45

The 777th Field Artillery, ripping holes in Nazi defense since Nov. 1944, fired the first gun of the 9th Army's 16th corps across the Rhine. It won praise for its softening up optration against Essen, the largest city in the Ruhr.

The Germans will long remember the thunderous bombardment of the Negro 707th Field Artillery battalion. The men worked like chained lightning and with unerring accuracy. They set a record by firing seven rounds from 4.5 inch guns in 37 seconds!

In Italy the 450th Anti-Aircraft battalion was commended for its destructive work against enemy installations and Axis planes.

Tank Destroyers

Forging into the headlines early this year was the hell-bent 827th Tank Destroyer battalion, which knocked out 20 German Mark VI tanks in two weeks near Hatten, Northern Alsace. The deadly work of the unit, activated in 1942, was recorded: "The 827th TD outfit is doing a whale of a job bagging German Mark VIs and their terrible King Tiger tanks here in Alsace."

The units of the 92nd Division went into the front lines in Italy in August, 1944, to become the first Negro combat infantry group to clash with the Nazis and Italian Fascists.

5-12-45

Gibson in Spotlight

In recent months, the exploits of the 92nd have received more than the usual scrutiny when Truman K. Gibson Jr., civilian aide to the Secretary of War, told reporters in a Rome interview that small units of the division "melted away" in the face of enemy fire. After a temporary withdrawal, caused by a desperate, last-ditch thrust of the enemy, the 92nd bounced back with the rest of Gen. Mark Clark's armies and other Allied troops to force the unconditional surrender May 2, 1945, of more than a million Axis soldiers in Northern Italy.

Operating against the Germans with precision effectiveness were a number of Negro field artillery, tank and tank destroyer battalions. Outstanding among these were the 969th and 999th Field Artillery and the 827th and 614th Tank Destroyer battalions.

The men of the 969th won everlasting glory during the Bastogne siege in Belgium when the 101st American Airborne Division was encircled by the Nazis and cut off from other Allied forces for nine days—December 18 to 27, 1944. The airborne commander, Brig.-Gen. Anthony McAuliffee, who hurled the now famous "Nuts!" in reply to German demands that he surrender, said of the 969th in a January, 1945 report: "The Negro artillerymen's work was most effective and accurate. Their counterattack was successful."

5-12-45

Win Citation

A dispatch from the 7th army, dated April 24, 1945, reported that the 969th had received the Presidential Unit Citation, "the highest and most highly coveted military award a unit can obtain." The release, in part, read: " . . . in the face of what appeared certain destruction, the men calmly but speedily shifted their guns under continuous enemy pressure on a 360 degree perimeter to meet and repulse every attack of the German 'Super Race'."

The 969th, activated August 5, 1942, landed in France early in July, 1944. It was one of the first artillery outfits to assault the Siegfried Line in Germany.

Mississippi Senator, In Vicious Attack, Says Negro Soldiers "Won't Fight, Won't Work"

Pittsburg Courier

By JOHN H. YOUNG III, Washington Correspondent

(Excerpts from Filibuster Speeches — Turn to Page 5)

WASHINGTON—In an unsavory speech filled with unsupported assertions and references to questionable authority, Mississippi's No. 3 candidate for Public Enemy No. 1—Sen. James Eastland— launched a vicious attack upon the American Negro soldier in the Senate last Friday. His speech not only castigated the mental, moral and physical abilities of the Negro soldier, but carried a direct threat of violence on the part of returning white soldiers against Negro citizens.

Joining Mississippi's other candidates—Senator Theodore (The Man) Bilbo and Representative John Rankin—in a filibuster against continuation of the Fair Employment Practices Committee, Eastland resorted to the well-known debate procedure of making a generalization and then seeking to lend credence to it by referring to such far-fetched authority as "many American officers," "high-ranking American generals" and "a high-ranking general in Paris."

QUOTES UNNAMED GENERALS

Senator Eastland's tirade against Negro soldiers began with a charge that for "political reasons" (Eastland said here that he was quoting American generals) generals were forced to promote Negro officers in the Ninety-second Division. Raved Eastland: "I tell you now, Mr. President, that division (Ninety-second) could not be placed in an important position in the line."

EDITOR'S NOTE—Elements of the Ninety-second Division were placed in the front lines in Italy in late July 1944. By late August, units of the division had spearheaded Gen. Mark Clark's Fifth Army's crossing of the Arno river to the slopes of Pisano Hill west of Florence.

Senator Eastland continued: "Had we depended on it (Ninety-second) the German army would have gone south to the toe of the Italian boot and destroyed our armies in Europe."

EDITOR'S NOTE—This above assertion seems to contradict the recent statement of Gen. Mark Clark who, in speaking of the Ninety-Second said: "They jumped into LaSpezia and with other Fifth Army units, took Bologna. Then they moved into Genoa and took it. I needed the Ninety-second and if anyone had tried to take it from me I would have protested loudly."

7-7-45

"UTTER, DISMAL FAILURE IN COMBAT"

Following this, Eastland conjured up one of the most unbelievable statements when he said: "The Negro soldier was an utter and dismal failure in combat. When I make that statement, it is not from prejudice. I am not prejudiced against the Negro."

At this point the galleries broke out in long and sarcastic laughter which ended only after the presiding officer threatened to clear the galleries.

EDITOR'S NOTE—There are three American generals who seem to disagree with Senator Eastland on this allegation of failure. General Eisenhower, in a press conference in Paris, said that he found the Negro soldier as good as any other. Gen. George S. Patton has declared the Negro soldier a "damn good soldier of which the nation could be proud."

But it is Gen. E. M. Almond, Commanding General of the Ninety-second, who comes up with the clincher. Speaking to the men of the Ninety-second he declared: "The Ninety-second Division and its supporting troops have performed splendidly. Without the arduous effort and unselfish cooperation on the part of each of you, it would not have been possible to secure the results obtained in so short a time."

"SOLDIERS' CONDUCT WAS DISGRACEFUL"

Again alluding to such questionable authority as "a high-ranking general in Paris," Eastland told of cases of rape on the part of Negro soldiers and declared: " . . . I state that the conduct of the Negro soldier in Normandy, as well as all over Europe, was disgraceful, and that Negro soldiers have disgraced the flag of their country. They constitute roughly one-twelfth of the American Army, yet they are guilty of more than half of the crime of the Army."

EDITOR'S NOTE—The War Department said that to its knowledge no statistics had been compiled on the crime ratio between races in the Army. Eastland gave no authority for his statistics.

Turning to traditional Mississippi technique and again referring to questionable authority, Eastland declared further. "I was told in any number of cities that decent white girls could not go on the street because they would be accosted by groups of drunken Negro soldiers. I know from conversation with Army officers, with generals in the American Army, and with civilians, that in England, in France, in Belgium, that feeling exists in a very intense degree. He will not fight. He will not work."

EDITOR'S NOTE—Eastland's reference to the failure of Negro service troops to do their work seems to contradict a statement made by General Patton who in referring to Negro truck drivers in the Tunisian campaign declared: "We needed ammunition badly up front and they brought it to us in a hurry. They operated under miserable road conditions day and night, and were exposed to shell fire and air strafing. They toiled so long and so hard that some of them fainted at the wheels of their trucks."

OFFICIALS GET STRONG PROTESTS

Pouring oil on the fire of racial tension already sweeping the Nation, Eastland declared that the white soldier "is openly and avowedly waiting for his chance when he returns to the United States." Many interpreted this as a veiled threat of reprisals on the part of returning white soldiers against Negroes in this country who have fought to break down opportunity barriers in this country during the war.

Immediately following Eastland's speech, protests flowed to President Truman and officials of the War Department. As yet, neither has made a statement on the implications and allegations in Eastland's speech. It is felt, however, that the War Department will make a statement in the near future at the insistence of the Negro press.

Protest was not confined to members of the Negro group, as many were registered by outstanding white citizens. Most prominent came from Clark Foreman, president of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare.

Mr. Foreman declared: 7-7-45

"In strange contrast to the accounts of Negroes' heriosm in today's press was the attack on Negro soldiers by Senator Eastland of Mississippi on the Senate floor today. The Senator apparently did not hear the report which General Eisenhower made on the bravery of Negro soldiers in Europe.

"I believe that the great majority of white Southerners are proud of the work of the Negro soldiers. The only explanation of these unjustified accusations on the part of Senator Eastland is that he was elected by a small minority of the voters of his poll-taxed State."

S.C Negro Leader Demands Proof of Eastland's Charges

Pittsburg Pa.

Columbia, June 30.—(AP): Proof of statements made by Senator Eastland, Democrat, Mississippi, that "negro troops were an utter and abysmal failure" was requested today by the South Carolina conference of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People.

President J. M. Hinton of the state N. A. A. C. P. referred to Eastland's statements during a Southern filibuster against the FEPC yesterday as "uncorroborated, and unproven false" ones.

He demanded that Eastland name the commanding generals who gave him such facts or have his assertions stricken from the senate's record.

Eastland said that "high ranking generals" had told him on a recent European trip that the negro troops would neither work nor fight and that in Normandy the negroes criminally assaulted members of the families of French farmers.

Hinton said he wrote the senator a letter demanding that he name the generals or strike from the record "what we have every reason to believe is a carefully calculated falsehood, with but one purpose, and that to discredit all negroes who fought, died, were wounded, or who will come back to a state like Mississippi and find worse conditions than they fought in Germany."

Hinton declared that "the records in the war department (judging from statements) by both Generals Eisenhower and MacArthur, disprove what you (Eastland) were alleged to have said yesterday."

No Comment from Officials

Rome, June 30.—(AP): An authoritaive source in the 15th army group declined today to comment on criticism of the 92nd negro infantry division voiced in the United States senate in Washington yesterday by Senator Eastland, Democrat, Mississippi.

"We don't want to get into any controversy with any member of congress," the source said.

Officials at Allied military headquarters, including Brigadier General Otto L. Nelson, acting commander in the Mediterranean theater, likewise declined to comment.

Senator Eastland said in his speech the negro 92nd division could not be placed in an important position in the Allied line in Italy.

Mississippi should have been the author of the most poisonously slanderous insult ever uttered publicly by one American against other Americans. They will not be stunned by their discovery of the mind of Hitler and the compunction of a buzzard in James O. Eastland and the new evidence of the foul, black nature of his soul. They will know that when this beast which looks like a man opened his mouth to besmirch the record of the Negro soldier, he spoke, not for the highest type of man, but for the lowest species of animal.

Pittsburg Courier

Negroes should remember that this Eastland comes from a State which, according to every standard of progress and advancement, stands last among the forty-eight. It is the poorest State, the most illiterate, the most lacking in the marks of culture, the most backward in public health. It has sent to the House and Senate a long line of the most notorious charlatans ever to disgrace those bodies. Since the days of Vardaman, claimed late in life by an asylum, the plantation politicians from Mississippi have vied with one another at the vulture feast of white supremacy. This Eastland is but the latest and newest addition to the board where such gluttons of hate as Rankin and Bilbo sit with distended stomachs.

* * * 7-7-45

Picture, if you will, the two drooly-mouthed Mississippians, Bilbo and Eastland, consuming hours of time in a bestial effort to kill off the Fair Employment Practices appropriation. Recall, if you will, the insult to your brothers, sons, fathers, killed and maimed in this war which they in no way sought. As his words that they would neither "work nor fight" drone in the inner recesses of your mind, forget, if you can, the hurt to yourself, to your people—forget, if you can, your strident appeals for seven long years to be allowed to play your full part as fighter and worker—forget, if you can, that it had been planned that you should not be allowed to fight—and think of America, your America, of all Americans and what the Eastlands must mean to them.

* * *

Dread them if you will, but dark days descend upon America, the Beautiful. While the Nation as a whole has been engaged in fighting its enemies abroad, the South has moved ahead to clinch the victory which it never yielded in the Civil War. Twelve years of Mr. Roosevelt gave the South the opportunity to take over control of the United States. The South has fought, not only for the rights of the States which it represents, but also for the domination of all the other States. It has now won to this position of dominaiton. Its victory is discerned most clearly in its successful opposition to matters which concern the welfare of Negroes, but its power does not stop there. The South has captured Washington.

* * * 7-7-45

The North, the East, the Middlewest and the Farwest, must now go to the Southerners in the saddle in Washington for what they want. These Southerners dominate the most powerful committees in the Congress. Recently, the President of the United States asked for favorable consideration of the Fair Employment Practices Committee Bill. Six Southerners on the rules committee blocked consideration, denied the House of Representatives a chance to vote on it. These six throttled democracy in the House. Other Americans, white Americans and black Americans, must treat with Bilbo and Eastland of Mississippi, with George and Russell of Georgia, with Ellender and Overton of Louisiana, with the Rankins, the Ramspecks, the Gibsons, none of whom represent the people. Southern Senators and Representatives came from districts where the people, white and black, are effectually disfranchised.

But an even worse spectre appears. These Southerners have controlled the Congress, the independent offices and bureaus. But within recent months, they have won new influence in the Cabinet and the White House. The only Easterners, or Northerners, left in the Cabinet, are Stimson, Republican and Forrestal and Morgenthau, Democrats. 7-7-45

The appointment of James E. Byrnes as Secretary of State could prove to be a calamity to the United States. Byrnes is the same kind of race-hating politician as Eastland. But Byrnes is now in a position where he could succeed to the Presidency of the United States. In other words, in a world where wars are being fought because of race, Byrnes, a white supremacist of the first rank, is placed where he may brew a devil's broth.

President Truman might be as righteous as Christ Himself, but he will never be able to relieve this Nation from the evil designs of the evil men who have come to power with him.

* * *

Negroes may feel that the worst hurt of this system is theirs. But it is not. The Nation as a whole suffers most.

* * *

Negroes have a simple responsibility to see that the present system, which means the present Administration, does not continue to prevail. The Nation must be rescued by rescuing it from the present administration. Negroes must look forward to doing their part in that job. That is the utmost they can do to reduce the power of the Eastlands, the Bilbos and others of their stripe.

Bury Race Issues In Mutual Respect

By THEODORE STANFORD, Courier War Correspondent

NICE, FRANCE—(Via Bomber Pouch)—The splendidly harmonious relationships which are the keynote here, is just another proof that democracy is the overall result whenever white and Negro enlisted men are given a chance to react naturally towards each other.

With my fingers crossed, I have been scurrying about this "jewel of the Riviera" in a futule effort to discover just one crestfallen Negro soldier who is not satisfied with the way the white folk have been treating him down here. If that Negro exists, he is very probably hiding in some secret and mysterious cellar, away from the soft sunlight, the waving palms, and the caressing breezes. I can't find him.

There have been some incidents. Yes. But our colored fighting men have been profoundly impressed by the prompt fashion with which some of their white fellow-vacationists have stepped in and have taken care of the situation.

FIRST HAND TESTIMONY

Don't take my word for it. Listen to a couple of stories told to me by Pfc. Oscar Roper of Atlanta, Ga.; T/4 Robert Curry of Savannah, Ga., and T/5 Howard Couch of Brooklyn, N. Y.

"We walked into a cafe," T/5 Couch said, "and found two white Wacs and two white soldiers lined up at the bar. We stopped at the bar, a few feet away from this group and ordered some drinks. One of the Wacs looked us over and made a loud remark about the proprietor letting 'n——rs' in the place."

"But," interjected T/4 Curry, before T/5 Couch could finish his story, "one of the white soldiers turned to that white Wac and said 'Miss, we don't use that kind of language down here at Nice.'"

"And that," added Pfc. Roper, "ended the whole thing right there."

ANOTHER INCIDENT

"Another time," T/5 Couch began, "we were in a cafe. There were a lot of white and colored soldiers in the place. A white soldier, who was pretty drunk, began to pick on one of the colored soldiers. He started calling the colored soldier nasty names, and things like that."

"But," interjected T/4 Curry, before T/5 Couch could get on with his story," a big white American paratrooper walked over to that drunken white soldier and said, 'if you don't shut your dirty mouth, I'm going to take my fist and flatten you out on the floor.'"

"And that," concluded Pfc. Roper, "ended the whole thing right there." 7-7-45

'Cruel statement'

Recently I read an article concerning Sen. J. O. Eastland's charge that our Negro troops are "an utter and abysmal failure." Eastland claimed that several generals had given him this information, but, he did not mention their names. Since the beginning of the war, I have heard and read many commendable things about our Negro troops and being accustomed to reading "profound" statments by our politicians, I put the whole thing out of my mind.

A few hours later we received word that the son of one of our colored workers had been killed on Okinawa. This brought back to my mind the cruel and seemingly unnecessary statement made about the Negro troops. If this boy had been "an utter and abysmal failure," he was still good enough to die for his country.

Could this representative of the people face the dead boy's mother, father, wife and baby and tell them that he was "an utter and abysmal failure." Perhaps Sen. Eastland would say that his remarks weren't directed at any particular individual. But in answer to this, I can say that this boy hasn't been the only Negro soldier or sailor to die in the service of his country. Perhaps one of them stopped a bullet that was meant for one of my loved ones. So, you see, I can't think of our Negro troops as being "an utter and abysmal failure."

Negro Troops OK'd

Washington Post

MEMBERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONGRESSIONAL delegation met last week to welcome one of their State's war heroes—Lieut. Van T. Barfoot of Carthage, Miss., who has been awarded the Medal of Honor, the Sliver Star, the Bronze Star and the Purple Heart. A soft-spoken lad who had never been out of Mississippi before entering the Army, Lieutenant Barfoot fought with distinction in Africa, Sicily and Italy.

Jan. 1945

A little embarrassed at being surrounded by Congressmen, Barfoot told some of his experiences in combat and tried to answer questions. One of them finally came from Senator Theodore (The Man) Bilbo on his favorite subject.

D.C.

"Lieutenant," Bilbo asked, "did you have much trouble with Negroes over there?"

Bilbo was set back on his heels when the lieutenant drawled:

"Mr. Senator, I found out after I did some fightin' in this war the colored boys fight just as good as the white boys. I have changed my ideas a lot about colored people since I got into this war, and so have a lot of other boys from the South. We've found the colored boys all right."

Then Lieutenant Barfoot quietly volunteered this information:

"Coming up to Washington on the train I went into the diner and found it full. The waiter told me I'd have to wait, but I could see, behind a little curtain, a colored Army captain sitting at a table by himself. I said, 'What's wrong with that table?' The steward told me he didn't think I'd want to sit with a colored man and I said:

"'Why not? I've fought with colored men—why shouldn't I eat with 'em.' I sat with that colored captain and we had a fine chat."

Jan. 1945

Senator Bilbo then launched into a long peroration about what a great friend of the Negro race he is, telling among other things, how he proposed transplanting American Negroes to Liberia.

Not present at the Mississippi meeting was Congressman John Rankin.

Assign 2029th For Occupation Chores In Germany's Reich

N.Y. American

N.Y.N.Y.

WITH THE AIR SERVICE COMMAND IN ITALY: The 2029th Quartermaster Trucking Company, a veteran organization with almost two years overseas service in North Africa and Italy, with both the 12th and 15th Air Forces, has been assigned to the Army of Occupation in Germany.

Commanded by Captain Andrew F. Suder, Philadelphia, the organization was activated at Hensley Field, Dallas, Texas, October 1942, and started its overseas service August 1943. Arriving in Bizerte, North Africa, the unit was assigned to the 12th Air Force and hauled thousands of tons of bombs, ammunition and gasoline for the initial air assaults on the Italian mainland.

9-1-45

The "Harlem Tigers" as the unit is better known, arrived in Italy at the Manda Air Base, the first week of July, 1944, to service the 332nd Fighter Group, the only All-Negro Fighter Group in the Army Air Force.

Now assigned to the Air Force's Army of Occupation in Germany, the "Harlem Tigers" will be able to see for themselves the devastation caused by the heavies of the XV Air Force and realize the part they played in the final defeat of the German armies.

Two members of the "Harlem Tigers" who will accompany the unit to Germany include, T/4 Michel Alfred, New York City, and S/Sgt. George Rhett, New Rochelle. T-4 Alfred, son of the late Mrs. [illegible] St., New York City, is a mechanic. Entering the service July 1942, he is a veteran of 23 months overseas service. Sgt. Rhet, son of Mr. [illegible] and husband of the former Willa Mae Dixon, both of 40 [illegible] chelle, is the supply sergeant with his unit. Entering the service December 1942, he is a veteran of 18 months' overseas service.

Wounded Vet Pickets Bilbo

Edward Bykowski, a wounded Naval veteran from Woodside, Queens, is spending his mustering-out pay on a one-man campaign to shame Sen. Theodore G. Bilbo (D., Miss.) for inciting to race hate and prejudice.

He turned up yesterday outside the Senate Office Building with a sandwich board which displayed replicas of his service ribbons, the Purple Heart he got for shrapnel wounds in the Battle of Savo Bay, and the legend: "Was it all in vain? Please tell me, Bilbo."

"Bilbo has abrogated everything that veterans have shed blood for and died for," said Bykowski. "He continues to incite the minds and hearts of Americans to hate and prejudice. I am trying to help finish the battle for my buddies who went down on my ship."

Capitol guards interrupted Bykowski's picketing, explaining that such activity was forbidden on Capitol grounds without permission of the Speaker of the House or the President of the Senate. A Bilbo secretary interrupted, calling from a window and inviting Bykowski to come up.

"We had a nice little visit," she reported afterwards. "He was a very nice-looking boy and very courteous. Of course, we were, too. He was assured he could see the Senator when he returned."

New York friends of Bykowski said he decided on action after Bilbo sent one of his hate letters to an Italian woman in Brooklyn, addressing her as "My Dear Dago." He is an American of Polish ancestry and a Catholic. In the Savo Bay engagement, he was a pharmacist's mate aboard the cruiser Vincennes, which was sunk.

"I am going to stay here until I see Billo," Bykowski said at his hotel.

Catholic War Vet Pickets Bilbo; Tells of Negro, Jewish Heroes

Daily Worker - New York, N.Y.

Daily Worker Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27.—Edward Bykowski, 6-foot, 4 inch Pacific war veteran picketed the Capitol building against Sen. Theodore Bilbo, (D-Miss) chief race hate propagandist in Congress for an hour today until shifted away by Capitol police. He told the Daily Worker he had received two telephone threats to get out of town since. But he's staying.

The veteran carried a large sign, with a bleeding, Purple Heart, and the slogan: "Was this in vain, tell it to me, Bilbo, I fought for democracy."

Bykowski, a Polish Catholic, told a moving story of two heroes, one Negro, one Jewish, on the heavy cruiser Vincennes, which was torpedoed in the Solomons.

The colored hero was a young lad whom everyone called "Sunshine."

"Sunshine" said the veteran "kept passing the ammunition with his right arm after the Japanese blew off his left. That's a Negro for you. Then there was Danny Boy. He died in my arms, saying: 'Keep on fighting boys.' His hand opened up. He had been clutching the six-point Star of David. That's a Jew for you."

8-28-45

Bykowski is determined to see Bilbo himself. One of Bilbo's girl secretaries promised him that he would do so as soon as the senator comes in. Bykowski is waiting at the Raleigh Hotel to tell him what he thinks about his "Dear Dago," and anti-Negro letters.

Poll Shows Southern Editors Oppose Bilbo-Rankin Race Slurs

Southern editors are overwhelmingly opposed to the recent expressions of racial prejudice in Congress and feel such statements do not represent the true feeling of the South, the Southern Conference for Human Welfare disclosed in revealing the results of a poll of 251 white newspaper editors in 13 Southern states.

SEN. BILBO

In releasing the results of the survey, Dr. Clark Foreman, president of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, at its New York headquarters said that the poll would be one of the most forceful arguments when proponents of a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee and anti-polltax legislation press for congressional action after Congress reconvenes.

The poll centering around the statement of Sen. James Eastland (D-Miss) that "the Negro soldier was an utter and abysmal failure in combat in Europe. He has disgraced the flag of his country" revealed that 75½ percent of Southern editors believe this view did not reflect the "prevailing opinion of Southern people." Only 10 percent voted yes on this question, 14½ percent undecided. Eighty-three percent scored Sen. Eastland's statement as "a hazard to the nation's war effort." Only 5 percent supported his views.

OPPOSE BILBO

According to Dr. Foreman the poll also indicated the growing opposition of Southern publications to the anti-Negro, anti-Jewish, anti-Catholic statements made by Senators Bilbo and Eastland during the congressional debate on extending wartime FEPC. Dr. Foreman said, "In my opinion this is one of the most encouraging signs that the people of the South are becoming increasingly aware of the dangerous and unfounded sentiments of such men as Senators Eastland and Bilbo, and Congressman John Rankin. For the first time we have documentary evidence that these demagogues belong to a dead order, and represent no one but themselves, and a handful of reactionaries who feed on their patronage."

The Southern Conference, whose national office is in Nashville, Tenn., supported their contention by reminding that less than 18 percent of the adult population of Mississippi voted in the last Presidential election and that Rep. Rankin was elected by only 6 percent of the votes of his district.

White Reporter Comments On Quieted Gripes

By JIM HEWLETT

BOSTON —(ANP)— Rudolph Elite Jr., white, Boston Herald's Pacific correspondent, commenting on gripes he hadn't heard mentioned much, has this to say concerning the treatment of colored soldiers and sailors:

"So far as I could make out, the army and navy have a specific policy for making it difficult for our colored soldiers and sailors. I don't know how things were in Europe although like everyone else I heard of the 92nd division, but in the Pacific they were saddening. Colored troops never got a decent break. They were used everywhere as engineer battalions, meaning they were used as laborers, stevedores, DUKW drivers or mess boys. They were always segregated and they drew so many really nasty assignments it couldn't possibly have been coincidence.

11-16-45

"A few were used as combat troops. An anti-aircraft battalion saw a good deal of action on Kerama Retto in the Okinawa group, and acquitted itself bravely and well and other troops saw action in the Pacific though only the smallest possible percentage of the actual number of colored troops in the army. This is not to say anybody who had the slightest idea of what he was doing would clamor for the privilege of dying on the battlefield, but the fact remains there is a question of honor, of manhood involved, and the Negroes bitterly resented the fact they were not considered worthy of combat assignment.

ASSIGNMENTS DRAWN

"In the navy colored sailors were used either as mess boys—steward's mates' is the euphemism—or as stevedores specializing in the handling of ammunition. It isn't that they wanted to handle explosives any more than any one else, but they invariably did draw that assignment. As mess boys they waited on the officers, made up their bunks, cleaned their staterooms, and served coffee in the wardroom at all hours of day or night. They lived by themselves in an out-of-the-way compartment somewhere, and on many ships were limited to special section of the deck.

"On one APA I traveled on the skipper actually ordered a colored steward off the forward deck by shouting "Get that blackbird off that deck!" through the bullhorn.

However, when general quarters sounded these same colored boys manned guns like everyone else. They could die on the 'restricted' parts of the deck, but they couldn't live on them."

Washington Officials Decline Comment On Carrier Commander's Undemocratic Attitude Until Investigation Is Made

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — As an avalanche of protests rolled in, the Navy Department declined last Wednesday to comment on the action of the commander of the aircraft carrier Croatan in barring 123 colored combat soldiers from sailing aboard the vessel.

As the result of the action of Captain Charles D. Griffin, of Virginia Beach, Va., the men were forced to sail from Le Havre on a much slower vessel.

In a reply to a request to comment on reports concerning the conduct of Captain Griffin, the Navy issued the following statement:

Navy Issues Statement

"Until full facts are ascertained the Navy Department cannot comment on this story. Navy policy, however, is one of no segregation. Ships of the 'Magic Carpet' including carriers have brought home Negro and white officers and Negro and white enlisted men, quartered together and messed together.

"This is in line with the Navy's policy of non-discrimination under which Negroes are currently trained and assigned as other personnel without reference to race. Negro officers and enlisted men are serving aboard Navy ships in mixed crews.

"The story is being investigated and appropriate action will be taken."

123 Vets to Sail Dec. 4

The 123 veterans, members of quartermaster truck unit, were scheduled to sail for the United States on the Croatan from Le Havre on December 4. But, over protests of Army officers, their names, were stricken from the sailing list at the insistence of Navy officers, who argued that the Navy's policy was not to mix the races and pointed out that the facilities on the aircraft carrier could not permit segregation inasmuch as all troops would have to be quartered in the ship's hangar.

Representative Adam C. Powell, Democrat, of New York, in telegrams to President Truman and Secretary of the Navy James Forrestal, demanded an investigation of the case.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People telegraphed Secretary Forrestal that it wished "to lodge its protest against such treatment of Negro personnel by officers of the Navy and urgently requested proper disciplinary action be taken against officers of the USS Croatan immediately for this unAmerican action on their part."

Army officers who bowed after vigorous protests to the Navy said they refused to remove six high point colored casuals who were already on board the ship when the Navy raised its protest.

They added that difficulties over redeployment of colored veterans began as soon as naval vessels were pressed into service as troop transports.

Colonel Conrad H. Pederson, of Hoboken, N. J., director of the movement for the port of Le Havre, was quoted as saying he would ask the Headquarters of the U. S. forces in Europe for clarification on what to do if a similar case arose.

The U. S. S. Croatan, one of the first aircraft carrier to enter the port of Le Harve under the accelerated "Magic Carpet" program to get troops home in a hurry is only one of such carriers performing this duty.

"Climbs Rapidly

Captain Griffin, commander of the Croatan, is a graduate of the Naval Academy at Annapolis in June, 1927, and was on duty as a lieutenant at Anacostia near Washington when the Japs struck at Pearl Harbor.

Climbing rapidly, in July, 1942, he was made commander of a Replacement Group which operated with both Atlantic and Pacific fleets and on Sept 1 of that year was promoted to commander.

Appointed to duty as Commander in Chief of U. S. Fleet in Washington in April, 1944, the Annapolis graduate held that post until he was made captain on Nov. 10, last, and ordered to sea as commanding officer on the Croatan.

Capt. Clay and Lt. Brooks Civilians Now, Sentenced Abroad

12-22-45

By John "Rover" Jordan

WASHINGTON — A whim of the Gods of War faded away in the sobriety of post-war reasoning last week when former Captain Leroy A. Clay and former Lt. Roland R. Brooks, erstwhile officers of the 92nd Infantry Division, who were given dishonorable discharges and sentenced to 50 years at hard labor after Army trials in Italy, were permitted to reenlist in the Regular Army and then were given honorable discharges.

Both men are now civilians again, with the memories of battlefields and martial strife behind them, like bad dreams. The pardons came for Clay and Brooks after petitions were filed in their behalf with the Secretary of War by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Norfolk, Va.

DIVISION ATTACK

The courtmartial charges against the former 92nd Division captain grew out of his activities last February when the Buffaloes were locked in a hectic battle with enemy troops that were fighting from scientifically prepared defenses of the Gothic Line along Italy's west coast.

When the Buffalo Division, assisted by the old 366th Infantry Regiment, made an all-out attack on German positions in the Apennine mountains and along the thin, marshy coastal strip, every officer, white and colored, and every enlisted man had a job to do. And many of them died at their duties.

CLAY ON DUTY

When the colored troops, with their mixed white and colored officers, began the attack on the morning of Feb. 8, Captain Clay, then serving as assistant to G-3 (Operations), was on duty at division headquarters (advanced).

The battle was fierce and costly on the first day. On the second day the position of our troops along the flat coastal strip, between the mountains and the Ligurian Sea, was precarious. Troops to the right had failed to capture the mountain positions and enemy guns on those mountains were dealing havoc on our troops that were caught in three-way fire along the coastal strip.

TIDE OF BATTLE

Major General E. M. Almond, division commander, clung to his determined, up-and-at-em attitude but those of us who knew him could tell that the battle was not going well. Some of the division's best officers had been killed or wounded and men were proving to be expendable.

12-22-45

Another G-3 captain—a white officer—had been killed in his duties as liaison officer between headquarters and the embattled task force which had crossed the Cinquale Canal along the coast.

CLAY TO FRONT

On the night of Feb. 9 Captain Clay was ordered to a point just south of the Cinquale Canal and there to take charge of a group of stragglers, organize them and send them back into the battle line.

War correspondents working with the 92nd for this attack had set up "press headquarters" in a building at Via Reggio, just south of the battle line. On his way up to the Cinquale that night Capt. Clay stopped in and told us of his assignment. He was bearded and weary. Like many other officers, he had not slept in two nights.

CORRESPONDENTS HELP

Seeking to help him in his difficult task of organizing the stragglers—men who had quit the battle—and to send them inspired anew into the fight, the correspondents provided Capt. Clay with copies of colored newspapers. The captain also took along an enlarged picture which had been snapped on the preceding day by the Journal and Guide correspondent. The picture showed soldiers crossing the bloody Cinquale under enemy fire.

INSPIRE SOLDIERS

The purpose of these papers and pictures, Capt. Clay explained, was to serve in his effort to convince the lagging soldiers that they were not fighting in vain—that the eyes of the people back home were on them.

Visiting the front line positions next day, this correspondent learned that Capt. Clay had been successful in organizing his "straggler company."

The correspondent was also informed that Capt. Clay had received another order from headquarters that night, detailing him to proceed across the Cinquale Canal, then under heaviest enemy fire, and to find out what supplies were needed and what the general situation was in the battered task force just to the north of the canal. He was to contact the commanding officer of this attacking unit for the information.

TROOPS WITHDRAWN

After our troops, beaten and weary, were withdrawn from the Cinquale on the night of the third day of the attack, we learned that Capt. Clay had been questioned by headquarters in connection with his activities after being ordered to contact troops across the Cinquale on the fateful night of Feb. 9.

Later Capt. Clay told this correspondent that he made an effort to get across the canal that night. He called for a tank to carry him across the exposed area, but the tank commander, observing that he had already lost about 22 tanks in the battle, refused to send other tanks across. Capt. Clay said that he then sent a message to the task force commander and obtained the desired information.

ANOTHER ATTITUDE

It was stated, however, that headquarters felt that Capt. Clay should have proceeded to cross the Cinquale "as ordered" despite the fact that tank transportation was not available.

Several days after the attack, Capt. Clay was transferred from division headquarters to the 371st Regiment and ordered to command a rifle company. Capt. Clay held that he was trained for staff work and that it had been years since he had worked with combat troops in the field.

TO RIFLE COMPANY

Capt. Clay was ordered to report immediately to the commander of the regiment. However, Capt. Clay stated that he had been informed by the regi-

They'll Be Different After They Return

3-6-45

Those boys of ours who are living, fighting, experiencing in so many strange and distant parts of the world will be coming home to us, someday. But the ones who return won't be the same boys who went away. Or, perhaps, it would be better to say they will be the same boys, but with changes.

There are some twelve million of them, or more, who are undergoing that strange and wrenching experience of life, for months and years, as units in a vast organization of uniformed men, disciplined and subject to laws and ordinances different from those they knew in civilian life.

They have become, to some degree, numbers instead of carefree individuals, numbers corresponding to the numbers on the dog tags hung around their necks. Otherwise, they are but repetitions of the same pattern, the same pattern of clothing, of equipment, of training, or way of life, of manner of thinking.

Strange Contacts

They have learned that the United States is but a small segment of the world. They have lived among people of other nations, of other races, and they have found those people interesting, in many cases kind and good. They have learned that a thing or a custom is not necessarily the best just because it is American. They have found that in some of the details of living we could, to our advantage, copy some of the customs of other lands.

They have found, though, that, all things considered, the manner of life we know in the United States is preferable to any other, on the whole. They have learned how blessed they were to be born Americans, to live in this country, learned it by absence and by the pangs of homesickness.

3-6-45

Their ways of thought must be changed. A boy who had lived all his young years on some Tennessee farm, thinking of the strange state, Georgia, beyond the mountains, as a "foreign" country, will have a vast changed conception of the world when he returns from living, for years, in Australia and on tropic islands of the Pacific. The boy who knew only the streets of Brooklyn will be immeasurably broadened in his ideas after basic training in an Arizona camp, advanced training at a Florida base, and social contacts with the British people near the base from which, periodically, he roars out in a B-29 over the wide expanse of Europe.

Better Perspective

These men of ours—they'll be older than when they went away—will come back with a new wisdom deep in their eyes and with a new idealism for the America they hope to help create. For they will have been looking at us at home and at the things we do, from a perspective that gives them, in one sense, a clearer view and a better understanding.

There will be some things we have done which will win only their scorn and condemnation.

They will come back with a new and a deeper pride in their own country, but with the knowledge that neither it, nor its institutions, are perfect. But their pride as Americans will impel them to strive to contribute towards moving this land a little way nearer to the perfections of which we all dream.

They will be critical, yet appreciative. They will look on us with eyes that can weigh and compare and, while they rejoice over many things, they will not hesitate to seek change where they believe change to be good.

Long-Time Effect

The impact, upon American life, of twelve million young citizens, fresh from years of world travel, world observation and world contacts, will be felt for generations to come. Probably for all time.

It may well be that these young men, after they come home, will be the factor which will shape our manner of life for centuries to come.

And it is a good thing. For they will come home purged of that handicap of provincialism, filled with love of country but no longer tainted by the prejudice of ignorance which is so disastrous upon a community when it is the ruling emotion.

No future Georgia politician will be able to make stump campagn capital by calling Americans of neighboring states "furriners." Not with men who have learned to respect the folks they have met and known in so many distant lands.

The Editor Speaks

By Mildred de Bary

Oddly enough, Japanese propaganda notes left behind in bombed, conquered and deserted places on Okinawa, arrived in my office simultaneously with a copy of Lt. Gen. Eaker's statement to officers and men of the 447th Bombardment Group, a Negro outfit home from Europe, on its way to the Pacific.

And deplorably, the whole is simultaneous with the battle in Washington over Fair Employment Practice — its extension, or its death this week-end. But for the attitude of men like Lt. Gen. Eaker, and the Bureau of Public Relations, War Department, which publishes for the press reams and reams of copy on the accomplishments of the Negro outfits and the individual Negro soldier; but for the enlightened and just attitude of millions of Americans, the Japanese might have more of a point than they have in one of their poorly translated bits of propaganda.

It reads like this:

"Colored Soldiers!

For what are you fighting? Why do you stand and fight always at the front to be the shields against Japanese bullets? Why do the white soldiers serve only in the rear? The white officers and men are fighting at the sacrifice of you. What comes after the war upon you is not the glorious victory, but the everlasting discriminate treaty against the white. Require the relief of service at the front at once! Break down the discrimination against the white officers and men. Require the rear service! Don't be killed uselessly!"

Lt. (jg) Ted de Bary, U.S.N.R., mailed this bit along with the comment that as far as he knew none of the Negro troops on Okinawa were in the front line. And the former Leonia boy has been on that island since the original invasion.

At times I have quoted from the War Department releases on the Negro soldier, but the limitations of Leonia Life, chiefly to local subjects, has not permitted as much reprinting of these wonderful stories, as I would like. Lt. Gen. Eaker sums it up when he says in his address: "The fact of discouragement, doubt, and difficulty didn't stop them any more than did the Jerry aircraft or flak they encountered. They prassed on to the final and satisfactory accomplishment of the missions assigned them with a laudable singleness of purpose. They demonstrated the stuff from which champions are made. Anybody can coast along when the going is smooth. It takes heart and guts to push on when the way ahead is rough and rocky."

The way ahead, through the war problems, has had socological as well as military implications for the Negro. If the American soldier has been fighting to preserve his way of life, the Negro soldier has been fighting, still more intensely, to prove himself worthy all the way down the line, of full realization of democracy in the U.S.A.

"I watched their (Negro) assignments develop from routine but necessary coastal patrol missions to important heavy bomber close-escort misssions," Lt. Gen. Eaker says.

The Negro is fighting slowly, painfully on the field and at home; he is proving his worth.

Have all who believe in him measured up in expressing that belief to Congress?

What will this week-end bring forth? A setback, or a step forward?

Sokol served with the 56th Armored Infantry of the 12th Armored Division. He is at present convalescing at the Nichols General Hospital, Louisville, Ky., from wounds incurred in the French Alsace during the last phases of the Battle of the Bulge.

From Nichols General Hospital, Sokol sends us the following radio script, which created great interest in Ohio. He writes:

"Some people, including Communists, seem surprised that a GI was permitted to appear on a CPA radio program.

"That means that there is a lack of conviction that the cross-section of America is prepared NOW to accept fully the American Communists as an organic part of the American scene — provided they come to be recognized as the fighters for democracy and the people.

"Our Army has demonstrated that in the battles for freedom it is possible to dissolve political prejudices. The same can be done on the home front. And the time is now!"

A—The 56th Infantry Battalion of the 12th Armored Division.

Q—Where and when were you wounded?

A—I stopped a piece of Nazi shrapnel in January in the Alsace part of the Bulge Battle. After three months in Army hospitals in Europe, I was sent home for further hospitalization.

Q—Did you run into any politics on the front?

A—Our Army has united in its ranks men of all political faiths—Democrats, Republicans, Communists—all concerned with one purpose, the military defeat of the enemy. I can say from my experiences in the front lines, that all soldiers are judged, in turn, by what they do to further that purpose. Sometimes, I feel the folks here could use that same kind of unity—that regardless of political creed, the ideas of an individual or group should be weighed by their value to our country's welfare.

Pfc. JOE SOKOL

Q—Yes Joe, it would help a lot on the home front too. We know that licking Japan is a pretty hefty job. And we mean to tackle it with all we've got. That means full production—no strikes. Now, you must have read that organized labor is back of this program from the word "go." Labor leaders today are committed without reservations to keep the goods flowing and anyone in the ranks of labor who causes strikes is in for severe treatment. What do you think of that?

A—I'm sure that anything that'll end strikes will go over with Americans on the fighting front. Our Army in Europe told us all about the splendid production job which labor and management as a whole have been doing at home.

Still the fair picture our Army gave us was badly smeared by a tiny labor minority. Everytime soldiers heard of a strike, no matter how small, all labor got the blame. GI's in foxholes, undergoing the most miserable conditions conceivable, fighting for their very lives and always on speaking terms with death, naturally think of home as a distant ideal of beauty and perfection. Home becomes more than ever the thing for which we fight. I can easily recall how on Christmas Day in our freezing foxhole in Germany, my buddy and I warmed ourselves with talk and dreams of icecream sodas. Imagine how we felt then, when we heard of strikes. And how the whole labor movement got a black eye as a result. It's high time that labor took specific steps to prevent all strikes if it wants its top-notch work to be recognized by GI Joes.

Q—You must have been reading the Daily Worker. We know that many hundreds of thousands of our soldiers are Negroes. You must have had a few experiences and drawn some conclusions which would be of interest to our listeners.

A—Well, there's no such thing as a Jim Crow foxhole. When your life's at stake, Negro and white soldiers live and fight as one. Before we went into action, experienced officers told us that we could count on the Negro fighting man. It took only one day of action with the 614th Tank Destroyer Battalion to show us that that was true. You're heard of the 614th, haven't you Arnold. (I certainly have).

I saw the colored men take their tanks where they didn't have to. Sticking their necks out to German 88's in order to pave the way for us of the Infantry. Incidentally, this outfit has been commended for its outstanding heroism in a series of battles. I was in the hospital when our Army began to mix Negroes and whites in the same companies. All the wounded in the ward, many of them Southerners, were pleased. For it meant a lot of capable fighting manpowers getting up to the front in a hurry.

We learned of our need for unity because our lives depended on it. I really believe that the people back home would do well to realize that their lives, their jobs, their homes, their security, the future of our great country—also depend on a sober recognition of the need for Negroes and whites living and working together as full-fledged Americans.

Q—Speaking of unity, I imagine you know what an important job it is to get together the peace-loving nations of the world in unity for peace. Without detracting from the terrific task of bringing Japan's militarists to their knees, the problem continues in Europe of policing Germany and destroying the root of Prussian warmaking power. I'll bet you've thought a lot about the subject of world peace. We'd like to hear a GI's slant on this issue.

A—You'll find that soldiers who have been in the fight feel even more strongly than the civilians that the unity we've established in this war is the only way to peace. There's a strong bond among fighting men of all the United Nations. During the Battle of the Bulge we were taking it on the chin and things looked dark for a while. It was then that the Red Army opened the offensives which carried it across Poland. We actually danced and cheered when we got that news. In that coordinated action we could measure the role of real military unity. And from our own losses, we knew that Ivan was paying for these victories with plenty of blood. No doubt the Russians felt the same way when we crossed the Rhine. Our "Stars and Stripes" said again and again that the ties we had forged in common battles with the Russians could never again be severed.

We count on our country's leadership on the international road to peace—and in our civilian brothers standing by and helping our new Commander-in-Chief, President Truman, to make the objectives of The Frisco Conference a living reality.

Q—Joe—I'm sure you want to join me in urging that the people of Cleveland give full support to the Seventh War Loan Drive.

A—Yes—I think that everybody will recognize that this drive is of the greatest importance to speed up total and final victory.

For the record

ONE of the first questions I asked our war correspondent, James Wellard, on his return from Europe, concerned the statements Sen. James O. Eastland of Mississippi recently made in the U. S. Senate about Negro-American troops. I knew that Wellard, who covered the American advance from North Africa through Italy and France to Germany, would have an eyewitness report of the Negro fighters in our Army. And he did.

Wellard saw our Negro pilots in action in North Africa, flying planes then considered out of date and doing an excellent job with them. Later he saw Negro soldiers in the infantry, artillery, and quartermaster corps doing their full share on the Italian front.

He says they were "O. K." Many Negro-American soldiers were assigned to the quartermaster corps as truck drivers. They carried supplies to our front line soldiers and, as our successful campaigns testify, they didn't fail them.

ANOTHER large group of Negro-American soldiers was in chemical warfare units. They handled smoke screens along the front in France and Germany, Wellard reports.

In France, he saw one such group panic, but it soon was reformed and returned to its advance positions to finish the job.

Wellard also saw inexperienced white American soldiers panic in North Africa. But they returned to battle too, and eventually they won.

In Gen. Patton's Third Army, to which Wellard was attached during the battle for France, there was a tank group of Negro-Americans. Wellard is of the opinion that these men conducted themselves well, and he recalls hearing Patton compliment them for their behavior in battle.

"The Negro in the American Army," Wellard told me, "was exactly like all the GIs. He did the job he was told to do."

ANOTHER statement made by Sen. Eastland in the Senate—that French-Negro-Senegalese troops had raped 5,000 German girls in Stuttgart—was found to have "no basis in fact" by the U. S. Army.

The U. S. Sixth Army Group made an investigation of Eastland's charges.

As a result of this investigation, the Army now says, "All U. S. liaison officers with the French Army Corps and lower units which could have been in or near that city at any time, have submitted written reports that, to their knowledge and belief, incidents such as alleged did not take place."

And that's that—for the record.

SAD STATESMANSHIP

The Louisiana Weekly
New Orleans, La.

(N. O. Item, July 10)

WE HAVE regarded Senator Eastland as a man of more character and substance than his more renowned colleague. He should watch his step lest he become equally famous. For all publicity is not advertising.

His declaration that the Negro soldiers in Europe won't fight, won't work, are guilty of more than half the crimes in the Army, and have lowered American prestige all over the Continent, was based, he claimed, on information allegedly furnished by "American officers." But it was promptly denied with equal emphasis by American officers, giving their names, who are in the best position to know, including General Eisenhower himself.

The Mississippi statesman follows that by an intrinsically unlikely thriller to the effect that French-African troops locked 5000 German girls in a Stuttgart subway and raped them. This also, he said, was reported by Eisenhower's "American officers"—again unnamed. It is likewise denied with equal promptitude by our Sixth Army Headquarters in Paris, in these terms: 7-21-45

"All United States liaison officers with the French army corps, and with lower units, which could have been in or near that city at any time, have submitted written reports to this headquarters that, to their knowledge and belief, incidents such as alleged did not take place."

Bilbo's recent reversion in the Senate to characteristic indecencies for inciting racial and religious hates has not surprised anybody who knows "The Man." But they have again aroused disgust all over the country, which is not confined to The Man himself. This summary of one typical view of him comes from a comment by The Milwaukee Journal:

"Truly there is no worse influence in high life than Senator Bilbo. He is a disgrace to Juniper Grove, where he was born; to Mississippi, which he represents; and to the nation, of which, unfortunately, he is a citizen."

Mr. Eastland should take counsel with himself, unless he is courting a national reputation which reflects itself in such terms as those. Such repute is too high a price for a few votes that could be won by more respectable means than coon-shouting, on infirm and silly canards. Unless the junior senator takes himself in hand betimes, he is likely to fall a hopeless victim to the ancient aphorism, "Evil associations corrupt good manners." 7-21-45

Shadow Of Things To Come!

Memphis World

It was a black . . . not a shadowy . . . day in the United States Senate when Senator (?) Eastland of Mississippi . . . a Southern Democrat . . . made his infamous remarks concerning the Negro soldier.

Memphis Scimitar

For fear that too much publicity will be lent to the demagogue's remarks (a demagogue is a person who deliberately and consciously uses lies to make an impression), we won't repeat what Eastland said here. No doubt you already know how he made low-down and untruthful statements regarding the contribution of the Negro soldier in World War II. 7-13-45

But the significance of the Mississippi's remarks cannot be ignored. What he said is significant and important from several points of view so far as the Negro is concerned.

In the first place Eastland's remarks, designed to disparage and be-little the part Negro soldiers have played in this war, were part of a deliberate pattern. Even semi-illiterate Negroes have wondered why it is that so little praise and so little notice has been given to the contributions of American Negroes to the current war effort.

Many of them have correctly concluded that there is in existence a concerted plot on the part of a powerful minority of Fascist-mined white Americans, mostly Southerners, to play down the Negro's part in this global conflict in order to counteract any possible demand for better treatment and first class citizenship in the post-war world, based on the contributions Negroes have made on war-fronts, defense plants, and in war bond purchases, not to mention a myriad of other sacrifices and sufferings.

Eastland's remarks may be interpreted as the South's answer to the colored man's expectation of better 'breaks' in the world which will exist after the last shot is fired. As the spokesman for the hide-bound, reactionary, Bourbon-minded Southern Fascists of a day that should be forgotten, Eastland was serving notice on a war-weary world that there are still many persons in America who do not intend for things to be better for Negroes after this war.

Eastland spoke for those who, deep down in their hearts, believe Hitler was right. He subscribed to the Hitlerian belief that the bigger a lie one tells, the more widely it will be believed and the longer it will be believed.
